Mr. Riddell: I put the question at first. Is the Ontario government, along with Ontario Hydro, planning a project we in this Legislature or the citizens of Huron are not aware of? Is there some plan to establish a nuclear power plant in Bayfield in Huron county?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that the major undertaking Hydro has underway is Darlington. Bayfield is a delightful community, and I know the honourable member would like to see some growth take place, but to my knowledge it is not being contemplated. I don't know who wrote that letter, or to whom they wrote it, but to suggest there will be the same sort of growth pattern in that part of the great county of Huron that took place in other parts on the shores of Lake Huron, I think from my understanding would be totally inaccurate.

If the honourable member wants to convey that to the person who wrote the letter I think he is quite free to do so. If he wants to bring them in, as he did some others from Kincardine, to see the economic growth continue in that part of the province, we would be delighted to see them too.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, is the Premier in a position to confirm the energy statement made by his new minister on October 1, that the government is not contemplating any new nuclear generating facilities beyond Darlington in the next 15-year period?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't think I can put the time frame at 15 years, but my recollection is, and the chairman of the select committee is more familiar with the figures than I am, I don't think they are contemplating another facility beyond Darlington at this moment. In that Darlington is six to seven years away from completion, which brings us up to 1987 or 1990, then we only have a five-year period to bring us up to 15 years; but I am not really prepared to speculate at this moment in time.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Considering the Premier obviously does not really know the plans at this moment, since his answers are quite vague on this question, would the Premier undertake to make a statement to the House regarding the future growth plans of Ontario Hydro in a clear, concise manner, so we know exactly what is being planned?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the member for Halton-Burlington that he is on the Hydro select committee, he has been very close to it and he tells his constituents he is the energy expert of Ontario; he probably could make as clear and concise a statement as I could. It wouldn't be as accurate as any I might make, I doubt how clear it would be, and certainly if it is anything like the rest of the honourable member's observations it would never be concise. I thought I was very precise in my answer to his colleague from Huron-Middlesex. I don't know of any planned facility in Bayfield.

AUTO INDUSTRY LAYOFFS

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. The minister will no doubt be aware that in addition to the 2,000 people already unemployed on indefinite layoffs at Chrysler, there was a further announcement on Friday of an additional 800 to 1,000 employees who will be on indefinite layoff, along with several thousand other people on temporary layoffs. The minister will no doubt be aware that there are already 1,500 people on layoff at Ford Motor Company in Windsor, as well as many thousands from the parts industries in Windsor.

What is the minister now prepared to do for the people of Windsor, who are experiencing an unemployment rate of around 12 per cent for those who are on indefinite layoffs, and if one includes those on temporary we are talking about 17 or 18 per cent unemployment? What is the minister prepared to do, and is he prepared today to come out publicly and put pressure on the federal government to bring in the transitional assistance benefits for which the United Auto Workers have been asking?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The TAB program is one which does lie with the federal government, and ultimately the views of this government with regard to that program would obviously be expressed through the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), to whom the member may want to address a question on that count.

My responsibilities, of course, are in terms of the long-term stability of the automotive industry in Windsor and the rest of Ontario. I would be quite happy to talk about that here, as I did in estimates by way of pointing out if it wasn't for some of the efforts of this government in the last couple of years in that municipality we wouldn't be seeing the addition of 5,200 jobs, at least, coming on stream in the next couple of years because of the Ford plant. Our continuing efforts have also resulted, in part, in the General Motors expansion which is going on in that city. While we always find it quite easy to talk about the fact we haven't done as well under the auto pact as we might, the fact is we have two instances of companies, that is GM and Ford, putting great amounts of money into Windsor, which will make sure the short-term difficulties that are currently being experienced in Windsor—and they are short-term difficulties—do not become long-term difficulties in that community.

I think we should understand, as I believe the UAW does in Windsor, that the situation we are seeing now is not as severe in terms of percentage layoffs as is being experienced in the United States. That is quite remarkable in view of the fact our Canadian plants generally make larger, less fuel-efficient vehicles than are currently being made in the United States. Notwithstanding that, the layoffs here in percentage terms are not as severe as those being incurred in the United States.

All that having been said, I want to point out to the member that two of the Big Three have recently invested a lot of money in that community. The third is Chrysler, and we have talks going on there now. I have made it quite clear that as far as this government is concerned any assistance given to Chrysler, in any way whatsoever, will have to ensure long-term stability for current jobs and some new jobs in Windsor as well.

All in all, I think we have been spending a good deal of time on the problems in Windsor, in view of North American problems in terms of the sale of automobiles in this period of time.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: The minister talks about the 2,800 jobs at Ford: is he aware that Ford has laid off almost that number of employees at its existing plant and that we are expecting that its engine plant could very well be put out of production because it produces the wrong kinds of parts and the wrong kinds of engines? The government put $28 million into a new plant that will really not create new jobs, it will just save some of the jobs that are disappearing because of the poor planning and the way the auto pact is not working in this province.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Cooke: I have a short supplementary in addition to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Do you mean a supplementary to the supplementary?

Mr. Cooke: That's right. I would just like the minister to indicate today if he is still willing to look at a job-creation program for Windsor, as he said he was in a letter to me recently? Is he also willing to go public with the federal government or his Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) to get the TAB program in place before it is too late?

Mr. Speaker: You asked that in your original question.

Mr. Cooke: People are losing their homes now.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have a short response?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I should remind the member we understand the extent of the Ford layoffs. The member should be fair and acknowledge this government cannot control the North American demand for automobiles, no matter where they are made. The fall in the market has been marked and has been constant throughout North America, particularly for vehicles made in this country.

The fact is the market is causing the layoffs, not this government, not the American government and not the unions, none of those. The consumer is shifting his and her buying patterns and buying fewer of those vehicles. That is what is causing the problem in the member's community. I want to make it clear to him that of course we understand the extent of the Ford layoffs; and no, I will not apologize in any way whatsoever for the fact that Ford is laying off people in response to the market at the same time as we are creating new jobs. The fact is no matter which way the member wishes to slice it, if it weren't for this government there wouldn't be 5,200 new jobs going into Windsor in the next few years. Those jobs would be lost; they would not be replaced. I hope the member will tell the UAW, when he takes a copy of Hansard back to them to show them his alleged concern for their critical problems, that if we had adopted his party's policy we would see 2,600 net layoffs, but we wouldn't see 5,200 new jobs going back into that community solely and totally on account of this government.

Mr. Mancini: I have a supplementary for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Could the minister inform the House if he has had discussions with other industries outside of the automotive industry that may be planning to go to Windsor so that the industrial base of Windsor and Essex county wouldn't be so heavily dependent on the automotive industry? I give as a possible example the tomato paste industry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Mancini: Is that all the minister is going to say?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Mancini: Why doesn't the minister inform the House who he has met with and what—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Forgive me for saying yes, but we have done it. I know it's disappointing.

Mr. Mancini: It's not disappointing; we'd just like to know who the minister has talked to and what their response has been.

RENFREW COUNTY TASK FORCE ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Conway: A new question to the same minister: Having in hand the minister's long-awaited announcement about the appointment of a new chairman for the Renfrew County Task Force on Economic Development, and recognizing that much time has passed since that particular task force undertook serious and ongoing responsibilities to generate economic activities in my part of eastern Ontario, I am wondering whether or not the minister has called together the new chairman, Mr. Radford, with other members of that task force to make them aware of his own views and those of his government at present with respect to those immediate and intermediate priorities which he and this government see as viable for that particular task force and its responsibilities?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will be meeting in the next couple of weeks.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Can the minister, in his supplementary answer, indicate to this House what his views are at this point in time about the kinds of priorities he sees as being the immediate possibility with respect to economic development in that particular county? Can he explain to me and other members of this House, why in his announcements he indicated to the people of Renfrew county that of course their development strategy will take many years to be fully implemented since provincial restraint will not allow for the kind of financial resources we believe necessary to get the job done? Can he give this House and the people of Renfrew county—

Mr. Speaker: The question has really been asked.

Mr. Conway: —an assurance that we will not suffer unduly by virtue of his restraints?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer to the second question is yes, I can give that unequivocal assurance. That is not the tenor, the drift, the tone, insinuation or implication in the press release we issued. To be fair about it, I think the honourable member knows that isn't the message that was in that press release.

Mr. Radford will be coming in to discuss with us in a general way the kinds of assistance we wish to make available; the extent to which government programs will be tilted in terms of assisting areas such as Renfrew. Indeed, government programs traditionally have been and will continue to be tilted in favour of helping communities such as those in the Ottawa Valley, be they in the tourism sector, that is Timbertown, or in the industrial sector, for example the Westinghouse situation, which I know the honourable member supported even though it was an EDF grant, I know he supported it because it was so important to the Ottawa Valley area.

We will be discussing those kinds of things with Mr. Radford. I want to say that Mr. Radford, as the member knows, has been with the ministry for many years and is well aware of a lot of the programs we have under way and a lot of our strategies. What I don't want to do is prejudge the outcome of his work, because our strategy is to get local input to decide which kinds of industries are most appropriate for each and every community, which kind will most easily fit into the social and economic climate of each country, which community and which work force can accept which kind of industry, and then operate from that very sensible and measured base. That is what it is all about; I think the member would agree that's a sensible way to approach it.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege. On November 29 the Minister of Correctional Services, in response to a question from the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), indicated in so far as the question of problem prisoners being released on an open door policy: "That is not the case, that is just not happening. If it is I would ensure it would stop immediately, but I give the member the assurance it is not happening and that it is not the case."

I have just been informed that a significant number of people were released from the Elgin-Middlesex Detention Centre. I ask, in light of that information being passed on, if in fact our privileges were not abused by the answer given by the minister last Thursday?

Mr. Speaker: The minister is not here.
There is one minute left in question period.

ALGOMA CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. In view of the fact that the apparent inability of the Algoma Children's Aid Society to fulfil its obligations under the Child Welfare Act has prompted the minister to admit publicly that he cannot guarantee that children there are not at risk; and the foster parents association of Ontario to write him stating that case management appears minimal or non-existent, indeed that children in need are being placed in observation and detention homes normally used for cases of child delinquency; is the minister prepared to exercise his power under section 17 of the act to dissolve the children's aid society's board of directors, taking direct control to negotiate a resolution of the current labour dispute?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Dealing with the first part of the preamble to the question, I believe I recall quite vividly the discussion which might have led to the quote to which the honourable member referred. I did not specifically refer to the situation in Algoma, but I did say to the newspaper reporter from Sault Ste. Marie at that time that at no time could I absolutely guarantee, whether a children's aid society was fully staffed or suffering from a withdrawal of service as a result of a labour dispute, that no child would be at risk. I did assure that person, however, that we were doing everything, in co-operation with the society, to try to ensure that the degree of risk to which any child might be subjected would be minimized during this period.

The answer to the second part, the real question—am I prepared to exercise the authority under the act and dissolve the board and negotiate directly?—is no.

PETITION WASTE SOLVENTS STORAGE

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition, addressed to this assembly and signed by 3,503 citizens of the city of Welland. It reads as follows.

“We, the undersigned, beg leave to respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario as follows: We strongly object to permission being given by the Minister of the Environment to use the oil tank located adjacent to the old Welland Canal, south of Lincoln Street in the city of Welland, as a storage and transfer station for waste solvents.”

Although the company has now stated it will not proceed due to public opposition, until the permit is surrendered there is no guarantee that it will not proceed.

REPORT STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's second report on agencies, boards and commissions and moved its adoption.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, if I might say a few words on this report. It is the second report on agencies, boards and commissions, examination of which has been carried on by the committee. It looks at some six specific agencies of the government and deals in general terms with recommendations put forward by the committee in last year's report. We would hope the House would now entertain some debate on that.

On motion by Mr. Breaugh, the debate was adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL TOWN OF COBOURG ACT

Mr. Rowe moved first reading of Bill Pr33, An Act respecting the Town of Cobourg.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I wish to table the answer to question 357 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 5090.)

[3:15]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply:

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF TREASURY AND ECONOMICS

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I believe, Mr. Treasurer, that when we adjourned the consideration of the estimates, you were on your feet.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I was. While I had many more words of wisdom to add to the comments on Friday, I would now like simply to proceed with the first vote and start taking the comments from the opposition, as agreed.

Mr. Peterson: In view of the fact there were no words of wisdom on Friday that I personally recall, or that any others among the great horde of observers who were in this House at the time heard, I would just like to question the Treasurer on that. Further, I also was under the impression the votes would be left to the end, am I not correct?

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are quite correct. I think what the chairman asked the other day is that we consider the first vote and item, that we discuss anything of concern under that vote and item until such time as we must deal with the stacked votes. In other words, for the record, we are on the first vote and item but the discussion, as you agreed, was to be on any part of any vote or item.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That is pretty well what I said, but also I wanted to point out that we do have rules. The Treasurer and the two financial critics on their own are not in a position to change those rules. The rules do call for us to make progress and to allow other people to speak on these votes.

What I did say is that under main office you can pretty well speak on any vote, but if there are any other members wanting to speak I don't want to limit their right to do so on any matter they wish to raise under main office. As long as that is understood I think we can proceed.

We will deal with vote 901, item 1, which is main office. Anyone having any questions of the Treasurer in regard to the operation of the main office is now free to put those questions.

On vote 901, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. Peterson: While my friend from Nickel Belt is finding his papers and trying to think of something semi-intelligent to say, let me just ask a couple of questions; again I am taking some latitude here.

Could you tell me the status of the Ontario Economic Council? I am not sure if the economic council was a creation of the former Treasurer or not. Certainly he had expressed publicly, not only while he was Treasurer but also after the fact, that he had some very serious reservations about the role of the economic council, even though he appointed one of his very close personal advisers to be chairman. I believe Tom Kierans was appointed by the former Treasurer, was he not?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No.

Mr. Peterson: Then I stand corrected on that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: As I recall, Mr. Reuber was chairman in name when I became Treasurer, but he had given notice that he was going to the Bank of Montreal. I recall one of my first visits was from Mr. Douglas Gibson, a long-standing member of the economic council, who asked me not to leave it in limbo too long. I am guessing, but somewhere around December, maybe even later, of last year, Mr. Kierans was appointed on an acting, part-time basis to be chairman of the council. I am not quite sure of the date, but it followed my appointment as Treasurer, if my recollection is correct, and it was extended later. My deputy confirms that.

Mr. Peterson: I think you are correct and I am incorrect. I apologize on that.

He was appointed acting director. Is he still acting director, or what is his status? What are his obligations and what is he getting paid?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am going by recollection and will have to check, but the first was six months and then I believe he was appointed for a year at the expiration of the first six months. He has been spending as much time as any director has spent, I am told, working hard at the definition of role and the management of the economic council.

May I suggest, since I have shared some of the concerns the previous Treasurer had, that I sincerely would appreciate comments setting out the member's point of view right now as to his perception of the role of this economic council. The budget for it is in the range of $1 million to $1.1 million a year. It is a fair amount of the discretionary moneys we have available. I would be very curious to know whether the member thinks it's worth that as it is presently constructed and functioning, or whether it needs redesign or in his opinion needs to be done away with.

Mr. Peterson: There are a few specific questions I'd like to get out of the way before I do that. What are the director's responsibilities as the minister sees them? What kind of liaison does the minister have with him as the director? How much time does he put into it and what does the government pay him?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I missed the last point?

Mr. Peterson: How much is he paid?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would have to double-check the figure he's paid. It's $2,000 a month, I'm told.

Mr. Peterson: How many days a week does he work?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't answer that question. I did see a letter from him proposing a reduction in his salary for this coming fiscal year from $2,000 a month to $1,000.

Mr. Peterson: What have you done with that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I happen to be reviewing all my personnel spending for next year. Mostly certainly a suggestion like that, let me say, is unique; I haven't had many people offering to take a cut in salary lately. By the way, his appointment expires on December 19.

I know there are a number of other board members whose terms are up shortly. The most recent correspondence from the chairman outlined the names of those whose terms were up and requested we consider their re-appointment and/or replacement, depending upon the person's own point of view.

The request the chairman made was to reshuffle the $12,000 from his own personal salary to members who would be taking on greater loads within the economic council so that he could more fairly give them duties.

Mr. Peterson: I understand the other members are not paid; only the chairman is paid, plus two or three staff members.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Mr. Peterson: By and large that's a conglomeration, with a couple of notable exceptions, of Tory hacks from across the province.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are a couple of notable exceptions.

Mr. Peterson: Cliff Pilkey.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was going to say Mr. Pilkey at least should be identified for the sake of the record, lest he suddenly have a heart attack.

Mr. Peterson: He knows who is buying lunch too, though. He's fairly sophisticated that way.

Let me talk a little bit about it. I was aware when Mr. Kierans was appointed—I happen to know Mr. Kierans and I must say at the outset I have an extremely high regard for the man. He has been one of the major players on Bay Street. He's worked in two or three brokerage firms, always in key roles. As you know, he has changed brokerage firms this last year and is with McLeod's in a very important role. I don't question his competence at all.

I think the minister has a very serious problem on his hands though. I'm almost hesitant to say this because I do have a high regard for the guy, but he was, and it is public knowledge, a very close adviser to the former Treasurer and a very close friend. Unless the minister tells me differently, I am also aware of the fact he has come to a number of Progressive Conservative Party planning seminars; I'm not sure about ministry seminars.

He has had a major role, I gather from what I read in the press or as I recall at least, in advising on when the minister could balance the budget. There has been a great 1984 versus 1981 controversy. I don't know what the minister's relationship with him is, but he has been very close to the party. He's also extremely close to the federal Tories. He was pointed out in a Weekend magazine article recently as a major player, a man of influence with the federal Tories.

I think you really want to ask yourself whether this man should be paid $25,000 a year, $2,000 a month. Certainly when it came out in the press when he was originally appointed that he would be getting $25,000, I was curious, and no one to whom we talked would confirm or deny that at the time. I just accepted that at face value and you have virtually confirmed that.

He obviously does a lot of other things. Two thousand dollars a month may not sound like a lot of money for a full-time job for an obviously very competent human being, but when it comes down to one or two days a week that stacks up to be quite a bit of money, particularly in view of the fact he is very close to advising you.

It is something on which I would like to hear your views; whether in fact this is the appropriate way to run a so-called independent economic council. Granted these things have been bastardized at many levels of political functioning over the years. It's not as if the chairman of the Ontario Economic Council has always been represented as a true independent. I think Grant Reuber, when he was there, gave the appearance at least of being semi-independent. That, of course, was before he went to the Bank of Montreal, and now has become Deputy Minister of Finance.

The fundamental question is how you view their role and what they should be doing. Do you have any input into their research, what they are doing and how they go about it?

I am interested in hearing your view before I start into my own.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In terms of the kind of person you appoint and the remuneration for the job, first let us compare it with other people in the same kind of category. I am told in the first few months of his appointment he virtually worked full time at the position, particularly as he was looking at the projects and reorganizing it in his mind. I can't speak with much accuracy about the result of those actions, but if one looks at the rate of pay one pays for people of his calibre, like lawyers who are hired by select committees, lawyers who are hired to look into the police commission's functions, et cetera, I think you would agree one often sees the fees running between $500 and $1,000 a day.

If, in fact, a lawyer appointed to such a position is worth $750 a day of public money, or even private money because they charge the same regardless of who the client is, I would have to argue we're talking of a person who brings to the position skills of comparable value.

When one looks at the fact he is from the private sector—

Mr. Peterson: It's a little different role.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, I recognize that.

Mr. Peterson: He is an administrator here. He is not hired for professional expertise here, he is an administrator.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Hopefully, though, he is more than an administrator. He is like a director of research; while he is administrator he often is also the catalyst, the person who looks at the quality of the input of the researchers. A top director of research has to be an administrator, obviously, but also has to be knowledgeable in the skills of the people working under him.

This is where anyone who has ever had anything to do with Mr. Kierans would have to repeat the very words you used, whether one agrees with his philosophy or disagrees with his philosophy you would have to agree he is also a very bright, competent, hard-working, easy-to-understand person when he starts expressing his points of view. Those qualities are hard to come by in any field, and are perhaps more valued because of that. Persons who can clearly say what they think often win the battle simply because their opponents often can't say so clearly what they think. Therefore I would suggest we're getting value for the money.

As to the question of what input I have as the Treasurer, I think if one checks the statutes, the chairman is not really an appointment of the Treasurer but of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Outside of my being able to give some advice, unlike some appointments it is not, therefore, exclusively in the domain of the Treasurer.

The autonomy of the council has been almost complete, if not complete. In other words, no one comes to me and says, "We are intending to study such and such and so and so."

I can assure the member that when I was Minister of Health a report was issued on the health-care system by the Ontario Economic Council, that would be about the summer of 1975, and—

Mr. Laughren: There was another one this year.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, there was. I only point out that those reports are the views of the researchers. As with all researchers, one can argue whether they are right or wrong. If you like it, you think they're great; if you disagree with them, you think they're wrong. The fact is the council has that kind of autonomy.

I would suspect the choice of topics has been very much that of the chairman and the committee appointed. Within that appointed committee there is an executive committee of some type. The executive committee probably functions more frequently and looks into more detail at the kinds of research being contracted for. If one looks at the budget, I believe a great chunk of the budget is for research contracted with non-permanent staff or with members of the research community.

The alternative to turning to the business sector, and the one which I believe was followed in the first appointments to the board, has been to go to the academic side and look for people such as Mr. Reuber, who was at the University of Western Ontario when he was chosen. I sense that people who have been chosen for other jobs have come from that general area. Certainly that was the first area to which one thought we should look when Mr. Reuber left a year ago.

I think every so often it's a refreshing change to have somebody from the business community in that kind of job. Most often their duties prevent them from taking on these duties. In this case we've had great co-operation from Mr. Kierans. He has often, in the last few years, almost prejudiced his private interests to be able to offer advice to governments at both levels, as the member has pointed out.

Mr. Peterson: Do his strong, upfront party affiliations worry you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think I subscribe to the comments made by Bill Simon in his book, A Time for Truth, where he said one of the greatest mistakes governments can make is subsidizing the opponents of government rather than people who often agree with their points of view.

Mr. Peterson: You sound like Roch LaSalle. He's the new patronage minister for the federal government.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't mean it quite the way you interpret it.

Mr. Peterson: Then reinterpret it for me.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I see the role of a politician in government, apart from some administrative skill—which is probably not that great on the political side, people like my deputy have the real skills when it comes to administration—the real duty I have as a minister, whether it be in Health, Natural Resources or in Treasury, I see as being able to differentiate myself from the member for London Centre or the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) in terms of our basic beliefs, our philosophical, political and ideological differences. We've gone into this before.

Any time we apologize for our ideological beliefs we're letting the very system we're a part of down; therefore I unashamedly stand up and say, as I hope the member does, I'm a capitalist, I believe in the free enterprise system and I'm going to do my damndest to strengthen it whilst I'm around. It's been weakened greatly by listening to people from the benches the NDP have occupied over the years, until we have a very hybrid mix going these days; but that's our fault for being swayed too often by their logic. I do believe, however, that if it's my duty to see my kind of philosophy imposed upon a government, then I need advice that to some degree corresponds with my philosophy; therefore I don't see anything inconsistent in having people who are giving me advice, share some common belief with me, and they are most likely to be found within the party I associate with.

Mr. Peterson: Does the minister ask his staff to take out a membership in the Progressive Conservative Party?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Members of my staff are free to do what they want.

Mr. Peterson: Except they won't last in the job very long if they're not card carriers, is that what the minister is telling me? All these people are going to feel very insecure. They're going to start rushing out right now and taking memberships in the Liberal Party.

I won't enter into a philosophical debate about that at the moment. Let me just go back to Mr. Kierans and say that the Ontario Economic Council is supposed to be in a very special kind of situation. It is unique; it's not like your deputy or some of these other people who are functioning very close to you on a daily basis. He is supposed to come up with independent criticism, independent research on the state of the provincial economy and how to do various things. You run the risk of having him become an apologist for you if you carry the attitude you have just articulated into that job.

I won't run along with this any further, but I'm not terribly satisfied with the explanation you have given. Perhaps my friend has something.

Hon. F. S. Miller: May I ask your opinion of the function and role of the council and the necessity for it?

Mr. Peterson: Yes. Mr. McKeough made the statement once, I think publicly and if not, privately, that he had never seen anything of very much value out of the Ontario Economic Council. At least, and perhaps I'm misquoting, he asked, "What have they ever suggested that we followed?" I guess he found them a mite fanciful or a mite out in left field or something or other.

I think there is a role for the economic council. I'm not particularly happy with the membership. I don't want to be specific about it, but it's a sinecure for some people I happen to know who haven't demonstrated all that much except that they were card-carriers. We always go with the tokens, the Cliff Pilkeys of this world, and stick them on there so we can say, "Gee, we're a broadly-based group"; and Cliff happily accepts that kind of thing.

I would say that generally the membership is not representative of the kind of group it should be, in my judgement, for the kind of independent input into the thought-making process.

The question then becomes, "Okay, what is the role after that board has been established; what they should be doing?" I see a more activist role for that board than they have shown. I think they could be of more help, particularly in the committee process here. Let me give you an example.

The economic council should, as part of their contract, make some of their research and researchers available to select committees functioning on certain matters. Let's take the Hydro matter. They've done certain demographic studies that could have been helpful to the select committee investigating Hydro affairs. Obviously when you're working with demographers, as when working with actuaries or any other forecasters in any other area, there are a great number of subjective judgements being made. One hopes that the government, or the legislators, will get the benefit of advice from the best, throw it all into the pot and come up with their own conclusions. That is one area where, presumably, if it functions as an independent agency, the council could be of some help in the legislative process. I just pass that on to the minister. He may want to suggest to the council it is an area in which they could be of some use in the legislative process.

I think one of the things that worries me about the economic council is that so much of its effort is just shelved. There is some good research. I looked particularly at some of the research in the pension areas, and I am happy with it. I look at some of the conferences it has run, and I am only sorry they weren't better attended. The council has held some great regional conferences; and it holds a very interesting conference here once a year which I am very happy to attend. I learn a lot because world-class minds attend.

Sometimes one wonders what is the purpose of all this, because one has the same people attending all the time, the same interested people. But it is a fairly small group of people and there is the same feeling about the research, that it will go out to the university libraries and it will slip into the shelves there. The few members interested in one part or another will read it but that is it.

There is not the feeling they are elevating the general level of education in the province or contributing in that sense very much to the policy-making process.

I don't know whether your staff people read those reports, perhaps they do. I have never seen a government response to one of those papers. Perhaps they should be forced to respond. At least we will get the civil service or the decision-makers thinking and give them something to play off against.

I worry that it is just filed, that there isn't enough done with it and there isn't very much influence from it. Maybe I am misreading it. If the minister has a different view I would be interested in knowing. I am one who believes that a free society needs independent centres of criticism and research, must constantly be reassessing what it is doing and needs to be constantly pushed and challenged in order to move ahead and make progress.

Referring to the OEC, there are some areas it has chosen for research which I wouldn't have chosen. On the other hand I think that some of the research it has done is excellent. Those are individual choices, I suppose, and anyone can second-guess some of the topics chosen.

Generally I like it and I think it is worthwhile. Those are a few simple suggestions on how it could make some of its work more relevant and more meaningful, not only to the government but also to the population which supports it and pays its bills.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The reports the honourable member does see are those of hired researchers. They are not necessarily even the views of the council itself, as he knows; such as the one we saw on the question of co-payment or partial payment deterrent fees, if you want to call it that, in the health side.

Do we read them? Of course we do. For example I went through that one quite carefully. I even had a meeting with a member of the council to discuss it—

Mr. Laughren: Who was probably opposed to it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, as a matter of fact he was.

Mr. Laughren: We are reinforcing each other's views; that's great.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I didn't say that I was. At one time, I happened to be one of the greatest believers in deterrent fees. It was only about 1976, late in the year, that I was converted.

The researchers obviously would have been available to assist committees; however, I think it should be pointed out that those researchers, being contract people, traditionally have been paid for the function of producing reports and therefore probably would be charging a committee for their advice.

Mr. Peterson: Tell them that is part of their obligation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well I don't think we would get a fellow at the University of Toronto necessarily buying that kind of argument. They are in the business of providing and selling their expertise like anybody else. One of the things I think should be said—I am sure you didn't say it was otherwise—but I think it needs to be said clearly; those people who are appointed to the economic council are not paid. I am sure you know that. It is one of the few groups of this nature I have had any dealings with that is so. They are offering it as a public service. I believe they are allowed out-of-pocket expenses and that is all.

Mr. Peterson: The Liberals work for free sometimes, too, you know.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, and in vain. I would also point out to the honourable member that since the council was created we have seen a proliferation of groups in similar roles. We have also seen the 1977 conference on participation or whatever—I keep forgetting the proper title—hive off an advisory committee to the Premier made up of representatives of labour, management and the academics.

We have seen the Premier have a business advisory committee, chosen from a cross-section of Ontario industry, meet with him on a regular basis. We have seen the Economic Council of Canada created. We have the C. D. Howe Institute; we have the Conference Board in Canada; we have groups like the Niagara Institute, which may not duplicate but often comes close. One could go down a list of things of this nature, and I guess at a time when we in this House sit looking at the estimates, as we are doing now, wondering how can government spend less money, one has to pose questions such as you pose: Are we getting value for our money, is it time for us to reappraise that?

I would do that almost any year, because my ministry will be under constraints before the next budget. We will be looking for ways to save money; if in fact we think this council is worth the $1.1 million or whatever the cost will be next year, of course, it will continue; if we think it is wasting money, we would hope you would support us if we decided that money was better used within other government priorities.

Mr. Laughren: Just briefly; our caucus met with the Ontario Economic Council some time ago. We expressed some concerns about the kind of research they were doing and talked to them about what we would like to see them do. They seemed to receive our input in a very positive way, but I haven't seen anything flowing from it.

Obviously the kinds of things which interest us are the issues we raise here in the House, during estimates debates and the budget debate. I am not very happy with a lot of the research either. I think they are missing the whole crisis of the manufacturing sector in Ontario. There needs to be much more thorough research done on that.

I would like to change the subject for a moment, if I could, to go back to the Treasurer's response on Friday. I really thought I was making it simple by asking the Treasurer some very specific questions, to which he could provide some specific answers rather than engage in a broad-ranging philosophical debate, to which he could just stand up and say, "You are a socialist and I am a free enterpriser." I would ask him some specific questions and would hope to get some answers.

The responses partly indicate why we are in trouble. You really don't have a handle on what is going on out there. I will be specific, I don't want to generalize. I asked you questions about the redeployment problem as a result of the GATT negotiations. You didn't say a thing about it, virtually nothing at all.

How do you know what is going to happen to Ontario? What are the successor industries that will replace the ones that are gradually phased out? I am not looking for anything dramatic or anything to happen overnight, just some indication that you know what the possibilities are.

There have been studies done that indicate there are going to be problems. I would like to know what negotiations you have had with the federal government. I would like to know what your plans are to retrain some of the older workers who will have to be redeployed. I would like to know just what your figures are in terms of the number of people who will have to be redeployed. Is it the 250,000 the federal government indicated? Who is going to share in the retraining costs? Those are all very specific questions. Is a formula being worked on to share those costs between the provinces and the federal government? We have no idea. We don't know what you are doing.

When it came to the whole question of auto parts, we have a massive deficit, over $4 billion this year in auto parts. What about the reduction in tariffs from 15 per cent to 9.2 per cent on some of those things? Does that mean there will be more production in the US or not? What are the minister's long-range projections on deficits in auto parts and on jobs in the auto parts industry? I am thinking particularly now in relation to trade with the United States, not other countries.

I asked you about machinery. We have almost a $4 billion deficit in machinery. I think that's very serious; that's a very key industry in an industrialized economy. I don't know what the minister thinks about that. Does he plan to do anything about it or is he just going to let it drift? It's getting worse and he sits back and makes no comment on it whatsoever.

Those are very specific questions I asked.

When it comes to resources, is the minister happy with the kind of revenues we are getting from the resource industries in Ontario? He could be, maybe he is. He was Minister of Natural Resources at one time, he knows how little money we are getting from our resources.

This year, Falconbridge Nickel Mines for its first six months had net earnings of $43,550,000. This company is controlled by Superior Oil, a huge transnational. Is he satisfied they should not have to build a refinery in the Sudbury basin? They have been there more than 45 years. What is he aiming for, 50 years? Why shouldn't they have to build a refinery there? Why should those jobs go to Norway?

Don't tell us it's done in order to stabilize the economy of the Sudbury basin. What a sad joke that is. We have been saying for years that it is outrageous that the dangerous work and the dirty work is done in Sudbury, and the wealth creation, in terms of further processing, is done in Norway. Now that's wrong, that is fundamentally wrong.

I would like to know what the minister is going to do in terms of revenues for the resource sector, and is he going to continue those processing exemptions under section 113 of the Mining Act that he has now given for Falconbridge? Would he allow those to stay in place? If he is, that's outrageous.

Come to Sudbury and tell us all that despite the $100 million net Falconbridge is going to earn this year, some of it is not going to be plugged back into building a new refinery. Come and tell us that in Sudbury and we will give the minister the kind of reception he deserves.

The minister looks and sees what is happening in Atikokan and Capreol, other parts of northern Ontario that have iron ore mines. While we are importing 58 per cent of iron ore, he is allowing our iron ore mines to be shut down by companies resident elsewhere. Those are the kinds of things bothering us and to which we have a right to an answer.

I'd like to know what the Treasurer's input is on this famous cabinet committee that's supposed to look into the problems of one-industry towns. That is part of the responsibility of the Treasurer. He sits back and doesn't even think it is appropriate to respond to the leadoff questions when they are asked.

I guess the Treasurer would prefer we don't ask specific questions, that we stand up and engage in the silly philosophical debate which has nothing to do with working people, nothing to do with one-industry communities, nothing to do with people employed in industries threatened as a result of the GATT negotiations. Is that what he prefers? If not, why doesn't he answer the questions? It has been a week since they were asked and we still don't have any answers. He has the staff, why aren't they working on those answers? I would sure like to know the answers to them.

I raised the question of the aerospace industry. We are now getting evidence from all sides, all sources, about the potential problems of the new fighter aircraft contract the federal government is attempting to negotiate. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) sure doesn't know what is going on. He hasn't even read the confidential document. He is taking the word of the federal government despite all sorts of questions raised about it. I don't think the Treasurer understands how potentially important that is for jobs in Ontario and for the future of the aerospace industry and for the future of other high-technology industries as spinoff benefits accrue as a result of the work being done in the aerospace industry.

Has the Treasurer made any negotiations with the federal government? Has he been part of it? If so, what are his views about the new fighter aircraft industry?

I asked the Treasurer specifically about the future of de Havilland. I understand why he wouldn't want to interfere with the privatization plans of the federal government, but at least he could tell us he is sure there will be guarantees given as a result, if and when de Havilland is sold.

An interesting thing happens. The federal government has said there will be no guarantees. The Premier (Mr. Davis) says he's sure there will be guarantees in the sale of de Havilland. What's the Treasurer's views on that? Who is right? The federal government or the Premier? Are there or are there not guarantees in the sale of de Havilland in terms of foreign ownership, in terms of benefits to Ontario?

Has the Treasurer had assurance that any purchaser of de Havilland will be required to proceed with the kind of development work into the new Dash X, as we call it—it has another number now; I have forgotten what it is; a new 30-seat aircraft. What guarantees is the Treasurer going to insist on that any buyer give us before they are allowed to buy de Havilland? I would like to know the answer to that question.

I asked the Treasurer if he didn't agree a mining machinery complex in the north would reduce regional disparity. He didn't even answer that. I asked him if he thought a good mining machinery industry indigenous to Ontario or some place else in Canada would reduce the deficit in a current account. He didn't answer that question. I asked him if he didn't think a mining machinery industry here would provide thousands of jobs for Ontario and in some cases in communities where they desperately need them. He didn't bother answering that question. I asked him if he didn't think building a good mining machinery industry would reduce the dependence of some communities on resource extraction and he didn't bother to answer that question.

Those are some of the questions I asked in a very serious way. If the Treasurer wants his estimates to be regarded in a frivolous way, then let him talk to the Liberal Party about it. We are trying to be serious about these estimates and the Treasurer won't treat them seriously. The Treasurer goes through his ramble, disjointed though it is, and doesn't deal with the specifics of the problems which we raise in here year after year. It's discouraging and it's irresponsible on the part of the Treasurer not to respond to those specific questions.

What does he want us to do, put the questions on the Order Paper in written form and then wait for six months while his staff works through and answers them? We shouldn't have to do that. That's what these debates are for.

I am sorry to preach to the Treasurer in such a way but I am very angry at the kind of response he gave on Friday. He didn't even bother to do any homework at all on the questions that were asked in a very serious way. He obviously regards the estimates debate as something in which he won't get into trouble anyway, so he will just get up and he will baloney them, to use the polite word. "I will baloney them for a couple of hours and we will get on to other things." That's not what we are here for. If the minister wants to demean the whole process of the estimates debate then I guess we can't stop him, but I want to tell him that that kind of behaviour doesn't have our approval.

I will sit down now; there are a couple of other topics I want to get into. I ask the Treasurer if he is prepared to answer these questions in a serious way. Would he prefer to wait until Friday to answer them or come back on Monday to answer them? If he had said when he responded on Friday that the member for Nickel Belt asked some interesting questions and that by the time the estimates are finished he would have the answers for him, I would have accepted that. But he doesn't even do that; he doesn't give us the courtesy of that kind of response. He just stands up and baloneys for an hour.

So in all seriousness, I ask the Treasurer if he would make a commitment to answer those questions in the same way in which they were asked. I think that's why we are here.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I started today's remarks by saying I hadn't finished my initial comments on Friday by the time one o'clock came and while I should have carried on, I did not. I think the honourable member knew that before the day began and I think the kind of debate we agreed we would have here would let him re-emphasize anything he wished to.

I hope I answered most of the things the Liberal critic covered in his opening comments. Whether I answered them satisfactorily or not, I don't expect either of you to pat me on the back. The fact is I took quite a bit of time going through, point by point, the matters he brought forward and I was covering a number of yours. I think a check of Hansard will clearly show I mentioned my concern about mining machinery, about the dollar input, the growth of exports relative to imports lately and a few other comments of that nature. I believe Hansard would show that was all said on Friday.

The member says he asks his questions seriously and I, for one, generally try to answer questions that can easily be answered as clearly as possible. The fact remains I found some of his questions a bit difficult to answer—specifically the question, "Is 250,000 the right number of jobs for re-employment in Ontario?" I don't know. I don't know that anybody has done any more than make a rough approximation.

When we look at the potential shifts, we certainly were concerned. As a matter of fact, a year ago last October I took the time to go to Geneva, as part of a trip to Europe, to express my concern to the negotiators for Canada, pointing out there could easily be discerned within Canada a feeling that this was a time to drop tariffs for the benefit of the non-manufacturing provinces at the expense of Ontario. I wanted them to understand this could easily be popular in other parts of Canada but we were concerned that the industrial heart land get the protection it deserved in the discussions that went on.

I don't know what good option there was to not being a part of the multitrade negotiations. We hadn't been part of them. I was told the negotiating countries had mechanisms and enforcement procedures that virtually could almost boycott us, which is the word they used overseas.

The fact is we have been suggesting there will have to be skill-training programs through the Employment Development Fund, the Federal Business Development Bank and others. You must admit this year we are embarking upon the analysis and improvement of skill training with a new vigour through the Ministry of Labour, which has accepted the responsibility for that kind of work. There is awareness we have to be changing and improving the skills of Ontario workers so they can adapt to a new world.

We hope Ontario is going to profit to some degree from the new tariffs, once they are pointed out. One point made here is 80 per cent of Canadian exports will enter duty free—that is to other nations—and another 15 per cent will be under five per cent. Only 65 per cent of US exports to Canada will enter duty free. In effect, the percentage of Canadian exports going out duty free to other countries is greater than the percentage coming in. We were a very protected area.

You talk about de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited. It is great to ask what I am going to demand. It is one of the techniques often used to heap blame upon a government, whether it be provincial, municipal or federal, for something of which it can't be the complete master. I am very concerned about keeping Canadian ownership of de Havilland. I am very concerned about keeping de Havilland in Ontario. We all must be very concerned about that. It has been a company that has produced one of our outstanding success stories in the export markets.

I am meeting, just by coincidence and not because of the estimates process, with senior executives of de Havilland tomorrow. I believe they are going to talk to me about the Dash 8 or DHC-8 program and I am sure at that time I may have an opportunity to learn what, if anything, is transpiring.

As I understand it, the shares of that company are owned by the government of Canada and the government of Canada will be making any decisions—if any are ever taken—to sell it. I surely hope the government of Canada is as interested as I am and as you are in keeping the ownership of that company within Canada and making sure it stays within Ontario; but, most importantly, that it has a secure future. To ask if I am going to demand—I can demand all I want, but it doesn't mean that is going to happen. I can request and will request without any question at all, but—

Mr. Makarchuk: When the federal election is on, what will you do then?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am only pointing out to you what I can do now.

Mr. Laughren: What have you done?

Hon. F. S. Miller: What have I done? I have not been the voice of the government of Ontario in de Havilland. I suspect you will find the Minister of Industry and Tourism and the Premier have been the two who have been talking on that score. I can only tell you we have great pride in that company and because it is so labour intensive, because it is so well specialized in its own field, I would hope there are potential investors within Canada willing to buy it, if it is for sale.

Let's be honest. You don't want to see somebody buying it who hasn't got the foggiest idea of how to run an aircraft company, an aerospace industry. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Laughren: Yes. That is why I wouldn't sell it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One would hope potential buyers have both the financial strength and the administrative capabilities to ensure it is a future profitable organization. Let's be honest. The aerospace industry is a cyclical industry. You have companies like Lockheed getting one of the first, if not the first, major American guarantees to bail it out when the L-1011 program got into trouble. You had the great and almost unassailable Rolls-Royce organization go bankrupt because of its L-1011 engines, did you not?

Mr. Laughren: You missed the point, though.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't think I have missed the point. What I am trying to point out is there have been times when those industries, no matter how well managed and how well financed, get into trouble. The very reason for Hawker Siddeley, Canada Limited—who owned de Havilland at one time, did they not?—getting out of it was that they were at one of the bottom swings and the future didn't look all that good.

Mr. Laughren: That's why the government put money in them.

Hon. F. S. Miller: This is one of the times I don't disagree with you. I happen to think it was a wise move and we did need to maintain within Canada, both at Canadair and at de Havilland a capability in aerospace. It's one of the reasons I'm in the pulp and paper industry right now, before it goes as far.

When I look across, the member said I didn't talk much about northern development or the Employment Development Fund. The member implied I should be a bit embarrassed about the Employment Development Fund.

Mr. Laughren: I didn't say that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Philosophically embarrassed.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, yes.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think the member was on the tack that I probably should be a bit embarrassed, and I am. If one goes back into the books he will see I have said that it's not my favourite kind of thing.

Mr. Laughren: We don't like seeing you squirm or anything like that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I quite honestly admit when I have problems with a belief, but again I'm a realist, I'm a pragmatist. Eight years in politics, the first of 24, have made me understand—now that brought him down—or realize that things aren't quite as white and black as you and I want them to be. There are times when governments are intervening in the process because of the nature of the marketplace.

Of the $165 million I currently have for the Employment Development Fund this year, the great bulk of it will probably end up going to northern communities and the very kinds of communities the member started talking about, the one-industry communities. That was the very reason that as Minister of Natural Resources, during the time I was looking at the problem of the one-industry community, I wanted to look at not only the ones that were already gone or going, like Atikokan was with its mine and one or two others like Marmora with its mine, but also look a little further down the road.

It's something the member never gives us credit for doing. We wanted to look across northeastern and northwestern Ontario and find out how many other one-industry towns in the forest products industry were apparently healthy but potentially unhealthy. That was a direct result of the committee the member gives no credit to; I was chairman, as Minister of Natural Resources.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What came out of it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member for Rainy River—I won't ask him to say he would agree—believes we should help the pulp and paper industry to restore its strength.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I don't think we should give them money, but you're doing it on an ad hoc basis.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No. I don't think we are.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What are you doing for Ignace?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Ignace is in the same boat as Atikokan.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The honourable member may be excused for interjecting quickly when he has just arrived.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I've been here for an hour and I'm waiting, just like my colleague from Nickel Belt, for you to say something. I was here last Friday—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I recall many a time when there were three of us in here, but perhaps you were within range—

Mr. T. P. Reid: I was one of them. I was astounded, there were only four of us here.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Five, because it was one of my colleagues who called for a quorum.

The fact is that the Employment Development Fund is heavily going after some of the areas you are talking about.

We are working on the auto parts imbalance. Twenty-nine per cent of grants so far have gone to the auto parts industry. That's a fairly high chunk of the allocation. By the time we're all through we're going to be much higher on the pulp and paper side because we're going to be approving quite a number in the next while, once we have sorted out some of the final details with our colleagues at the DREE level who are paying part of the costs of that program.

That's an interesting thing. Ontario brought the program forward without consultation with the federal government. We didn't really ask for help but they very quickly jumped in, I think within two days. Obviously they had been working on it—they knew we were—and had a program for Ontario where they gave one dollar for every two Ontario gave. This is specifically for the pulp and paper part.

They expanded it to Quebec, where they gave 60 cents for every 40 cents Quebec gave or $1.50 for every dollar Quebec gave. I wasn't surprised but I was somewhat disappointed that the ratios were so different in the two provinces. I think our pulp and paper industry is just as deserving of federal dollars as is that of Quebec. I hope you would agree with me. A pulp and paper company functions there with almost exactly the same basic problems it functions with in Ontario, except perhaps they have not pursued the pollution and environmental aspects with the same kind of will we have.

Mr. Samis: That's not saying much.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope to be in your community very shortly and I hope to have you with me while we give away a little money in the next few weeks. The gentleman behind you who suddenly woke up and came alive, in his community we're giving money away so steadily it's a wonder we're not filled with Conservative members from Nickel Belt.

Mr. Laughren: I think the Treasurer is taunting me. I will indeed put the questions on the Order Paper and try to get some answers that way.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That doesn't work either, I've tried it.

Mr. Laughren: At least it puts somebody to work.

I would like to talk to the Treasurer about one of my favourite topics, one about which I have a passion, if not a fetish. That is the whole mining machinery industry to which I have referred a couple of times.

It really is outrageous that this country is the third largest in the production of minerals, the second largest consumer of mining machinery and number one in importing mining machinery. That's in the developed world.

The jobs that are lost in the mining machinery industry we estimate to be roughly 18,000. To lose 18,000 jobs in an industry which should be ours is simply not acceptable.

I know what the Treasurer has said—that the Minister of Industry and Tourism had a trade show, which we thought was a good idea, and the Minister of Industry and Tourism has indicated he is going to follow it up. But the Treasurer knows, as we know, that the private sector has had decades to put in place in this province a healthy mining machinery industry and they haven't done so. There is Jarvis Clark in North Bay, a producer of mining machinery, but they have their problems too. They go to DREE for a grant to expand and they're turned down because they're too successful. Now, a fellow named Jarvis and a fellow named Clark own Jarvis Clark—at least that's my understanding.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They're both federal members for our party.

Mr. Laughren: Not the same, no. I don't think that's true; I stand to be corrected.

Mr. Peterson: Pretty sure about that; right, Frank? I think they sold out to a US company. They're now working for the States.

Mr. Laughren: No, I believe the member is wrong because not a month ago they came before the Sudbury 2001 committee, of which I'm an executive member, and made a presentation.

The figure that always fascinates me is the proportion of domestic demand that is met by imports. That's a very critical figure to look at in any key industrial sector—the percentage of the domestic demand that is met by imports.

I was checking on mining machinery statistics. These are from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, using the Statistics Canada figures. In 1964, as a percentage of the Canadian market, imports were 57 per cent. That kept creeping up. We have a more up-to-date figure on its way to us; the latest figure we have is that it's up over 90 per cent. I understand there are some corrections being made on that figure by StatsCan or Industry, Trade and Commerce in Ottawa, but those are the figures we got from them. They're not our figures.

Thinking of mining machinery imports meeting 90 per cent of the domestic market should cause a chill to run up the Treasurer's spine. That's something we have to turn around.

I would like to know if the Treasurer is prepared to move in an aggressive way to ensure that happens. It's not good enough to stand back with either a wishing wand or a Band-Aid and think the problem is going to be solved. It simply won't happen that way.

As a matter of fact, Jarvis Clark made the point that there should be something called an Ontario mining group in Ontario. He felt the Ontario mining group should consist of manufacturers, government, mining companies, contractors and consultants. The Ontario mining group would take a look at this problem. The government has to take some initiative here. If the Minister of Industry and Tourism won't take it, the Treasurer should.

I want to tell you something. If I were sitting in the Treasurer's seat—we all fantasize, I know—and I saw those kinds of deficits and import figures, I would say to the Minister of Industry and Tourism: "This has to end. Get together an Ontario mining group; turn this thing around. Don't do it with a mining trade show that has 10 per cent of the potential market on display. Do a proper one, so we can get this thing under way."

The Treasurer doesn't see that as his role. Part of the problem is that he sees himself simply as someone who tries to balance the books. Well, he's not going to balance the books with that kind of attitude. There's enough evidence that that won't solve the problem.

We've tried to be very specific on this side in terms of what we would do to try to turn it around. Rather than just criticize what the Treasurer is not doing, we've tried to say what we would do. That allows the Treasurer to have a go at us too; we think that's fair.

We have suggested a number of things. I'll enumerate them for the Treasurer:

First, we suggest the establishment of an independent nickel institute in the Sudbury basin. We've got a university there; that would be an ideal place for it. As a matter of fact, the mineral nickel consultant for the province of Ontario has been urging that this happen for some time now.

Second, we suggest the expansion of Laurentian University and Lakehead University to provide major studies in resource development, as well as extensive mining research facilities. Some of these tie in with the whole question of linkages between the resource industry and the machinery industry. That's what's missing at the present time.

Third, there should be government support of mergers and joint ventures that will strengthen domestic machinery production. A good example is the Jarvis Clark operation attempting to expand but needing capital input.

Fourth, we suggest the establishment of a government agency or a government industry agency which would foster communication links between manufacturers, resource companies and parts manufacturers so that domestic companies secure maximum contracts from resource industries. Such an agency would also foster our domestic and international marketing network. The province of Saskatchewan has recently announced such a program.

Fifth, we would put pressure on national distributors to market Canadian-made items.

Sixth, we would require foreign-owned corporations to spend more on research and development in Canada. That's a major problem.

Seventh, we suggest the introduction of a machinery purchase tax credit program based solely on the buy-Canadian policy.

We have examples over there of the policy which now gives a tax credit for the purchase of machinery no matter where the machinery is purchased. It's coming back to me now—the ministry itself had a study out a year or two ago which showed that program was costing Ontario jobs in the short term. In the long term there would be the job creation aspect of it, but in the short term it was costing us jobs. I would even question that. When you encourage the purchase of foreign-owned machinery rather than rebuilding the Canadian machinery you're not making sense at all.

Eighth, we suggest a manpower training program based on an apprenticeship fund from which corporations could draw after demonstrating an effective program. The fund would be developed on the corporation grant levy system.

Ninth, there should be a strictly enforced buy-Canadian program for government agencies and crown corporations, taking into consideration issues beyond prices. This type of nontariff barrier would respond to those used in all other countries.

I want to talk at some length on that, by the way. I doubt if we will get to it today, but I want to talk about the whole government procurement program of this government. The Treasurer should be taking an active role in that because it has something to do with rebuilding the Ontario economy as well, not just the Ontario economy, but other parts of Canada.

Mr. Peterson: You've been reading our stuff, Floyd.

Mr. Laughren: No, this is something we've been working at for a long time.

Tenth, we suggest much better data collection on this industry by all levels of government. By that I mean the mining machine industry.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the things we'd like to see happen in the field of mining machinery. The Treasurer can say they've started. Well, they've started after years of increasing deficits in the mining machinery industry. As a matter of fact, the figures I was quoting before showed that back in 1964, which is 15 years ago, the trend was already evident. For 15 years the government sat over there and watched the market deteriorate in terms of meeting the domestic demand from Canadian suppliers. After 15 years the Treasurer can say his government is doing something now, but that is not a good enough excuse for not doing anything for 15 years. We're talking about a $400 million market. It really is a substantial market.

That's all I have to say about mining machinery. I wanted to talk about one other sector before I sat down, but if the Treasurer wants to respond to mining machinery I'll stop for a moment and then go on to the other sector.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was trying to check to see whether the figure you used, that 90 per cent of mining machinery was imported, was accurate. I think when sweeping statements like that are made we need some documentation.

Mr. Laughren: They're not my figures.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not challenging you and saying it's wrong. I want to make sure you're right before I simply take it, as we all too often do, to be gospel. I think I have enough data here.

On a Canadian basis, putting all machinery together—I leave you to exclude mining machinery—exports in 1978 were $2.6 billion and export-imports in 1978 were $6.9 billion. So the exports would have been a little more than one third of the imports; about 40 per cent of the imports, roughly.

Mr. Laughren: Then there's something wrong with your figures.

Hon. F. S. Miller: These are federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce figures for machinery in Canada. I can even be more specific in Ontario. These figures didn't tell you what the domestic demand was. They only showed total exports and total imports. They didn't say what the Canadian market was and that's the part I've been looking for in my data. So, if you're right, if we've imported $6.9 billion, we've offset it with $2.6 billion. The interesting thing there is that the rate of growth of exports is going up faster than the rate of growth of imports. That at least is in the right direction. What would the honourable member have us do? If that isn't happening, we even have a worse problem.

This is one of those areas where I share again the objectives of the honourable member. I sincerely do share the goal of seeing us improve our Canadian manufacturing of machinery. I am quite willing to consider seriously the suggestions he is making. I am not going to say which ones I will accept or reject today. It happens that when I listened to his first presentation a week ago today I jotted down a number of questions to myself about this issue and I am in the process of asking that we start looking seriously within Treasury at the feasibility of some of them.

That doesn't mean they are going to be feasible or not feasible. I quite agree it is a major problem and it may be very difficult to solve. Some of the solutions the honourable member has offered may look good, but I will give you one example: the selective sales tax route is, in my opinion, a nontariff barrier. Under the rules of GATT we would be hampered.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Frank, you were complaining that the United States was the worst offender.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think Japan was the worst offender.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The United States was close.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are all kinds of nontariff barriers functioning right now; you and I both know it. I have one that is complained about quite often—the price of wine in Ontario. That is strictly to protect a Canadian industry.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Come on now, 123 per cent? He is raising revenue and you know it.

Mr. Laughren: I will have to get Morty Shulman back here to talk to you about that.

I will leave the mining machinery sector for the moment. The Treasurer said exports were increasing at a faster rate than imports. When one is starting with this incredibly small base, the total deficit is increasing by leaps and bounds, even though exports are growing at a faster rate. That argument makes no sense whatsoever.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Again the insinuation that our base is terrible is not totally correct. Our exports were 38 per cent of our imports in machinery. I don't think that is quite as infinitesimal as the honourable member has made out.

Mr. Laughren: The minister could go through every figure for exports and imports every year for the last 15 years and it would show him he is wrong.

I would like to go beyond the mining machinery sector and talk about the whole machinery industry in this country. When we talk about machinery we talk about a very key ingredient in our manufacturing base in Canada. In 1975 this country had a $3 billion deficit on machinery; in 1976 it was up to $3.1 billion; in 1977 it was also $3.1 billion; in 1978, $3.34 billion; and so the figures go. This year I expect it is going to be even higher.

The machinery problem goes beyond mining machinery. I didn't want the Treasurer to think it was only mining machinery with which we had a problem. It is the entire machinery industry that is causing this very serious problem. You could draw two parallel lines on a graph; one would show machinery trade balance and the other would show the manufacturing trade balance. That says something.

The Treasurer was talking about our imports. The figures I have indicate we import 71 per cent of our machinery in this country. This should give the Treasurer pause for thought: we are the only industrialized country in the world that imports more than half its machinery needs. That should tell you something about the way we have been treated by companies which don't really care about creating a healthy industry in this country and becoming involved in export markets.

That happens when you are a branch-plant operation. The foreign-ownership aspect is important. The machinery industry is foreign owned by 70 per cent of the assets, 50 per cent of the output and 75 per cent of the sales. We know, and I think the Treasurer would admit in a moment of honesty, that foreign ownership has caused this state of affairs. It has promoted fragmentation and excessively large numbers of suppliers for most products, poor design and dismal innovative activity, restricted access to foreign markets for our machinery exports, and imported large amounts of component parts. The Treasurer should understand that.

I will give the Treasurer credit for not standing and saying that is really a federal government responsibility. I suspect he knows we can't allow ourselves to fall into that trap, because 64 per cent of machinery employment is located in Ontario and 70 per cent of the shipments are accounted for in this province. It is extremely important for Ontario to have a healthy machinery industry. It is an Ontario problem. If it is going to be turned around, it is going to be turned around in Ontario.

I couldn't help but look at the employment in the industry, and what has happened to employment in the industry in the last few years. I will go through a few figures, just as they apply to Ontario.

In 1972 there were 50,000 employees in the machinery industry in Ontario. By 1978 the number had dropped to 45,700 employees, a drop of almost 5,000 employees in the machinery industry alone. To my mind that is serious.

The Treasurer should not say, "They are becoming more mechanized and more sophisticated and that's why there is less employment." The fact is you could also put that on a graph and see that it parallels the increasing deficits in the machinery industry as well. So we have to look at those in a very serious way.

I look at import penetration. The import penetration of the Canadian market in 1970 was 53 per cent. By 1975, it was 63 per cent; in 1977, 65 per cent; and the Conference Board in Canada says it was 70.9 per cent for 1976, even higher than the figures we got from the federal government. I think the matter is serious enough for the Treasurer to go beyond the mining machinery industry.

I agree that you have to start some place. I hope the Treasurer will take a look at the mining machinery and see that as a special case—a model from which to build—but have people working on the problem in the machinery industry as a whole, because imports are taking an increasing proportion of the Canadian domestic market.

I look at the trade deficit in the machinery industry and you break it down into component parts. These are the latest figures I have in a breakdown: 1975, construction equipment deficit $545 million; agricultural equipment, $536 million; special plant machinery, $379 million; rolling mill metalwork machinery, machine tooling, $342 million; pumps, compressors, valves and bearings, $304 million.

That all represents machinery in areas of the economy where we are big. We have massive construction programs. We have massive mining operations. We have huge energy projects and they are specifically the areas that use a lot of big machinery. We should be meeting that domestic market, not importing an increasing proportion of it as time goes on.

To break down the individual components into imports as a percentage of the domestic market here are a couple of the bad ones: power generation equipment, 1965, 54 per cent; forestry equipment, 53 per cent; mining machinery, 21.7 per cent; and construction equipment, 16.4 per cent.

I'm sorry, those were domestic, I'll correct that, Mr. Chairman. Those were domestic shipments as a percentage of the domestic market, not imports. In 1965 in total domestic shipments represented 46 per cent of the domestic market, yet 10 years later in 1975 they had dropped to 37.7 per cent. So in just 10 years they dropped almost 10 per cent. That is very serious.

In the resource-based area it went from 37.6 per cent to 27.3 per cent. In the plant and industrial areas, from 49.4 per cent to 44 per cent; service industries, from 54.3 per cent to 45.6 per cent. That's how we get the total of 46 per cent and 37.7 per cent 10 years later in 1975.

Those figures substantiate everything we are trying to say to the Treasurer. The situation is deteriorating and for him to stand in his place and say exports are growing at a faster rate than imports is nonsense. The fact is deficits are getting worse and they are getting seriously worse and the imports as a percentage of the domestic market are growing. They are growing very dramatically. The Treasurer can't pretend it doesn't exist by using phony comparisons.

If I could I will just give the Treasurer a brief summary of the machinery trade deficit since 1975. The trade deficit in agricultural equipment was $536 million; power generation, $256 million; forestry, $81 million; mining machinery, $136 million; construction equipment, $545 million; special industrial machinery, $378 million; materials handling equipment, $226 million; rolling mill, metal working, $342 million; pumps, compressors, $303 million; other industrial machinery, $103 million; commercial refrigeration, $137 million; and other service industries, $720 million. So we have a trade balance that is unacceptable at almost $4 billion. Between 1975 and 1977, the trade balance went from $3 billion to $3.1 billion and in 1978 it was up to $3.6 billion.

That is a completely unacceptable trade balance. The Treasurer isn't going to turn it around by pretending it's not there or thinking that the private sector will solve it, because it is the private sector that let it deteriorate to that level.

I was checking the machinery trade by major machinery-producing countries, because there are people on that side of the House who say, "The low wage rates in the Third World are causing our problem." That's nonsense; we are not getting our machinery from the Third World anyway. When it comes to other countries exporting machinery, look where we stand. Percentage of domestic requirements imported: United States, 10 per cent, 10 per cent of their domestic demand is imported; Japan, 10 per cent; West Germany, 34 per cent; Britain, 34 per cent; France, 50 per cent; Sweden, 50 per cent; and Canada 60 per cent.

The percentage of production exported: United States, 17 per cent; Japan, 24 per cent; Britain, 50 per cent; France, 45 per cent; Sweden, 59 per cent; and Canada, at the bottom again, with 30 per cent. So whether we are talking about the percentage of domestic requirements we import or the percentage of the production we export, we are at the bottom of the pile yet again. That is something Ontario is simply going to have to take the lead on.

The size of the market is estimated at about $8.8 billion a year and that's a big market to have someone else control and it's going to take some very aggressive reaction. The people at the Mining Equipment and Machinery Association of Canada had this to say. Perhaps the Treasurer could pass this on to his close friend and colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism. I quote: "Imports substitutions, rather than pushing exports, is a way to reduce the trade deficit and re-establish the industry in a Canadian market." That was Mr. Meschino of MEMAC.

That's something the government hasn't learned yet. How can you expand your exports when you don't have the domestic industry here to meet even our domestic demands? It's like playing the old shell game without a pea under them. You think you are going to increase exports when you don't even have the equipment to meet the domestic demand.

They don't have a substantial buy-Canadian policy in machinery. If the Treasurer thinks that's an exaggeration, he hasn't been following the whole debate over Peel region's awarding of a contract to Grumman of New York on the waste recovery plant. That was a pathetic example of a government not being on top of the whole government procurement. More about that later. I want to talk about that a little later.

We have tried to tell the Treasurer what we would do. One of the things we would do in machinery is put in place, and strictly enforce, a buy-Canadian policy. It's not there now. This government certainly doesn't have it.

We would also require the industry to improve manpower training and perhaps we would even set up something like an apprenticeship fund like the one I mentioned for mining machinery.

We could provide capital assistance to enable companies to undertake production of machinery not now made in Canada. For example, I mentioned Jarvis Clark attempting to expand and looking for money—not free money, but looking for assistance from DREE. They were turned down because they are successful. Perhaps the Treasurer could tell me how we are going to rebuild this sector with that kind of attitude on the part of government.

We think there should be very serious consideration of direct government involvement in certain sectors of the machinery industry. There was an all-party select committee of this Legislature a few years ago. They made the same recommendations. They said that if the private sector continues to neglect the mining machinery industry, for example, government has an obligation not simply to stand back and twiddle its thumbs, but to get directly involved. This is something the Treasurer could do, without compromising any of his free-enterprise ideals. He could make sure there's better data collection on the whole machinery industry. It's very difficult to dig out the necessary machinery—to break it down into the different kinds of machinery and to identify the kind of clusters of imports that occur—so we know what it is we are fighting and so, when we go to the manufacturers in Ontario, we can say: "This is what we want. This is what we want you to produce in this province or elsewhere in Canada."

Of course we'd do some of the other things I mentioned, like requiring foreign-owned corporations to spend a lot more on research and development because that has enormous benefits further down the road.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the things we would do. All I have done is try to impress upon the Treasurer the fact that it's not simply a mining machinery problem. It's a machinery problem. The deficits are enormous. They are growing. They are costing us good skilled jobs. We are missing out on high-technology areas by not being involved in the machinery industry in a more substantial way.

It ties in with the whole de Havilland question and what we should be doing there. When you see this kind of thing going on, you think to yourself: "My goodness, if de Havilland goes down the pipe"—by down the pipe, I mean sold to a foreign company—"I can just imagine what will happen. I can just imagine it." The research and development will be done someplace else. The benefits of the high technology will be primarily drained off someplace else. No guarantee of production will remain here, or if it does it will be simply to meet domestic demand, not to get into export markets.

The Treasurer has to start making links between what's happening in the various manufacturing sectors out there. So far, we don't see any sign of that. We wait with bated breath for his foray into the machinery industry, to try and get us back on the right track.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I noted the exports of mining machinery in Ontario are about 45 per cent of imports. Again, I am not relating that—

Mr. Laughren: A deficit.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The deficit is simple; one deducts the one from the other to get the deficit—but in terms of the domestic demand and the percentage of it that is local.

One of the encouraging things to me, while we went through the pulp and paper assistance program, was the very high Canadian-procurement content. Most companies were reporting in excess of 80 per cent, with some reporting in excess of 90 per cent of procurement. That, I think, would indicate a fairly healthy and competitive state particularly for the companies producing environmental equipment in Ontario, since a good deal of the money is being invested in that area.

It would also indicate to me there is going to be quite a growth in demand. I think you are going to see well over $1 billion, I would say, invested in the pulp and paper industry in total over the next four to five years. That, in turn, should give a bit of an edge to Canadian producers who are producing, according to our figures as I say, between 80 and 90 per cent of the total expenditure. It is going to increase their output, obviously allow them to expand facilities to meet the demand and, I hope, do some of the R and D required to maintain the product in the forefront. So the program may assist some of the very objectives you are talking about.

You touched upon agricultural equipment. I can recall when this country exported a great deal of agricultural equipment to the States from Toronto and Brantford, in particular, as the two major centres for that production. Certainly that has changed, but I was a bit encouraged to see the reorganization Massey is undergoing right now. It probably will strengthen the Canadian part of it and hopefully see us re-establish some of those points.

You talked about manpower programs and training. Again, I mentioned those, but I think I should repeat that, with the appointment of the commissioner or the gentleman who came from industry to look after this and some of the press reports I saw as recently as today, I am satisfied we are taking the need seriously and are taking steps—belatedly, if you want to say it, but at least they are being taken—to ensure we start equipping young Canadians, in fact older Canadians to some degree, for the kinds of jobs that are going to be in demand—not going to be, it is current.

Mr. Peterson: What are you doing about it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think we are progressing very well.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You had the Dymond report six years ago and didn't do anything with it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One of the great advantages of sitting over there is one can always say that, can't one?

The fact remains this is one of the first things we pinpointed during this year as—

Mr. Peterson: We had it pinpointed eight years ago.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If you read through your notes, you fellows can say you pinpointed almost anything because you talk about everything. Therefore, you can be right on almost any topic, no matter what the outcome is, because you have talked on all sides of every issue. Therefore, you are bound to look good if you go back in history.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I just want to deal very briefly with the matter I raised with the Treasurer on Friday, in relation to one-industry towns in northern Ontario and what the Treasurer is going to do about them.

The Treasurer may or may not recall I first had a question on the Order Paper on December 13, 1978, asking how many times the special committee the Premier set up on the one-industry towns in northern Ontario had met and what resolutions and policies they had come to.

I got the usual mish-mash of very little information dealing with the question I put on the Order Paper. My friend from Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) picked up the subject about six months later and then repeated the question I had asked previously. He didn't get any better an answer than I did, but generally the answer was the cabinet committee on one-industry towns had been folded into the cabinet committee on resource development.

The committee was set up at the time of the Inco layoffs. It was set up as governments of any political stripe are wont to do, namely to indicate that the government is concerned in dealing with it. I didn't get any answer to my question as to what policies were in place on a broad spectrum and as to what the thrust of the government was going to be in dealing with these situations as they arose in northern Ontario.

It didn't deal with broadening the economic base of towns like Atikokan, Ignace, Marmora and all the rest of these places. It didn't deal with what the Treasurer was going to do in regard to the taxation system and so on. We still haven't heard anything from the cabinet committee on resources development—and I see the minister who, I believe, heads that committee is here with us—as to what it is planning on doing.

I asked the Treasurer specifically last Friday about it. I got his usual "jolly old Frank" performance. I want to put the question to him again during his estimates. What can he tell the people we represent who are in these communities that the government is going to do to assist them when the main industry in that town is mined out fully or when all the trees are cut and the mill closes down or whatever? I specifically want to know in the case of Atikokan, for instance, what assistance the Treasurer is going to provide, if any, to that municipality to assist with the tax base or the loss of tax revenues due to the closing down of Steep Rock and Caland? Can the municipality expect any tax relief or assistance?

I wrote the minister and asked him this question nine or 10 months ago. He replied at that time that this had not yet happened and when it happened the government would deal with it. Steep Rock now is closed down completely. They've sold all their equipment and machinery. They've moved their head office to Toronto to look perhaps into some other investments in the mining field. They're shut down. Almost 700 men and women were laid off in that community.

Caland Ore has already laid off 200 men and will be laying off more. We had hoped they would be going on until September or October of 1980 but they announced a week ago they would be closing down on April 1, 1980. That will put another 225 to 250 men and women out of work. Some of those people obviously are going to have to leave the community to find employment elsewhere. Unfortunately for them, it's too late. They're the recipients of 36 years of this government's not having any policies in regard to this.

Specifically, I want to know from the Treasurer if he is going to provide anything in the way of tax assistance to Atikokan. This question is going to relate to Ignace, which also has learned in the last two weeks that Mattabi Mines will be finished mining in that area in 1988 and closed down completely by 1990. A large proportion of the people in that community will have to leave to find jobs elsewhere. What is the community going to do to pay for its sewer and water system, its municipal programs and all the rest of it?

I want to ask the specific question, what is the minister going to do as far as the taxes go? Secondly, what can he tell us about the government's program in regard to one-industry communities, or is he still simply dealing with them on an ad hoc basis? Are there any guidelines or requests they can make that will be available to them to assist them in getting such things as industrial development officers, to whom they can look for government assistance?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me address Atikokan directly. There are other aspects to the question raised but, Atikokan being in the member's riding, I'm sure he'd be interested in the results.

From the regional priority budget: 1978-79, $800,000; 1979-80, $1.4 million; 1980-81, $1 million, in round figures. That's for a town with 5,000 people. That money is going for sewage facilities, an industrial park, a geological survey, the salary and expenses of an economic development commissioner, and an airport expansion. That's just one part of it.

The other thing—and this came directly from my one-industry community committee—is the grant from the Ministry of Northern Affairs of $75,000 per year for five years for the Atikokan economic development commission. One small company has been secured so far. While it is only employing four people, it is at least a start in that direction.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs is completing final arrangements for a direct grant to Atikokan for the servicing of 12 acres of land to be developed as an industrial park.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs is funding a tourism opportunity study at a cost of $30,000. That is almost complete.

The Ministry of Industry and Tourism has discussed with Norcast Manufacturing, a division of Noranda Mines, the possibility of establishing a facility to produce grinding media. Because of market conditions, that has been put off for a while. Atikokan is still on the short list of places it may go once the economic conditions justify it.

I mentioned the Bending Lake proposal and the roads the other day when the member was here—in looking to the future in the hope that the Bending Lake proposal would become competitive. We had already got to the point of saying we would, as a matter of subsidy, assist with a slurry pipeline to maintain the town if it should happen. A transitional counsellor has been hired to assist people who are being affected.

While a lot of people disagreed with it, there is no question that the need for employment in the Atikokan area was a basic factor in the decision to maintain the Hydro plant there. If I could get any of these things done for a town in my riding, I would sound like a hero. They're in your riding.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'm lucky.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One can go on and ask, "What have we done?" Arrangements are being concluded with the Ministry of Education and with Confederation College to establish a welding course in Atikokan. The Ministry of Northern Affairs is providing financial assistance for the course, planned to take place in 1980.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs is providing money to the Ministry of Natural Resources for a geological mineral survey, such as we did around the Kirkland Lake area. That brought a great deal of excitement and potential development to the area when I released the results a month or so ago.

I mentioned the Bending Lake deal, and I mentioned the expansion of the airport. The member heard us talk about the improvements to Highway 11 and the discussions the minister had before the North-western Ontario Chamber of Commerce the other day.

Another little factor, stemming to some degree from our single community report, was the need to put our money into the north and help the one-community towns. The fact is that the regional priorities and community priorities budgets of the Ministry of Northern Affairs will be about $75 million for northern Ontario next year, compared with $4.5 million for all of southern Ontario; that is a 15-to-one ratio, and the population is just about the reverse. On a per capita basis, dollars are being poured into northern Ontario for infrastructure, for development, for all the things we've tried to do to make it attractive to industry.

The member heard the figures for other things like Wintario grants to make amenities available: $54 per capita against about $12 to $13 or $14 in southern Ontario. When one gets to the mine sites of Pickle Lake, Ignace, or wherever one may go, one of the major problems is keeping happy employees or happy wives and children. Happy wives and children depend on a community with television, educational outlets and skating rinks. One of the great things about the town of Atikokan is its spirit and the quality of the services it offers people in those areas. For all the problems it faces—and we are the last to deny it faces problems—we have been taking active steps in the last while to attempt to do something about it.

The member touched upon Marmora. It's not in his riding, but he touched upon it. There we had another iron mine go out in advance of its estimated closing time, because Bethlehem Steel in the United States ran into the biggest single first-quarter loss of any company in American history, as I recall; it was around $400 million, or some tremendous figure of that nature. They consolidated right around the world. They didn't just close one or two Canadian operations; they closed a lot of American ones. That's happening throughout the American steel industry.

Both the member and I need to worry about the American steel industry, even though the Canadian steel industry is perhaps almost the healthiest in the world, because we do supply the American steel industry with certain components.

Concerning Marmora, we went through a detailed geological survey in eastern Ontario. We suggested the use of the magnetite ore as a heavy aggregate for an improved rail corridor, which has been one of the major issues facing Canada; that is, better transportation. This country, above all, depends on cheap, good, fast transportation in an energy-conscious world.

When I was talking to the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), who was complaining about section 113 and the use of Norway for refining, I forgot to say, with great respect, the price advantage of the electricity in that country is something. In fact, I would argue that one should use Canada's scarce energy resources a little more wisely in some of the areas where one is using them, because of the small differential in manpower involved in the final refining process. I think the member will recall that on average there are seven jobs at our end for every job at the refining end. Does the member recall that?

With alternative sources of nickel ores for refining in the world today—there was a time when there weren't—one of our major jobs should be to protect the jobs in Sudbury. I'm sure the honourable member knows how hard everybody fought to see that those jobs were protected when there was a slump a couple of years ago.

Mr. Laughren: We never supported the exemption. The people in Sudbury didn't.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not suggesting they did. I'm only saying that when the layoffs occurred in Sudbury two years ago, the pressures on us to do something were such that—I only say to the member, the most important thing we can do is to get as much processing as we can in this country. That I agree with; there's no argument.

However, there are some realities in the world that have to be faced. If I had to spend the amount of power that currently is used for that electrolytic refining process in this country, and decide how best it would be used for jobs, I would argue that we could best use it in other ways, and protect the average seven jobs that are at stake.

Mr. Laughren: But they are not using it in other ways.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Just a second; I'm not quite through with the member. I just digress to him for a second, because I missed it in answering him.

Regarding the DREE agreement: We've entered into the forestry agreement for northern Ontario to get better access so our timber can be harvested according to age and maturity and so we will have a more logical approach, rather than a from-the-mill-outward approach, to the harvesting of forests.

In the meantime, we got to the point—and I smile with some degree of credit, because we announced this change in direction in May 1977—it came to the point where we were going to unify the control with the companies of harvesting and regeneration. I'm convinced, after listening very carefully—as I hope both my critics are—that that is going to improve tremendously the quality of regeneration of the forests in Ontario. That kind of thing has gone on.

As for the specific grant or the maintenance of the community's tax base, we then leave my ministry's jurisdiction and enter into the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs's jurisdiction. That's the kind of thing the minister would more properly look at than myself. I allocate, through the budgetary process, the total dollars. He makes the specific allocations and decides where special arrangements are required.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I thank the Treasurer for all of that. I appreciate that there has been a fair amount done in regard to Atikokan—a little late perhaps, but it has been done. The question now is that I have another community, Ignace; and there are going to be a number of communities across northern Ontario that are facing the same things. I'm presuming, from the Treasurer's answer, that they can expect, perhaps not a Hydro plant, but the same kind of assistance for industrial development officers, for instance—some of the grants and assistance that the Treasurer has outlined. Can I get a nod from the Treasurer that will be the case?

I appreciate the specifics of what the government has done in Atikokan, albeit rather too late, and I asked the former Treasurer the way I am asking this Treasurer, to have a program to assist these communities. In Atikokan we got going much too late.

Ignace knows that by 1988-90, Lyon Lake-Mattabi is going to be mined out. I don't want to be here in 10 years anyway—

Hon. F. S. Miller: We can arrange it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —but I don't want to be here standing in this place, or that place, saying, "What are you going to do?" We've got to start on it now.

Can I presume, from what the Treasurer is saying that he has a fairly broad policy to deal with these matters, and that the other communities that might find themselves in the same situation can expect relatively the same kind of help?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would think a good number of the components of the approach to Atikokan would apply to most communities that are facing the predictable end to an ore body. One of the things I'm encouraged about is that while we've gone through a period of time where new mines were not exactly being rushed on to the scene, there now appears to be, because of the slight reduction in our taxes for the mining industry a renewed interest in Ontario. My friend and I may agree that will stimulate mining in Ontario—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You won't get me in on that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —when we are dealing with more marginal ore bodies than perhaps were found in some of the socialist states, which for a while were taking 102 per cent of the income.

Mr. Laughren: Like Saskatchewan?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, but let's be honest. You'll deal with the devil himself if the ore is good enough, and they had to.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, but they are happy too.

Hon. F. S. Miller: But the ore quality for uranium in the mines in Saskatchewan, I'm told, is exceptionally high. It certainly had the spark and radiance.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I will talk to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) about the tax problem and the tax base.

There are two other things I want to speak about to the Treasurer, one of them because he was the Minister of Natural Resources and should have an appreciation, which on occasion he demonstrates. That is, I would hope he might have as big a hammer as his predecessor, Mr. McKeough, in setting government policy along certain lines.

The point is—and I have said this to the Premier (Mr. Davis), to the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), and I'll say it to the Treasurer—surely in Ontario, in this day and age, we cannot allow a company like Caland Ore, a subsidiary of Inland Steel of Chicago, to make an announcement that they are going to shut down three or four months early, leave ore in the ground or in stockpiles, shut down their pelletizer and effectively go out of business, leaving mineable, economic ore. They can supposedly mine that ore at a reasonable profit, but they're going to leave it in the ground or stockpiled at which point it's not going to be of any particular use to any one. I don't know how much ore is left in that ore body at Caland. I've already asked the Minister of Natural Resources, and I've asked the company to provide me with that information. Obviously there is some ore remaining that could be mined, but they're not going to mine it and they're not going to pelletize it.

I think those companies have a moral and social obligation to complete the exploitation of ore that can be mined in a safe and reasonably economic way. There isn't a great deal of ore left in that body that can be got at in economic terms, but there are a few hundred thousand tons; I don't know how much exactly.

It is not going to be mined, it is not going to be economic for Steep Rock, say, to move in there and mine it. They came to that conclusion before. It is not going to be feasible or economic for any other company to come in and mine. Surely, for what is involved, it should be a policy of the Ontario government to say to these companies: "Look, there is very little left; you mine it, you pelletize it and you stockpile it, or you sell it to somebody else, but you don't leave it in the ground where it is never going to be of any use to anybody." You give the community and the people at least a few more months grace.

I appreciate the problems of markets and everything else, but surely these companies have to take some of the bad with all the good they have had in the use of that resource. I say to the Treasurer, and I would hope he would agree with me, there should be a policy of this sort by this government, and it should be enunciated now.

For instance, I hope that the Treasurer or the Minister of Natural Resources has been in touch with Inland Steel and brought to bear all the moral persuasion at least—if the government is not prepared to do it legislatively—to ensure they carry out that mining to the very end of the ore body that is there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Knowing and respecting the intelligence of my colleague, he realizes the complexity of the issue. Companies are made up of managers who have a very real social conscience, even if we like to paint them otherwise.

I met, and the honourable member met, the manager of that company. I believe he was down with the group talking about the future of his community the other day. They live with human beings who work with them, and they form the same kinds of relationships we do. Yet we have seen a number of communities throughout Ontario, almost all with iron mines in the last while, face that kind of matter where a mine has been left.

It is not just a question asked here. In the United States at this time there are steel producers closing down in a whole raft of places. A good deal of that is because the steel industry in the United States is not as efficient as the steel industry of Canada or the steel industry of Japan, in particular, and to some degree that of Germany. I won't get into the reasons for it; interestingly enough, a part of it is because it is the oldest. The parallel in Canada was the pulp and paper industry. Our pulp and paper industry was there first; therefore, when it came time to get into a tough market, people with new mills, like those in the southern United States, obviously had the advantage of better technology than we did.

The Americans were there first with their steel mills. They didn't go through a war that saw a good number of their plants obliterated. They ended up, therefore with more antiquated mills than some of the competitors who started, almost from scratch, after a war or as their countries developed.

Mr. Peterson: Where did you acquire this global view? They really have cleaned up the kid from Bracebridge.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, they have. My friend forgets my engineering background starts coming through once in a while.

Mr. Peterson: I liked you better when you were turning back odometers.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I called them speedometers. An odometer, I thought, was something dealt with on those television commercials.

What I am trying to say is that when a company stops taking out a resource such as ore, it is generally because market conditions have forced that. The idea that we can somehow force them to produce it at a loss is not realistic.

We tried quite hard with Marmora, because the ground conditions were almost exactly what the member was describing. It was a predictable end but it came perhaps a year or a year and a half in advance of the predictable end of commercial grade ore. There was a cessation of activities because of lack of demand for the particular ore by the first pelletizing plant ever made in North America to produce a pellet that was only made for a specific plant and no longer needed there.

We tried the product in two or three other mills, but it wouldn't work. The cost of making the pelletizing equipment adaptable to other companies' mills was prohibitive. We simply couldn't do it. Therefore, we had a company maintain a pelletizing operation for a period of time, knowing full well they would never use the pellets, to try to keep their men working until such time as the mandatory time periods ran through. They could have paid them and told them to go home, but they at least brought the stuff up and went through the motions.

Funnily enough, I recall very clearly the day the people from Marmora came in to talk to the committee. I remember the chief of the union saying: "If you expect me to come here and run down the company I have worked for for the last 35 years, you are totally wrong. I will say to them that they treated us fairly. They can leave this community with their heads high. They have left most of the workers in a fair position."

For a man heading a union facing a plant closure, I thought that was as genuine and straightforward a statement as I had ever heard. Some members may have been there the day he said that. It was kind of a man-bites-dog comment, because in this world, where we are so used to management and labour traditionally saying each other is totally incompetent, it was a rare display of unanimity and realization that the company had done all it could.

I don't know what applied in Caland. I would like to hear more of the details. I am sure my colleague the Minister of Natural Resources is aware as to whether Caland has or has not acted as a good corporate citizen or taken the shortest possible route out. That is the kind of thing one needs to know before one comes down in judgement on them. I would assume the member knows whether they have or haven't been, and perhaps he could enlighten me.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I won't spend too much more of the Treasurer's time, but I will say that Nat Scott, the manager, and the management generally of that company have been very good and very community-minded. They have done their best to ensure that the mine operates as long as possible. They are very concerned and always have been. They are very involved in the community, as the Treasurer says. It is very unfortunate this has happened but the problem is that it is not their decision. Their own press release indicated the decision was made in Chicago.

I really believe there is a difference between a mine shutting down or an industry shutting down for a while because of lack of demand and then being in a position to be able to start again when demand comes back or the economy comes back. But we are not dealing with a simple case of demand rising and falling, a fluctuation. We are talking about the ordinary business cycle. We are talking about something going out of business and out of operation prematurely and never coming back into business in the future, because what is going to be there is not going to be economic for anybody to mine. I see a very distinct difference there. However, we will wait and see what the Minister of Natural Resources says in regard to what ore is there.

I want to leave one other thought with the Treasurer because of his stint as Minister of Natural Resources, because of his position as Treasurer and because of his own personal interest—perhaps hobby now, if nothing else—in the tourist business in the Muskokas.

I find it absolutely ludicrous and fatuous that his colleague the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) should get up in this Legislature and go around the province—he was in Sault Ste. Marie last week—handing out Ontario taxpayers' money to the tourist industry, saying, "Expand your facilities; build new plants; build new swimming pools; tennis courts; build new lodges for fishing and hunting," when, at the same time, that government over there allows complete and free access to crown lands in Ontario, for up to 21 days, to anybody who comes across the border.

The situation is simply this: People from Chicago or Wisconsin or, if one likes, Germany—I think somebody mentioned we were trying to get people from Europe—can come here and buy a fishing licence, or maybe a hunting licence. They don't even have to do that if they don't bother fishing. They can camp on crown land anywhere in northern Ontario for nothing, for free.

My friend from London Centre (Mr. Peterson) can put a $1-million lodge on a beautiful lake—on what likely the Treasurer has—and 10 American campers can park right on his boundary line, if it's crown land, set up their tents or trailers and squat there for 21 days at no cost to themselves. It's crazy; it would be absolutely nuts to compete with that kind of thing.

The minister doesn't have that problem in Muskoka, because there is hardly any crown land around there. He has all the goodies he bought a long time ago, all the good crown land. But in northern Ontario—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Ninety-six per cent is mine; four per cent is crown land.

Mr. T. P. Reid: And 96 per cent of the minister's is probably 98 per cent of the bank's, but we won't go into that.

The point is simply this: I cannot understand why we in Ontario are giving away one of the greatest resources we have, the thing that attracts people to our province. The reason for the tourist business, the reason we spend millions of dollars advertising, is to get tourists here and then to part them with as much of that green stuff as possible.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Never would have thought it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well, I think the minister is pretty handy at doing that from what I understand.

The point is simply this: We have these natural resources that we are giving away. Would the minister not agree with me that it makes economic sense, as well as good sense from the point of view of conservation of our resources, that foreign tourists to Ontario be required to stay at licensed tourist resorts, at motels, at hotels, at licensed tourist parks or at provincial parks? Then we are extracting the maximum amount of dollars from them. I mean, it's ridiculous otherwise. There are very few jurisdictions in the United States where people can take their camper trailer, their boat and motor, just pull up anywhere, throw in their boat, fish all they want, camp on the shore and have a lively time without somebody saying, "Excuse me, but there is a $5 or a $10 charge," or whatever it happens to be.

We have been giving this away for years. When are we going to stop? The minister well knows that tourism is our second largest business. Imagine what it would be like if we weren't in competition or if in northern Ontario the people in the business weren't in competition with the Ontario government, which is providing this for nothing.

I am sure the Treasurer is interested in saving money. For the amount of garbage left in the bush—and I don't blame only the tourists—we are spending, if I recall the figures, $5 million a year, or some ridiculous figure, on picking up garbage in the bush.

We could save on conservation measures, because the way it is now, northern Ontario is two thirds the size of the province, but we have one conservation officer for about every 100 square miles, and that's being very generous. So they can't possibly control fishing limits, illegal hunting and all the rest of it. It is the bread and butter of the tourist industry in northern Ontario. If they were required to stay in licensed premises of some kind, the conservation officers could make swings around those places and check their catch or their bag of game to see what they have. Surely that makes sense.

NOTOA passed a resolution, last year, I believe—I think it was their second or third major resolution dealing with the use of crown land. I cannot fathom why the government refuses to deal with it. I would think that the Treasurer, because of the business he's in, would see the validity of it. I would think the Treasurer could also see the somewhat hypocritical stance of the government's saying, "Invest in the tourist business," when it is running a free show next door. It just doesn't make sense. I put that to the Treasurer. Perhaps he would like to comment on that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's a discussion that's much easier to have than to solve. It was a topic of great interest at each NOTOA meeting I attended. The NOTOA people don't make the differentiation most days of the week between Americans and Canadians using crown land. The access to crown land is so easy, and for Canadians it is taken as a right. I am not about to argue whether it is or isn't a right. In fact, the policing of it is a monstrous task. You could have conservation officers almost equal to the number of tourists, and you wouldn't necessarily prevent it.

The honourable member knows they have been working hard, attempting to get access points to crown land and attempting to bring some order. I have always argued that a good many of the kinds of facilities provided by the NOTOA operators simply aren't competing with anyone who wants to rough it. Most of the NOTOA operators are providing comfort as well as a location, in many cases, on crown land. I think the member would have to agree that a great many NOTOA operators are on leased crown land throughout northwestern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What does that have to do with it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well, it is a use of crown land.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I am not saying nobody should use it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No. It's an extremely difficult thing to control. Incidentally, I get letters very often. I don't recall ever getting any from the honourable member when I was Minister of Natural Resources, but that doesn't mean I didn't.

I am arguing the other side of the coin. They would argue vehemently that the Ministry of Natural Resources is removing an illegal occupation of crown land—somebody's hunt camp, or somebody's cabin. The member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) has run into these, without question. They have argued that we have prevented fly-in operators from having a site because somebody else has the site on the lake.

I would say 85 per cent of the stuff that reached my desk was not arguing that there was too easy access, but that we were prohibiting or attempting to manage access. I tell the honourable member, the chaps in Natural Resources would dearly love to have that problem solved. It is probably something that the Minister of Natural Resources must argue.

I will say one thing, and this will probably raise the ire of both honourable members, although I hope only of one. The first thing I did when I became Minister of Natural Resources was raise the amount the province charged for its own camp sites. The reason I did that is based on the very argument the member is putting. Why would a private operator provide the camp sites—they outnumber ours about three to one, I think—that are needed in Ontario if the Ontario government is running them at 50 per cent of his cost?

Mr. T. P. Reid: The logical extension is to do away with the free use of crown land.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't really disagree with the member. I simply tell him that no one has found a way to do it.

[5:30]

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk to the Treasurer about a matter which I briefly referred to before, namely, the whole government procurement program for Ontario. I hope the Treasurer will see it not in the way the Minister of Industry and Tourism saw it in his estimates when I raised it with him a week or so ago. He seemed to think the purpose of the government procurement program was to cost the taxpayers more money in the purchase of goods governments bought. What an outrageous assumption and argument for him to have used.

I am hoping the Treasurer understands a government procurement program has a much broader goal than that. It is part of a package of industrial strategy—and I am sorry, that is the first time I have used that phrase since the estimates started. It is part of an industrial strategy to rebuild particular sectors and to encourage Canadian industry. The government policy in Ontario is lacking. Indeed, it is very sad.

I was doing some background work on government procurement and some of the policies one can implement and I came across a report prepared for the department of communications, national telecommunications branch, industrial resources division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and for the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. This is dated June 1978. The purpose of the report is "an economic justification for payment of a procurement premium." That study selected a particular sector, if the Treasurer isn't aware of it, and they picked communications equipment. This is what they said in their executive summary:

"In this study, the objective is to encourage Canadian domestic industry and the method is to purchase its products even though the prices may be higher than those of imported products. The study focuses on the extent to which the government is justified, on economic grounds, in paying a higher price for a Canadian-produced commodity. More particularly, the study develops a method of computing just how much extra the government should be willing to pay for a Canadian commodity. This is based on identification of and, as far as possible, quantification of the benefits and costs associated with such a purchase under current economic conditions."

They use communications equipment partly because it is an advanced technology and there is a high degree of labour content in it as well. That was the sector they picked. They concluded that if all of the ingredients were there, everything fit in—a high degree of labour content, a high technology component, a regional aspect, everything that would benefit the country—that the government could actually provide a 76 per cent advantage, or pay 76 per cent more for a Canadian product and still have net benefits to Canada.

Nobody is saying to the Treasurer that means we have a procurement policy that goes from the present 10 per cent level up to 76 per cent. That is not what I am saying. I am saying the present procurement policy of the Ontario government is inadequate and 10 per cent is simply not a figure you can justify.

They go further to say in their conclusions: "Current procurement policies and practices of the Canadian government were presented and the domestic practices were demonstrably more open than foreign ones. Since domestic businessmen are thwarted when they try to sell in foreign markets, they begin to question why foreign suppliers have relatively free access here.

"Although the current 10 per cent premium appears to be ineffective in changing purchases from foreign to domestic sources; it has some public relations value. The figure of 10 per cent appears to have been arbitrarily chosen so we were drawn to making a better estimate of a premium justified on economic grounds which might be more effective."

What they are saying is the 10 per cent level is arbitrary and it is not a sophisticated analysis of what a good procurement policy is all about.

I go on and I quote: "The premium is justified using a benefit-cost approach. The general component based on taking up slack in the economy is applicable to the whole class of communications procurements. This general premium was evaluated at 76 per cent of the import or duty-free price in the case of a straight choice between a domestic and an imported good and expression for the percentage premium was obtained which permitted selection when faced with many different goods with different fractions of domestic content."

I only raise that study with the Treasurer to indicate to him the present procurement policy is not something this government should hang its hat on. There is nothing magical about the 10 per cent figure. It is just an arbitrary figure, just as any other figure would be an arbitrary one. I would like to raise a couple of specific issues. One we've been through a number of times in this chamber. When the Peel region put out tenders for a waste recovery plant, the only bidder was Grumman Ecosystems of New York. Three Canadian companies could have bid on that but didn't. The reason they didn't was the particularly difficult specifications and so forth. They felt they were behind the eightball to start.

Even though the Ministry of the Environment is putting $10 million into this project, the government sat back and watched this happen. It didn't go to the industry, select the three companies that were capable of working on this and say to them: "We'll work with you. We'll form a consortium with you and help you prepare a bid for this project."

Waste recovery is a natural for the future. It's high technology; it's something that is not in place in this country, let alone the province. It would have given the domestic industry a foothold in that very important industry for the future, but the government sat back and did absolutely nothing. Despite all sorts of proddings from this side of the House, it did absolutely nothing. That's intolerable.

The other issue I'd like to raise has also been raised in this House. It has to do with Microfilm Recording Company Limited, MRC for short. It's a company that produces microfilm readers. Established in 1949, they now employ 22 people in the plant and eight in putting documents on microfilm. The research and development for the product is done here. Aluminum is the key material and that is purchased from Alcan. The lens is bought in Japan but the other component parts are supplied from Canadian firms. They manufacture 6,000 readers a year.

To give you an example of what can happen with a Canadian company like that, last year they learned that the John Deere company in the United States was going to make a large order for Bell and Howell microfilm readers. It was for about 2,500 readers. The company in the States had decided to buy an extra 800 from the John Deere subsidiary here in Canada.

MRC talked to the Canadian subsidiary of John Deere and showed them they could save $90,000 if they bought from MRC here in Ontario, and they did. But do you see the problem? It's a beautiful example of what happens in a branch plant economy, which is a problem that the Treasurer chooses to ignore. They simply are an extension of policies there. That's one side of the problem.

MRC found out the federal government buys a couple of thousand of these readers every year. Last year, according to them, the federal government spent $998,000 on readers of which MRC, the only Canadian producer, received orders worth $175. Last fall they sent a letter to the federal government and to the provincial government trying to get a response from them.

Actually, they were quite pleased with the initial response from this government. They were given someone to contact in each of the ministries in Ontario. MRC wrote a letter to each one of them. Do you know what? They received no acknowledgement from the individual ministries. In 1978, they bid on tenders put out by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and the Ministry of Revenue. They lost the bids.

They could live with losing a bid but they didn't even get the courtesy of a letter giving a reason why they had lost the bid. Nobody even bothered to tell them, "We're sorry you lost it." They had to phone in for the results of the tender. You know what they were told? They were told, though not in writing, they were turned down because the company was unknown. Isn't that great? Isn't that a great procurement policy for the Ontario government? That's not how you rebuild the manufacturing sector in this country.

Anyway, the problem is the Ontario government has a tendering policy that's unacceptable. It has a tendering list. If you're not on that list, that's too bad.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is not so.

Mr. Laughren: That's exactly what happened. They're not on the tendering list because they're unknown.

I would like to know how you become known. They got on two of the tendering lists; they got on the Treasury's and Attorney General's. I've made the Treasurer's day, he didn't even know that, but they're on the list.

The trouble is that when the tenders go out, do you know what they say? There's one from the Ministry of the Environment; it is on the call for tenders, I quote: "To provide price and delivery for equipment as follows, or similar substitute, Bell and Howell computer microfiche reader." Well, there you are. Would the Treasurer tell us what he thinks about using as the example a Bell and Howell reader, rather than one made here in Canada?

Here is another one, Government Services; the call for tender for three microfiche readers and these are the specs: "Electrical standard 120 volt 50/60 cycle AC, Micron 78 microfiche reader or approved equivalent." That's an American manufactured reader used as a model again; so guess who has the inside track? The one that is listed, obviously.

Here's another one: "Micron 785 microfiche reader, or approved equivalent." These are actual quotations from the ministries over there. It has been raised in this chamber and you never do anything about it. You tell me how that makes sense as a government procurement policy when, first of all, you don't put the Canadian company on the tendering list, the automatic blanket or tendering lists; and second, you allow your own ministries to use a foreign produced or manufactured product as the standard by which all others are measured. What kind of procurement policy is that?

It's bad enough that your 10 per cent policy isn't working, it's worse when you exacerbate the problem. So I would sure like to hear the Treasurer's response on those two examples: the Peel region waste recovery plant and on the Microfilm Recording Company's attempts to sell to its own government.

Hon. F. S. Miller: On the Peel region, I am not qualified to give you an answer. I understood we discussed it already in these estimates. The Minister of the Environment did answer your question; I think I should leave the answer with him.

On the other matter I have no idea what the other side of the story is. If the facts are as you stated, obviously some effort needs to be taken on our part to make sure the Canadian company is named and is accepted. I will be glad to have my colleagues check on that to see whether we can't help.

We have been doing just the opposite, where it came to trying to get acceptance of Canadian companies through the EDF program. I know for a fact MIT has worked very hard to make sure that if a part or a piece of machinery was available within Canada, unknown to the potential buyer, at least they acted as a broker for bringing the companies together so the sales people for the Canadian vendor would have a chance to display their equipment.

Over the years I acted as a salesman, very often I ran into specifications that frustrated me. It's easy to say they have some international intrigue. Most of the times I found there was better salesmanship. I hate to admit it.

When I sold paints I was forever running into one company, specified by almost every architect in this province. I would go in with my company that had been Canadian, in Brantford, since time began and they would say, "We know this company. They call on us regularly. We've got their colour codes, we've got their books, we know what they mean when they say this and we know what they mean when they say that."

So I have to admit that's one company—and it always said "so-and-so or equivalent"—that had done an excellent sales job. It was an American company, although every bit of the product that was used here was made in Canada. As I recall, we import virtually no paint across the border. We export a wee bit, but we don't import an awful lot into Canada, if my stats are right, simply because it's a product that doesn't justify transporting too far and is relatively easily made. [5:45]

Now that I'm no longer in the paint business—

Mr. Laughren: You painted used cars?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I painted used cars, yes.

Mr. Worton: I bet you could sell it now, Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I could sell it now, from my new position.

I would have to say that while I chewed away at the company and wondered why they got all the business, they were probably doing a better job than I was and I hated to admit it as long as I was out there.

Mr. Laughren: Has the minister missed the point entirely on what I'm trying to say to him?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm a bit thick.

Mr. Laughren: No, no. I didn't say you were thick. I said I think you missed the point. Why you missed the point is maybe because you're thick, but I didn't say that.

The point is, only his ministry and the Attorney General's have put this company on its tender blanket list. Nobody else has.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I told you I'm going to check. I'm going to check.

Mr. Laughren: I didn't hear him say that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's because you're a bit thick.

Mr. Conway: I understand these estimates are being dealt with in a more or less general fashion.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Gentlemanly too up until now.

Mr. Conway: And in a gentlemanly fashion. I thought I would accept the invitation of my friend from London Centre to make a few general observations about the economic policies of the government.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Stop at two minutes to six. I have a dinner in Ottawa.

Mr. Conway: I would be happy to stop at two minutes to six.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have to be in Ottawa.

Mr. Conway: You're due in Ottawa, are you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm due in Ottawa for supper.

Mr. Conway: That's perhaps a good point at which to begin my remarks because it is the Ottawa connection that is of some interest to me with respect to the economic policy of this government. With 10 or so minutes I shall try to say a few things in the federal-provincial area with respect to economic policy and make one or two comments on the eastern Ontario situation.

I must say, as a private member I have been somewhat dismayed to receive so little mail by way of press releases and speech-giving from the incumbent of the Treasurer's chair relative to what we were accustomed to in the halcyon days of the Duke of Kent.

Mr. Laughren: Are you complaining about it?

Mr. Conway: I'm complaining, yes, because I used to read—

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's because I give speeches without a script.

Mr. Conway: I can tell the Treasurer that I, for one, as a nonfinancial person, used to read the utterances of the previous Treasurer, such as they were, with a great deal of interest. My involvement with health matters really made me more interested than I had been earlier. I was somewhat chagrined to find so little in my mail box from this Treasurer. It may be he speaks off the cuff and with much less preparation than did his predecessor.

I was talking to a friend of mine who works in the federal administration in Ottawa not too long ago and she said, as only an economist can say about these matters, it was really interesting now working for Sinclair Stevens because one got the distinct impression that Ontario counted for ever so much less. She said, "When Darcy used to come to town we had a feeling that next to the federal Minister of Finance, the Ontario Treasurer counted"—as my leader has said repeatedly—"as the second most important financial spokesman in the country." From where I sit, that certainly seems to be the case in so far as this Treasurer has not undertaken to maintain the same kind of profile and the same kind of leadership position his immediate predecessor seems to enjoy.

In that connection, I must say it disturbs me no little bit to see Ontario's position in the general leadership of economic and financial policy in the state it is today. I did, as I know many members did, watch the first ministers' conference of some days ago when the oil pricing question was being discussed. I was alarmed to see the results of that particular negotiation.

I just want to say one thing to the Treasurer, because I see his role as being very compatible with the first minister's in these matters.

There could be no question the Premier of this province is right when he says the oil-pricing arrangement presently being discussed is the vital economic issue, not only for the country but for the federalism that keeps us together. In response to the federal position, the Ontario Premier is reported to have said that Joe Clark's energy position threatens the very economic fabric of Confederation. I agree wholeheartedly. If the deal being talked of today in Ottawa between Messrs. Clark, Hnatyshyn, Leitch, Loughheed and, to a lesser degree, Blakeney, is carried forward, as was suggested in the Toronto Star last week, the country is in a very serious condition.

I have only one political response to the Treasurer and to the Premier. What we're getting from Mr. Clark and Mr. Hnatyshyn is nothing which could not have been predicted, given the various speeches they made before and during the recent federal election contest. What I must say to this Treasurer and certainly to his first minister is really only one basic political thing: Either this government and its leadership in particular supported their federal Conservative friends without knowing where they stood on the pre-eminent issue of the day, in which case they are to be indicted politically and, hopefully, immediately. Or, more seriously, the Premier and to a lesser degree, but not to be absolved, the Treasurer, campaigned actively for their federal friends, knowing what they were going to do with oil pricing, but saying nothing about it. That too, is very condemnable.

Mr. Laughren: You campaigned for the Liberals without knowing—

Mr. Conway: I did know exactly where my federal friends stood on the question of oil pricing. I must say I did not get the impression that our friends across the way had the same appreciation. They campaigned actively.

Interjection.

Mr. Conway: I'm glad to see my friend the member for Durham West, whose fulminations before the resources committee some months ago about a veiled War Measures Act are not being repeated now, as my friend from Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) said when that "very veiled" War Measures Act—to use his phrase—was proclaimed by his friends in Ottawa. I just want to say that you can't have it both ways. I certainly expect to make some political remarks in this connection over the next few weeks and months.

I have one final point in that regard. The Premier and the Treasurer make the point very well that the Ontario position is one of clarity and, to some degree, it can be understood now from the various presentations made by the Minister of Energy and the Premier. They are looking about for support in that particular regard.

One thing I have not heard from the Treasurer or from the Premier is an undertaking to confront personally the 58 federal Conservative members representing Ontario in the Clark caucus in Ottawa, whose silence on this matter of vital national interest has been, to say the least, stunning and consistent. I must say I would be very appreciative if the Treasurer would give an undertaking to go to Ottawa, or Peterborough or wherever, to meet with the 58 federal Tories and to elicit from them a commitment of where they see the Ontario interest. It would be useful knowing whether or not the Premier and his cabinet can get an agreement from their 58 friends representing Ontario in Ottawa in this connection. Do they—Messrs. Darling, Finnell and 56 others—agree with the Ontario position as stated by Messrs. Miller, Davis and Welch, et al? Do they? If so, let's hear it. If they don't, let's hear that as well. I must observe that their silence has been very noticeable from where I stand.

In talking about Ottawa, and I'm speaking now from the point of view of a member for eastern Ontario, does the Treasurer remember—as I know my colleagues from London Centre, Essex North and Wellington South will—that Joe Clark and Bill Davis campaigned for the federal Tory cause, which was "to get Canada moving again"?

Mr. Ruston: It's in reverse.

Mr. Conway: Do you know what we found in eastern Ontario as to this federal administration's policy with respect to getting Canada moving again? The first prize we won in their new lottery was to hear from the federal Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Atkey, that Canada winter works would go forward, but Ontario would be stripped of its previous place in that program.

In that program, $22.35 million was allocated to this province last winter to alleviate the very serious seasonal unemployment that afflicts not only areas like my own county of Renfrew, but many other counties and districts in this province. In our area, we have received $150,000 for the county generally and that was appreciated because it did alleviate the double-digit unemployment of the area I represent.

I haven't heard any comment from this Treasurer in that connection. I would like to know, before these estimates are concluded what, if any, replacement strategies he has to supply programs for areas now devoid of moneys which they previously obtained through the Canada winter works program. Canada is, indeed, on the move again but, unfortunately, if we are to judge from some of this federal administration's commitment to the Ontario jurisdiction, the move is unhappily downward.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to—

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is the second, "Finally."

Mr. Conway: I don't think a 12- or 14-minute contribution from a private member to these ongoing debates is overdone. I just want to conclude by suggesting—

Mr. Laughren: A private member; are you a member of the Liberal Party or aren't you?

Mr. Conway: A private member in these debates, and I know my friend from Nickel Belt has a much greater status than I can ever hope to enjoy.

Mr. Laughren: No, no.

Mr. Conway: Last Wednesday, the government of Ontario announced at long last that it was going to name the new chairman for the Renfrew county task force on economic development, a replacement appointment that has been literally begged for by various municipal leaders and county councils over these past months.

It is certainly demeaning, because we were offered a strategy back in the McKeough days of 1976. It is a nice document that represents the umpteenth report for what this government is going to do to alleviate the serious and structural economic problems that afflict an area such as the one that I represent.

Unfortunately, we still do not have anything but a press release and I know my friend from Nickel Belt will share my concern and abhorrence about this. The Minister of Industry and Tourism says that he will give us a new chairman, but he wants us to know we had better not get our hopes up too high because the Treasurer and the government of Ontario are in a period of restraint and we had better not expect too much; that the Renfrew county economic development scheme probably will not take place over anything less than quite a few years. In other words, "Out there in places like Arnprior and Eganville and Cobden and elsewhere, we really think you are second-rate." They don't have the courtesy to come forward with not only a replacement for the late chairman at an earlier time, but a clear indication of what kinds of strategies this provincial government is going to offer the people of Renfrew county.

What does the Treasurer have in so far as immediate and intermediate economic priorities that he is prepared to discuss and prepared to fund? I am sick and tired of studies piled up on studies piled on reports. The time has long since passed for some concrete commitment to the people of Renfrew county, a commitment that will deal with the double-digit unemployment in many of those communities, a commitment which I think has been earned by their in many ways ongoing political commitment to this particular government party. I would certainly like to hear from both the Minister of Treasury and his colleague in Industry and Tourism as to what specific commitments—the funding arrangements and the strategies—are going to be offered to the people I represent, who have, unfortunately, been fed a diet of neglect for too long. I think the time has come for some concrete action and I await the Treasurer's response to that particular concern.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells, the committee of supply reported progress.

The House recessed at 6:02 p.m.

APPENDIX

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

MINISTRY ADVERTISING

357. Mr. Makarchuk: 1. What was the total advertising budget for all of the ministries of the government of the province of Ontario for the year 1978-79? 2. What percentage of the total advertising budget was allocated to the ethnic press? 3. What criteria were used for the allocation of advertising budgets to the various ethnic publications and media? 4. What advertising agencies deal with the ethnic media? 5. What percentage of ethnic media advertising is done by Foster Advertising? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Grossman: 1. The total advertising budget for all of the ministries of the government, as reported by the agency of record for the fiscal year April 1, 1978, to March 31, 1979, was $12,691,566.*

2. The percentage of the total advertising budget allocated to the ethnic press was 3.2 per cent, ethnic television 0.7 per cent, and ethnic radio 1.6 per cent.

3. See answer to question 310 [page 4083, November 1, 1979].

4. All enfranchised advertising agencies listed in Canadian Advertising Rates and Data (CARD) have the capability of dealing with the ethnic media as part of their service to their clients.

5. As agency of record for the government of Ontario, Foster Advertising is responsible for purchasing all ethnic media advertising on behalf of ministries, boards and commissions of the government, based on each ministry's approved media selection.

Foster Advertising is also responsible for co-ordinating and executing the Government Information/Communication Program (GI/CP) and "Ontario 20" ethnic advertising program through the Ministry of Industry and Tourism which accounts for 56 per cent of the Ontario government's total ethnic press expenditures, 97 per cent of total ethnic television expenditures, and 9.4 per cent of total ethnic radio expenditures for the fiscal year 1978-79.

*This figure includes advertising expenditures of the Ontario Lottery Corporation of $6,205,315.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CHILD WELFARE ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved second reading of Bill 162, An Act to amend the Child Welfare Act, 1978.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, my opening remarks on the bill before us will be very brief. I may have some response to the honourable members opposite when they have completed their remarks.

Basically the amendments before the House do not result in any change in principle from the amending act proclaimed in June of this year. They arise rather out of some issues that resulted from judicial interpretation of some of the sections included in the earlier amendments and that have given rise to some difficulty and delays as a result. It is our intention to introduce these amendments primarily with a view to tightening up in some cases the definitions in the act or certain sections so it more clearly reflects the original intention and eliminates some of the problems that have resulted from judicial interpretation.

I suppose the one most commonly known to the honourable members is the one relating to the definition of a parent and the difficulties created with respect to notification of putative fathers. I think perhaps, as the honourable members will recognize, that is addressed specifically here along with a number of other minor amendments that might well be described as housekeeping.

Mr. Blundy: I have gone over the bill and the explanation for the various amendments being suggested. I agree, as the minister says, there is no change being suggested to change the principle of the bill or the main intent of the bill.

I have discussed several of the amendments with people who are active in the family court and in child welfare cases even in my own constituency and I find they have already had problems with two of the areas of suggested change.

I believe the amendment defining the parent more specifically is certainly a much-needed amendment. That particularly is one in which I have had some personal involvement with a constituent.

I just can't think of any other particular section of the amendments I feel are not reasonable and proper. I would suggest that we support the amendments put forth.

Mr. McClellan: I will try to avoid provoking the bat. I assume it's a Tory bat that has been brought in here to plague and torment us as all Tory things are.

I rise on behalf of our caucus to support Bill 162. I do want to make a few brief remarks. I gather part of the problem that has led to this bill being introduced has been errors or sins of omission or commission in the drafting. We are pleased to approve the necessary drafting changes without any further ado.

I do remain somewhat puzzled as to how on earth the courts could come to some of the interpretations they seem to have come to. I do want to ask a question, even if rhetorically, because one of the amendments deals with the issue of the unified family court. The old Child Welfare Act read, "Judge," unless otherwise indicated, means a provincial judge presiding in a provincial court (family division) or in the unified family court." The ministry has felt it necessary to amend that so that it reads, "Judge," unless otherwise indicated, means a provincial judge presiding in a provincial court (family division) or a judge presiding in the unified family court."

I don't understand how there could be any confusion or ambiguity about that. I hope and pray that kind of confusion or ambiguity about such a basic simple, elementary matter hasn't caused confusion within our family court. Perhaps the minister can clarify that, because if the situation is that there is that kind of discombobulation in reading a simple sentence in the Child Welfare Act, it makes one want to scream.

I may be misunderstanding the situation entirely and I welcome the minister's clarification. I don't understand how section 1(e) in the Child Welfare Act, which was proclaimed last June, could be misinterpreted.

The fact that it's necessary to refer at all in the legislation to the particular circumstance of the particular unified family court in the particular city of Hamilton prompts me to ask the minister how long it is going to be before the government proceeds with the rest of its reforms to the family court and establishes the unified family court across the province. The question is, when has a pilot project ceased to be a pilot project for this government? The answer seems to be never, that pilot projects remain pilot projects forever and ever, amen. They never make the transition from successful demonstration to implementation on a province-wide basis.

That is why we have to deal with the silly little amendment to section 1(e). The reason is the government hasn't had the foresight or wisdom to proceed to extend the success of the unified family court across the province. Nevertheless, why should we quibble about section 1(e)? We will support the amendment.

The change with respect to a definition of child again is something we are pleased to support because it permits the provision of service to children who have passed their 16th birthday while they are in the care or protection of a children's aid society. That was a matter we had raised when we were doing a clause by clause study of the Child Welfare Act last fall. We had thought we had drafting that covered that contingency. We were pleased to refine the drafting so we could ensure the children who passed their 16th birthday were not cut off service, if that service had been commenced prior to the 16th birthday.

Third, we support the changes with respect to the definition of "parent," although again I would like some understanding from the minister as to the nature of the confusion in interpreting the definition of "parent" under the existing drafting of the new Child Welfare Act. In his background statement dated October 18, 1979—a description of the amendments, and the purpose and explanation of each of the amendments prepared by the children's services division—there is a section that deals with the change in definition of "parent," and it reads:

"The definition as presently drafted has been interpreted to include all biological parents. This has created major problems. For example, agencies are being required to search for and notify all persons who had sexual intercourse with an unwed mother during a possible period of conception, even though the relationship with the mother was very brief."

I don't understand how it is possible to come to that interpretation of "parent" under the old definition of the Child Welfare Act. To the extent it is possible, I would ask the minister if he could elaborate a little bit on particulars of difficulties that have arisen within the family court. Perhaps he can tell us the number of cases that have been put off the rails because of the problem with the definition of "parent" as we had passed it and as we proclaimed in June and illustrate it with some examples.

I find myself mystified as to how it would be possible for the court to take the kind of interpretation that is set out in your background document. Nevertheless, we are pleased to support the definitions that are presented before us tonight.

I understand a number of adoption cases have been held up for prolonged periods of time because of the interpretation taken by judges that the new act requires notification of—who, I am not sure. I gather, from the background statement, that even the putative father who has not acknowledged paternity is required to be notified. That is the basis of my confusion.

I would be concerned if a court could read the Child Welfare Act and come to the conclusion that a putative father who had not acknowledged paternity was required to receive notice, either under a protection hearing or, more importantly, under an adoption hearing. That seems to be bizarre in the extreme. If it is the case that judges are taking that kind of a bizarre interpretation, I would think that would be a matter the minister would want to communicate to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) so he could incorporate the problem in his next training manual.

I don't know whether I am being unnecessarily harsh, but I would like to have some understanding of the precise nature of the difficulty that the definition seems to have been creating. I would like, as well, to know the number of adoption cases that are hanging fire as a result of this apparent necessity to notify anybody who ever had a relationship of any kind whatsoever with the child or the child's mother.

Having said that, I want to say I am particularly pleased that there is a grandfather clause in this act that—is that a bad pun?

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's the extent of it.

Mr. McClellan: There is a transitional clause in section 6 of the bill in front of us that permits the new bill to apply to adoptions initiated since June 15. I think that's a very welcome measure and applaud the ministry for it and express the hope that adoptions hanging fire can be completed as expeditiously as possible when this bill is passed. A number of colleagues have expressed concerns to me as a result of their own constituency casework about adoptions delayed because of this new, seemingly universal, requirement to notify people prior to the completion of the adoption transactions.

Finally, and a matter of particular concern I had talked about when we were doing clause by clause, I'm pleased to see the amendments to section 5 subsections 2 and 3 that, I hope, make sure the issue of consent is dealt with before an adoption placement is actually made.

Mr. Speaker, the minister will probably recall I had expressed some real concern because of the six-month period in the adoption during which a child is placed with adoptive parents on a trial basis before the adoption is finalized. We want to make sure in our legislation the issue of consent to adoption by the birth parent has been adequately disposed of before a child is actually placed on trial in an adopting home.

We had thought the ministry had given us a drafting that took care of that. We have learned subsequently such is not the case. I can only express the hope that this time we have the right wording. I can't think of anything more damaging to a child or adopting parents than to have an adoption placement made on a trial basis and then discover the consent issue has not been completed or improperly dealt with so, after five months, the child has to be removed from the adopting home and placed back either in a kind of limbo or God knows what.

I don't need to go through any more details. I did just want to comment on those five points. I do want to say something very briefly about adoptions in general because this act does touch on a number of aspects of the adoption process.

We have gone through a major re-examination and re-enactment of the Child Welfare Act and dealt with a number of sections. But one of the sections we did not deal with as a legislature and one of the sections not dealt with substantially as a ministry was the adoption section. I want to suggest to the minister before much more time passes, and certainly before he begins any detailed work on the omnibus children's bill, this ministry has an obligation to undertake a major systematic review of Ontario's adoption program.

I have a sense of unease about our adoption program because I don't think we know very much about it. I don't think we know who is adopted—what kind of children, from what kinds of backgrounds, are placed for adoption. I don't think we know very much about the reasons why children are placed for adoption. I don't think we know very much about what kind of people adopt children. I don't think we know about the success rate of our adoption program. I don't think we know very much about how many adoptions are successful, how many are unsuccessful and what we mean by those terms. I don't think we even know.

I don't think we know how many adoptions break down and what happens to the children where adoptions break down. I could go on and on, but I don't think I need to. The minister probably understands very clearly what I'm talking about. We've been running the adoption program almost—not quite, but almost—let's say semi-consciously. We know there are people who want children. We know there are people who don't appear to be able to keep their children. So the ministry has stepped into this supply-demand equation and has facilitated the movement of children from the supply equation to the demand equation. But I am not sure we know very clearly what it is we are doing.

I would like the ministry to undertake a systematic review, pulling together all of the information we have on file around the province and within the ministry about the nature of our adoption program so we can take a cold, hard look at who is benefiting from adoption and what the disadvantages are, and the success and the failures. Let us understand very clearly what the nature of the exercise is before we get to the stage of being asked to deal with the omnibus children's bill.

I think that would be a useful exercise for the ministry and for the children's services division. I will be prodding the minister from time to time to encourage him to do this.

Mr. Conway: He needs to be prodded.

Mr. McClellan: He needs to be prodded.

It is long overdue. I don't think there has ever been this kind of thorough analysis of the program. I repeat, it is long overdue and the minister needs to get to work on it.

I want to make a final comment, which will be even briefer than brief. We have another piece of the Child Welfare Act in front of us dealing with virtually all sections of the act. The problem remains, this ministry does not commit sufficient resources to children's aid societies to permit them to fulfil their responsibilities under the legislation we have passed. We are faced with a government steadfastly refusing to provide our children's aid societies with the budget they need to do the job the law requires them to do.

The minister will probably continue to pretend he has funded them at an adequate level. I will continue to insist, as do virtually all of the children's aid societies and almost everybody in the children's services field, that the minister is playing a dangerous and unfair game with children's aid societies. It is not tolerable for us to pass laws which increase their burden of responsibilities and at the same time constrain their budgets to levels below the rate of inflation so the purchasing power of their dollar is eroded in real terms.

Mr. Speaker: What section of the bill is that, please?

Mr. McClellan: These are, as I said, my concluding remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Extraneous remarks.

Mr. McClellan: I don't think they were extraneous. The amendments deal with all aspects of the Child Welfare Act and we as legislators have an obligation to ourselves and, as critics, to the government to point out when and where the government is imposing legal obligations, as it does in this statute here in my hand on children's aid societies, without providing them the wherewithal to do their job. This minister has done precisely that to his everlasting shame.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, now that I can rise and speak in safety since the member for Bellwoods has apparently put our guest on the curtain to sleep, I will take a few moments to respond specifically.

Mr. McClellan: I put the bat to sleep.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, but you weren't here earlier. He crossed the House. He started out over on that side.

First of all, I would like to express my thanks to the honourable members opposite for their support and co-operation in enabling us to bring in during this session these necessary amendments to the Child Welfare Act. The member for Bellwoods and the member for Sarnia have raised a number of relevant questions about the underlying need for these amendments at this time.

As has been pointed out, the bills were given a great deal of consideration, and very careful scrutiny, especially in committee last fall. We thought at that point we had arrived at a drafting of a bill that would avoid the kinds of difficulties that have subsequently emerged.

In response to the member for Bellwood's specific question relating to the reason for the change in the definition of a judge, I might point out that probably that section is one where we did overlook a drafting error. As the section previously appeared, it defined a judge, unless otherwise indicated, as meaning a provincial judge presiding in the provincial court or in the unified family court. The technicality there is that provincial judges do not sit in the unified family court. I'm not sure that has at this point created any serious problem, but it was something which was spotted after the legislation was passed.

With regard to the member's concern—and I suppose this is really a question that ought more properly to be addressed by the Attorney General—about the timing of the further implementation of the unified family court system across the province, in the absence of the Attorney General, I will simply point out the pilot project the member referred to was established, as I understand it, for a three-year period. That three-year period will be expiring in June or July of next year. At least that's my understanding, unless my information is incorrect.

I believe it is fair to say the Attorney General is addressing himself to that. The member might specifically wish to raise that question with him.

Mr. McClellan: So might the minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would simply prefer he answer the question than that I attempt to.

As to the problem that arose with respect to parent, one could go through a whole series of specific examples of the problem that arose there. I guess the simplest explanation of it is that if one looks at the original definition, the definition in the act as passed in June, the definition begins by saying "parent includes." Because of the word "includes," the interpretation that was given to that was that the definition which followed was not exhaustive. It included all parents and the specifics were illustrative rather than exhaustive.

Mr. Conway: Restrictive and exhaustive.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'm not sure. Does that make sense? If one looks at the present amendment which we're dealing with tonight, it begins "parent means." We're hoping that will eliminate the problem that has given rise to the kind of situation where in one instance, I am led to believe, there has been a case where a mother who was before the court was asked who the father of the child was. She was only able to identify him to the extent it might be one of three persons residing in another province.

There was some suggestion by the judge that all three possible parents would have to be served because, from the definition of parent to include putative fathers, the judge did not feel restricted by the words in the definition which followed the use of the word "includes." So he included all possible or potential putative fathers. We hope this minor change will eliminate that.

The other kinds of problems that have arisen relate to the question of, for example, the original definition where it says, "a person who is not recognized in law to be the parent of the child but has acknowledged a parental relationship to the child and has voluntarily provided for the child's care and support."

The type of difficulty that arose there, and resulted in the change to limit that or to some acknowledgement, is within the 12-month period prior to the child being before the court for the purpose of adoption in some instances the court felt that if in, for example, the first year of a child's life there had been a partner in the home who had expressed some interest in the child and, for that period of time, has settled intent to treat the child as theirs, even though the relationship might have terminated before the age of one and the child was before the court at age 12, that because there had been an expression of interest and a parent's settled intent in the first year of the child's life, that an effort had to be made to find that individual and to serve him with notice, even though there had been 11 years following when no such interest was demonstrated.

Although, as the member has indicated, last fall we all felt the drafting was clear, the literal interpretation that was applied has resulted in our recognizing some weaknesses in the drafting.

The member asked specifically whether we had any idea as to how many cases of adoption had been delayed by this. Our current estimate is it is in excess of 200. I can't give him a specific figure down to the last one, but it's a serious situation. That's one of the reasons why I'm so appreciative of the member's co-operation in getting these amendments through.

Regarding the member's concluding remarks with respect to adoption generally and the concerns he raised with respect to the adoption system in the province, first of all, I would indicate we are looking at adoption as a whole with a view to the development of the omnibus bill. I would like to assure the member we also have some research under way on adoption, particularly relating to issues like adoption breakdown. I would be pleased to have my staff share with him a summary of that research if that might assist. If he has further suggestions or concern we might incorporate in those considerations, we'd be glad to do that, or at least to discuss those with him.

I think that addresses most of the concerns that have been raised by the members. That's all I have to add.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Miss Stephenson moved second reading of Bill 170, An Act to amend the Education Act, 1974.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening comment?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No.

Mrs. Campbell: No?

Mr. Sweeney: I have no difficulty with the general principle of the bill. However, there are a couple of issues and questions which I would like to raise before we give it full approval for second reading.

Section 1 of the bill is certainly acceptable because it gives school boards greater flexibility as to where they may invest their money. I have serious doubts about whether they're going to have very much surplus money to invest anyway, so I don't think we need to be overly concerned about that.

Section 2 raises a question which is not described in the descriptive material given to us ahead of time. If I may draw it to the minister's attention, perhaps she can tell me why.

Under the existing section 205(1)(d) of the Education Act there is a reference in section 1(1)(33)(vii) to funds. It refers to payments or contributions for past service pensions to a pension plan for officers and other employees of the board. For some reason I don't understand, it has been eliminated from this particular bill. It has just been left out, and there is nothing to explain why it has been left out. I assume there has to be some reason for it. When the minister makes her comments afterwards, perhaps she can explain why that has been done because I can't see any reason for its having been done.

I have a question with respect to section 2. Since the main reason for the change is that the government is going to be getting out of the debenture and mortgage business; since up until this particular point in time the ministry and the government have been buying debentures from the school boards through the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corporation; and since there was some indication from the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) when the budget was brought down that the government will be selling some of its mortgages and debentures, I would ask the minister whether or not this also means those debentures held by the ministry and the government from the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corporation will also be sold and, if so, what impact this might have upon school boards.

With respect to section 3, the point there is to change the funding balance between residential and commercial from 90 per cent down to 85 per cent. I would gather the implication which necessarily follows is that if the same amount of money is going to be raised locally, then the commercial tax source is going to have to pick up a greater portion of the load. That is the only implication that flows from that, quite obviously. The question which then flows from that is what are the implications for commercial taxpayers with respect to their share of the education tax? I would imagine the minister and the government have thought that one through as well and I wish they would share it with me.

The last point I would make is I notice most of the sections of this bill are to bring it into line with provisions in the Municipal Act. I would ask the minister why she didn't take this opportunity also to bring into line with the Municipal Act the citizenship requirement for school trustees versus municipal councillors.

The minister is probably aware of the fact that recently in the region of Durham a school trustee from the separate board and one from the public board had to vacate their seats because they were British subjects rather than Canadian citizens. Apparently, the confusion arose because when they checked with the municipal clerk he said the same provision applied in the Municipal Act and the Education Act, and of course that is not true. Somewhere along the line if we are going through the process of trying to make the Education Act and the Municipal Act run parallel, then this would have been an obvious opportunity to do that as well.

I realize it is not the Education Act that has to be changed, it is the Municipal Act that has to be changed. The point I am making is if the minister would use her influence with her colleague in cabinet to get that change in the Municipal Act, we would have them parallel.

Mr. Boushall: Mr. Speaker, this caucus supports wholeheartedly sections 1 and 3 of this bill. Section 1 expands the number of places where boards can invest moneys not immediately required by them. Here again, unless it is a sale of school properties—and we hope not too many of those are sold; we hope we keep our schools open across the province and not close them at the rate suggested by the regional offices to the minister, as we heard a couple of weeks ago; elementary schools closing at the rate of one per week over the next five years. We hope this doesn't occur. They won't have large sums for investment but it does expand the places where they can invest the money to promissory notes of a municipality as defined by the Municipal Affairs Act into term deposits accepted by credit unions, as defined in the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires Act.

This expansion is, of course, a positive one. They may not have moneys to put there, unless from the sale of school properties which I hope will not occur to the extent anticipated. Certainly it is a positive step forward and I would support the investment of moneys in credit unions in particular. It would be very reasonable for the Windsor Board of Education, for example, to invest any moneys not immediately needed in the Windsor Teachers' Credit Union, to which virtually all the teachers in the Windsor board belong.

I would like to ask the minister if she is aware of any restrictions at all on which credit union moneys can be placed on term deposits.

There isn't? Fine. I am glad to hear that. Or caisses populaires?

I know there certainly are in terms of borrowing for election campaigns. Candidates or parties on their behalf, riding associations on their behalf, cannot borrow at a credit union unless all their members belong to that particular credit union, which is, of course, not possible. I would prefer the borrowing and the interest gained by the financial institution involved be a credit union rather than a bank.

I am glad there is no restriction on the credit unions that school boards can invest in. There may well be some interesting talks across the bargaining table as to where the boards will invest their moneys. If the various boards of education are thought to be responsible financially, then I am sure there will be interest on the part of the teachers that they invest their money with the particular teachers' credit union.

Certainly section 3 can be interpreted as a positive step forward to that shift of municipal taxation from farming residential to commercial as this section allows the rate to be levied on residential and farms to be dropped to 85 per cent of commercial from the present 90 per cent. If that is taken up by the various boards this is a shift of the mix of taxation in the proper direction; off residential and farms and on to commercial.

I am concerned about section 2, which allows the spending of one mill out of current revenues or allowing the collection of taxation of up to one mill after the front-end loading has been paid by the ministry for those capital permanent improvements in any given year. I am concerned in two ways. One, this certainly is a loosening up—a giving of more autonomy, if you like—to boards. After the ministry has paid its determined share of the permanent improvements they can then, in addition, go out and borrow in total, one mill for each of the secondary and public school panels from their local taxation or levy against their local taxation, up to one mill.

We have loosened that up. We have given them a little more autonomy in that sense as to how they can go. My criticism is that now you have chosen to take that step of putting them in a less restrictive situation, why are you limiting it to so small a step? Surely we can trust the school boards to be financially responsible and to set what they feel to be reasonable levies. I don't see why we have to restrict the school boards in the way we have; this is certainly better than our current situation. It is certainly less restrictive and allows them to do more if they so wish. Why are we even cutting it off at this point? That's the one criticism.

Certainly in expansion we are moving in the right direction with this amendment. Just why do we have to be as restrictive as we are in it? If there is a board that may want to, in a particular year, spend beyond what the minister has given them plus the one mill on their local tax base for the permanent improvements—we may have a board that wants to do that in particular peculiar circumstances—they are still limited by our legislation to this. Maybe we should have opened it up even more in that possibility.

I am not suggesting there are likely to be many boards taking that attitude at all. That's more or less the minor one and one which argues for more board autonomy in financial matters than they have had and what they are allowed here, although this is certainly moving in the right direction.

My real concern here, though, looking ahead, is the effect this will have on local school boards. This will inevitably result in a shift to the municipal tax base from provincial financing for those permanent improvements. If we look down the road a year or two and see how this is operating, what we will find is that of the percentage of moneys spent on permanent improvements, the provincial share will have decreased and the municipal share will have increased. This again simply represents a shift of the cost of those permanent improvements from the provincial base to the municipal tax base.

Certainly, I agree with the scheme of front-end loading as I understand it and as it has been outlined, but I can see school boards having to spend for those permanent improvements—and we are in a time of permanent improvements—the totality of that one mill rate, as well as the front-end loading, and it certainly represents a shift to the municipal tax base.

With very few new schools being built, but with those schools that have been built in the great population expansion in our school system in the 1950s and 1960s, I suspect we need to make those permanent improvements in many of those schools. We are hitting the time where permanent improvements are needed to a much greater extent than five and 10 years ago.

We are heading into that whole area of increased permanent improvement. We now devise a system where a greater percentage of that permanent improvement will be paid by the local boards than has been up till now. That represents a shift from provincial to municipal expenditure, and again that percentage is going in the wrong direction by increasing at the municipal level rather than increasing at the provincial sources.

That is my real concern over section 2 of this bill and my concern for the future as local school boards find themselves, whether they like it not, having to use their municipal tax base more than they would have without this amendment for those much-needed permanent improvements.

However, we don't feel that this entire bill should be opposed because of our concerns over this, but it certainly is a concern which we have as we see that shift to the municipal tax base from the provincial tax base as boards feel they must make permanent improvement expenditures to keep their school buildings in shape to serve the students in those schools.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make some few brief comments in addition to those that my colleague has just made.

I too have looked at this bill as part of a package which includes section 1 of Bill 173 and Bill 171 and the bill to amend the Metro act that we dealt with the other evening. I too am suspicious that this is part of an overall change to provincial funding of capital works in our school systems. I notice that the minister was shaking her head when my colleague was speaking, and I hope she will be able to give us some very firm reassurances about this later.

It seems to me the change to front-end loading, which is definitely an appropriate change, is being accompanied by a transfer in the carrying of a major component of school board capital costs from provincial finances to the property tax base, to the level of support that is available at the municipal level. It is great that we talk about that in terms of co-ordination between school boards and municipalities, but I have to reiterate that that appears to me to be something of a smokescreen.

If I might, I want to use one example of what I see to be something that may be coming in the future; again, I hope the minister will assure us we're wrong, but I'm not convinced at the moment.

I will use the example of a school board in my own area, because it is one I know well. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the area I represent is a growing area. Declining enrolments are a problem for the city of Hamilton but not at all a problem for Wentworth county, and difficulties are being created because of that. We have some schools that are seriously overcrowded and we need fairly substantial capital works in terms of renovation, major improvements or extensions, or maybe even new schools.

Back in the spring, the minister indicated funds would be available for the building of a new school for the Wentworth County Board of Education. Several of us who come from that area thought that was very appropriate and appreciated the minister's generosity. The school board too felt it would be a step in the direction of filling our requirement for new school services. But it has transpired that the money allocated by the minister was completely inadequate for the school board's needs. To put figures to it, just to make it easier to comprehend, the minister announced a grant of approximately $1 million to build a new school which, in fact is going to cost about $1.7 million.

The school board has been discussing that with officials of the ministry, and there may or may not be an announcement in the not-too-distant future. It is hoped there will be, because the need for that new school is urgent and pressing and has been for some time.

From the background work I have done and from talking to people at the school board level and those in other school systems who understand these problems, it seems to me that the minister's response is likely to be that the extra $700,000 has to be raised locally, and here, in this bill, is the mechanism for raising that money.

My very serious concern is that there is no commitment attached to these changes; that the balance between local and provincial funding of capital works in our school system will remain unchanged for school boards to get funds for their needs for capital improvements and for construction.

The problem is one we debated at length recently in other contexts. I don't want to go into it, but the property taxpayers of this province are already seriously overburdened, and section 2 of this bill is providing for the possibility of applying an additional burden to those property taxpayers for a need that cannot be argued: to provide for schools that are absolutely necessary and for which there will be a partial provincial grant dangling there as a carrot.

The pressure on the school board is going to be along these lines: "Unless we raise this extra one mill locally, we won't get the provincial grant; therefore, we will have nothing and will have to apply this additional burden to the property taxpayers." I see that as a very real concern. We cannot go on asking the property tax base to bear more and more of the costs for essential services—services such as education which are very vital and fundamental to the fabric and future of this province.

Yet with this kind of package—and I have to say it has been packaged very well—here it is, one key clause contained in a bill that has several amendments, the rest of which are perfectly supportable and unarguable and perhaps even overdue. There are a couple of other little bills, which in themselves appear very innocuous. There is a bill to amend the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act. How would anybody be too upset about that? Yet when all of them are put together, and when you look at the impact on the municipal taxpayer and at the impact on the relationship between school boards and the property tax base, then I think there are grounds for very real concern.

I am looking forward to some very strong on the record reassurance that this is not the case from the minister, and that the balance between provincial grants and moneys that must be raised locally will remain exactly as it has been. Without that assurance, it seems to me we are putting a mechanism in place with this bill for making the property taxpayers pay yet more towards school capital works.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will be able to hear my somewhat peculiar vocal capabilities this evening.

I am delighted to hear the support for sections 1 and 3 of the amendments to the Education Act which specifically relate to the funding mechanisms of capital construction for the school system and for the investment capabilities of school boards. We felt, since the Municipal Act had widened the opportunities for municipalities in terms of the utilization of credit unions and caisses populaires, that it was only appropriate the school boards should have precisely the same kind of capability. That is the reason for the modification of section 1.

I am a little concerned at the slightly misanthropic view of section 2 which has been suggested by the members for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) and Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall). The intent of the section is to continue the protection of the local taxpayer which has been in existence for some time within the Education Act. The proposed change really permits the implementation of the direct capital funding mechanism which the members of school boards right across the province have supported vigorously from the time this discussion first began. There is no intent, I may reassure the honourable members, to do anything other than to ensure a degree of protection to the taxpayer, the local taxpayer, which is currently in existence.

The member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney) raised the matter of that portion of the contribution to the past pension fund which had been lumped with the permanent improvements and capital funds in the present section of the bill. It is believed that contributions to past pensions should more appropriately be treated as operating expenditure rather than as capital expenditure, in this context at any rate. They are so treated for grant purposes as part of the ordinary operating expenditure and are funded in that mechanism. Therefore, it was not felt necessary to include them in this revised mechanism which has been established specifically for construction purposes, capital purposes, for the school boards.

I can reassure the honourable member that the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corporation will stay in business to complete its debenture commitments until March 31, 1980, but it will not be issuing new debentures thereafter. To my knowledge, it is not going to get rid of any of those that it is holding either. I suppose there may be a mechanism developed whereby they will be transferred to another agency, but to my knowledge nothing of that sort is going to happen. There will not be a sale of debentures by the corporation I have been informed; I have inquired about that as well.

We think it is important to implement section 3 of this bill this year, because the equalization factor modifications which have been made for 1980 could result, as I'm sure the honourable members know, in a shift of burden to residential and farm taxpayers from commercial. The reduction from 90 per cent to 85 per cent is specifically to try to ease that burden and to get it back on to a reasonably equalized basis in spite of the changes in the equalized assessment factor modification which has been made.

The member for Kitchener-Wilmot mentioned the citizenship requirement, and I'm sure he thinks the citizenship requirement in the Education Act is probably the correct one. I shall be pleased to speak to my colleague the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) to prevail upon him to modify the Municipal Act in order to have it contain exactly the same provision.

The member for Wentworth was questioning the funding for permanent improvements and the funding mechanism therefor. The available funds from the province for permanent improvements, as I'm sure the honourable member knows, are allocated to school boards in relation to priority of the need which they establish. The school boards are given the power to raise a local share, either through taxation in the year of acquisition within the one-mill limit or through the sale of debentures with small amortization over several years.

There is no intent at all, if I may reassure the honourable member, to change the basis of sharing between the provincial funding mechanism and the local property taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, I think that really is all I have to say in response to the points raised by the honourable members. It is my sincere hope they will approve the second reading of this bill rapidly.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 173, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains a number of amendments to the Municipal Act; all these amendments are part of the government's continuing efforts to increase the authority and responsibility of municipal governments in Ontario.

The bill includes an amendment to enable regional municipalities, counties—including the county of Oxford—and local municipalities outside regional municipalities to issue debentures on behalf of and at the request of local school boards situated within their area of jurisdiction. This change is proposed to complement the government's policy to provide front-end grants for school board capital projects and to meet the concerns of the larger municipalities on the need to reduce the number of local government borrowers in the public bond market.

The proposed provision would not—and I stress the word “not”—empower municipal councils to approve or disapprove the permanent investments of the school boards to be financed by these debentures.

Other amendments are being proposed to provide councils with greater discretionary authority in carrying out their responsibilities. For example, the bill seeks to enable a municipality to deposit reserve funds and debenture sinking funds in credit unions. Amendments are also included to provide council with broader authority to appoint members to boards of management; to restrict the number of animals in each household; to provide benefit plans for members of council; and reduce, cancel or refund taxes in respect to buildings registered unsuitable and unusable by fire, demolition or other causes.

The area municipalities in Metropolitan Toronto have been concerned about the need to register group homes in order to facilitate the enforcement of the zoning bylaws affecting group homes and to have public records of those who are responsible in case of problems with a group home. To overcome these concerns, an amendment is proposed to provide for a system of registration of group homes by municipalities and to prohibit the operation of group homes that are not properly registered. This change would also allow inspections where there is reason to believe a group home is operating but not registered.

At the request of the Metropolitan Toronto council, an amendment is being made to enable the council—any council, not just Metropolitan Toronto's—to exempt from its tax-licensing bylaw taxis carrying school children, disabled persons and handicapped persons from one municipality to another under a prearranged contract. This amendment also permits municipalities to make agreements with each other so that taxis licensed in one municipality can pick up in another.

Finally, the bill proposes to provide a more equitable arrangement for allocating the cost of the remuneration and expenses paid to the municipally appointed members of local boards representing more than one municipality. The amendment seeks to enable the participating municipalities to determine the rate and amount of remuneration and expenses to be paid to their appointees by the local board.

Such a change is being made to avoid the potential cost burden which would otherwise be experienced by the smaller municipalities, particularly in northern Ontario, in funding the remuneration and expenses to be paid to the representatives on joint local boards. Conservation authorities, however, are not affected by this proposed change.

As I indicated at the beginning, there are a number of sections in this act which assist the municipalities in giving them broader powers. I would ask for the support of the House in giving second reading to this bill.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the parliamentary assistant's attention to a number of matters in this bill. I hope he will have a clear answer for us later on. I want to indicate at the outset that we plan to support this bill in principle, but we do have some questions concerning it.

We all know the section dealing with school boards is similar to a section we dealt with recently in the Metropolitan Toronto bill. The grant for capital projects have to be up front, rather than going by way of amortized loans. At the moment, I guess Metropolitan Toronto is in a position to go the sinking fund debentures route, but many municipalities do not have that particular leverage. They have to go through serial debentures, which means they have to pay both the principal and interest annually on loans.

It seems surprising that where the bill dealing with the management boards was so precise with respect to individual municipalities, in that they could have no fewer than three and no more than seven representatives on management board, the bill dealing with joint boards is ambiguous and there could very easily be as many as 14 representatives on a management board. One section is very specific and then in the section immediately following there is ambiguity. That is why we are here today, to try to correct that ambiguity.

The parliamentary assistant has alluded to the situation with regard to taxis and to the fact we were somewhat remiss earlier this year when we dealt with the bill that permitted municipalities to restrict legislation governing taxis emanating from their own municipalities. Obviously, someone did not fulfill their responsibilities—the government, local taxi cab operators or whoever. It seems odd that after the bill is passed they make representation that would exempt handicapped persons—the physically disabled—and school-age children in the legislation.

I hope, as far as the definitions are concerned, there is no problem later with physically handicapped or school-age children. I'm not sure what would happen if you had children of immediate pre-school age, for instance children four years old, and there was a contract arranged to transport them from one municipality to another. I wonder how the ministry would deal with this problem; or a situation in which the definition regarding handicapped persons or disabled persons was not clear. I'm wondering how the ministry is going to deal with these particular matters.

The other problem has to do with the group life and accident benefits that councils will be able to derive in the future. I'm wondering whether the ministry is giving any thought to the impact of some of these costs on smaller municipalities. The impact of these costs could be much greater than remuneration itself.

If a particular councillor were on the council of a small municipality, small in population and small in assessment, for a number of years and were to get significant benefits, I'm wondering if the ministry could indicate whether they are going to ask the various councils to make public the impact of those benefits on the municipality over a long period of time. I think this is important to ensure there is no difficulty later on when benefits have to be paid and the ratepayers of that municipality have not had a clear indication of what that impact will be.

Lastly, I want to draw the parliamentary assistant's attention to the tax rebates for damaged buildings. I wonder if he is aware of a letter that went to the minister, dated November 27, 1979, only last week, from the township of Logan, which questions this particular amendment.

The council of the township of Logan would like to see the walls of structures properly removed or buried before refunds are granted for buildings demolished or razed by fire.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, they now have the opportunity, if this amendment is carried, to get refunds for partially damaged buildings. This particular township is concerned that they may have to give refunds even if those walls are partially standing. They want to have a clean sweep of the areas, so there is no problem with children playing in the area or other passersby being injured by standing walls.

If the parliamentary assistant would direct his answers to some of these questions, I would be more than happy to hear his response.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I have only a small number of comments on this bill. It's another one of those bills that gives the appearance of being a housekeeping bill, but which in fact contains a number of provisions which are very important. Some of the provisions are things which should have been dealt with previously, perhaps, and others have some greater significance than is first apparent.

We've discussed the matter of municipal borrowing for school boards, which is the first section of the bill, on previous occasions. Indeed it's tied, in an indirect kind of way, with the bill on which we have just completed second reading.

The problem is one that will continue to exist and which is not really satisfied by this bill, even though this bill goes some way to dealing with the overall financial wellbeing of the municipality. The problem is that relationships between school boards and municipalities are not what they should be; in fact they are so far from what they should be that I can predict that it's only with a great deal of expressed resentment, with a great deal of hostility, that municipal councils are going to deal with requests from school boards for debentures under section 1 of this bill.

Certainly, it makes a great deal of sense to have debentures that are necessary for school purposes counted as part of the overall debt load of the municipality and considered as part of the overall financial stability of a municipality when the local or regional council is considering such things. Certainly, some of those municipalities have found themselves in some financial difficulty—difficulty is too strong a word, Mr. Speaker, but have seen the future looking a little gloomier than it should and have been up against their debt load ceiling and have suffered the consequence of that because of lack of co-ordination between the municipality and school boards.

We've already seen a situation in the eastern part of this province where a municipality has said, "We refuse to continue to collect the education portion of the tax levy that is required by the school board." The school board has therefore had to go to the considerable length of producing its own property tax bills and dealing with its own property tax collection.

Relationships between school boards and municipalities are grim. I know from discussions with municipal councillors, as recently as this weekend, that there is no prospect of those relationships getting any better; indeed the request for school board tax levies for 1980 are probably going to be met with a great deal of hostility in municipal council chambers right across this province. We are now adding to those not only the operating portion of the cost of the school board but a portion of the capital cost faced by the school board.

So while we support that particular section of the bill, it's with a great deal of concern about this deterioration in relationships, and with a very strong suggestion to the minister that consideration be given to all steps possible to improve the day-to-day relationships and the planning relationships between the school boards and the municipalities. If that's not done, then this section isn't going to work; rather it's going to be the vehicle for even more bad feeling and the basis for future battles between school boards and municipalities. I would really be concerned if those relationships degenerate in that way.

Sections 2, 3 and 4 deal with the matter of investment of municipal councils. We've talked about that before as well, in a number of contexts.

Fortunately, we appear to have finished the process whereby credit unions have been opened up completely for use by municipal councils. Nevertheless, this particular section still imposes conditions such that municipalities are not going to be attracted towards using credit unions.

Credit unions, at the moment, are facing very great hardship. They're in a situation caused by the dramatic increase in interest rates, that has been precipitated by the minister's friends in Ottawa and about which absolutely nothing has been done by this particular government. The credit unions are suffering as a result of that because they have to pay interest rates on their deposits that are equal to, and in some cases greater than, the rates which they are garnering on the moneys which they have out to loan. That's a serious problem for credit unions.

I want to suggest that when we were looking at this particular bill we could have taken steps that were very much more positive to encourage municipal councils to make use of credit unions for their day-to-day deposit of funds. That action in itself would have assisted many of the credit unions which are presently feeling in a somewhat tight position. It is a difficulty that the bill does not address and that it could have addressed. There could have been some incentive from municipal councils to use credit unions.

My colleague the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) says they can't do it. If they can't do it then I have to ask why this section is being passed at all. The section is being passed because municipal councils see some future in the use of credit unions, and because the credit union movement in this province would welcome the investment of municipal funds, for short terms, in credit unions, and would welcome being able to draw on the reserves that some credit unions have for loans to municipalities in a cash flow situation.

The idea is a good one, but the mechanism is not going to help. We are not going to move away from the situation where municipalities simply are not using credit unions. It doesn't matter how much legislation we pass in this House; unless there is an incentive provided municipalities are unlikely to start using credit unions, and that is pretty unfortunate.

The section on appointments to boards of management, Mr. Speaker, seems to us to be very overdue. Of course, such a body as a municipal council should have the autonomy to set up a board of management, to establish how many people and what kind of people should be on it, and to allow it to function as an operating arm of the municipal council. We have no difficulty with that at all, we welcome the introduction of that section.

The matter concerning permissive bylaws on control of the number of animals per household rather than per individual also has our support. In supporting it, we have to say we wonder why the control per person rather than per household was ever put in place in the first place.

I reviewed the record on that and it seems it was put in place for the good old reason that is always given from the other side of this House: that is what the municipalities asked for. I have to suggest that sometimes municipalities may need a little bit of advice a little bit of assistance; they may need at least a suggestion that something else could serve their needs even better than that which they are asking for.

Controlling the number of animals per person in a municipality does not do anything to solve the problem. As is stated very clearly in the background material for this particular bill, if there are 10 people living in a household and the municipal bylaw says two animals per person, then that is allowing a number of animals in the household which is totally and utterly unacceptable to any reasonable thinking person. It is the number of animals per household which needs to be controlled, so that the senior citizen or the person living alone is able to have two pets, and so the individual within a family who wants to have two pets can only do so if others in that family are prepared to agree that those two pets can be owned by one individual.

This section is what is needed. It is what should have been brought in in the first place, and we welcome it.

Section 7 concerns taxi pickup agreements. I reviewed Hansard on this particular section as well, because it is a very important one to municipalities within Metropolitan Toronto. It is also a very important matter to others in suburban municipalities where the suburban municipality is dependent on the city for quite a number of services.

The matter of taxis raiding in municipalities in which they are not licensed is one that has been a matter of some considerable concern. My colleague the member for Welling-Thorold (Mr. Swart) indicated back in December of last year when the original amendment that this is now amending again was before the House that a whole new approach was needed to the matter of taxi licensing. I have to reiterate that we still believe that to be the case.

Given that background, we have to welcome this particular section as being a rational approach to dealing with a problem that somehow got overlooked the last time taxi agreements were discussed in this House.

Section 8, on group homes and the registration of group homes, seems to me to be a section where all the things the minister has talked to us about—co-ordination, co-operation and consultation—went completely and utterly afoul. This particular section is supposed to be in response to a request from municipalities within Metropolitan Toronto for some registration ability so that they are aware of the location of group homes and can ensure the provisions they wish to lay down in their zoning bylaws are being upheld.

As of Friday afternoon, many of the individuals who were most closely concerned, and who are also members of the council of the city of Toronto, were not aware of this particular item being contained in this bill. They were concerned about its impact. They were concerned that it was too restrictive in some senses and not restrictive enough in another. They were very upset that we would get to this very late stage in the process, where it was indicated to them that the bill was to come forward today, and yet the major municipalities that have been involved in this battle ever since the beginning and the municipality for which the private bill on which this is based was introduced have not been properly consulted.

It was a great disappointment to me, Mr. Speaker, and I was happy to fill in on behalf of the government and to send a copy of my bill to city hall so that they became aware of what was contained in this bill. I welcomed the opportunity to do that, and I will welcome the opportunity to do it in the future when it is officially my responsibility, as it will be.

I really have to say to the parliamentary assistant, because the minister isn't here, what goes on? What is happening with this promised consultation and co-operation and co-ordination when this kind of thing happens, when there have to be last-minute meetings this afternoon between the mayor of the city of Toronto and the staff of the ministry—perhaps the minister was there as well, I don't know, but he is certainly not here tonight—to try to iron out a section so vital to the continuation and proper control of group homes within our largest urban centre?

We haven't had a full and complete opportunity to review the agreement that was hammered out at that meeting this afternoon. The concerns we have are still there. We are not satisfied with the definition that is contained in this bill, we are not satisfied with the details of the registration procedure and we will be reviewing these in the hours ahead.

It is my understanding we have an agreement from the minister that this bill can go to committee of the whole House so that we can introduce amendments to deal with that particular section, and also have time to review the points which still concern us, although they appear not to concern the mayor of the city of Toronto because a procedure has been put in place whereby the city's private bill will go through.

This was not through the original intention. We thought we were going to have legislation that was uniform across the province in order to deal with registration of group homes; that understanding seems to have disappeared. We wish to have a few hours in which to review that, so we have asked, and I understand we have the agreement of the government, that this bill will not be dealt with in committee of the whole House tonight but will be set aside until another day.

On section 9 of the bill, the matter of payment for municipal appointees on joint boards, if a—

Mr. Acting Speaker: If I might just interrupt, if the bill is going to committee there is no need to deal with it section by section as you have been doing. If you would, just speak to the principle of the bill; maybe you can confine yourself to the principle of section 9.

Mr. Isaacs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your comment and I understand your intent, but the bill itself appears to have no principle. The bill is a mish-mash of 11 different principles that have been thrown together in one omnibus bill, it is difficult to speak to the one principle. I would hope that when we get to committee we might avoid the need to review each section and we might focus only upon those sections for which we have amendments, but I will keep my remaining comments very brief.

On the matter of payment by municipalities for service on joint boards the principle that is established by this bill is a good one because it relies on co-operation between the municipalities that make the appointments to the joint boards. We have no argument with that and would comment only that we hope the co-operation that this section relies upon will indeed be there and that two municipalities that may see themselves as being competing municipalities will forget that competition and work together to deal with this matter of remuneration.

The final section on reduction of taxes for damaged buildings has been dealt with very adequately by the previous speaker; I will not add any comments to that except to say that we support it.

We will support section 10 concerning benefit plans for members of council, but with reservations, because we suspect that it relates primarily to the matter of provision of errors and omissions insurance, a type of insurance over which we have very considerable concern, which we have opposed previously and which we continue to oppose.

Yet this section at least appears to permit the payment of health insurance premiums and life insurance premiums and other benefits to municipal councillors, things that those municipal councillors have been receiving in many municipalities for quite some time and which they have presumably been receiving illegally and which we feel they should receive, and receive legally.

However, the matter of errors and omissions insurance, to which I believe this is tied, is one over which we have very grave concern and we regard the government's approach to the provision of that kind of insurance to be totally the wrong one.

Those are my comments. I appreciate the interjection earlier. We will be asking that this bill go to committee of the whole, but we will be supporting it in principle and we will hope that, bar the one section over which I have expressed concern, the rest of it will receive speedy passage because it does in general benefit our municipal colleagues.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw attention to only one section of the bill, and that is section 8 dealing with group homes. I would remind the parliamentary assistant that there is a very strong move by this government to move various people in our society out of institutions back into community facilities of one type or another—moving young people from training schools into group homes; moving retarded people from the large institutions into group facilities..

There has been a problem with some municipalities in this province which have set up various zoning bylaws to prevent the establishment of such group homes. I would remind the parliamentary assistant that the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) has taken a very strong position on the provision of group homes, and that municipalities should take a fair share of group homes is definitely a movement that should be supported.

I have a concern that this particular section of the act, by giving the municipalities the power to require registration, could be used in a negative way. As the parliamentary assistant probably noticed, I discussed this very briefly with the Minister of Community and Social Services and there does not seem to be a deep concern along these lines; however, I would like to hear it clearly from the parliamentary assistant, representing the government at this time, that that is not the intent and that there is nothing in this section which would give municipalities even more power than they already have to keep much-needed group homes out of their municipalities.

The second concern I have with respect to this is that group homes already in place would not be jeopardized in any way by adding a registration provision to the powers of a municipality.

If the parliamentary assistant could speak to those points it would certainly help me to understand the intent of this and decide whether or not it is supportable. Thank you.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak as well on the principle of section 8 of the bill.

As my colleague from Hamilton has pointed out, we could have in fact 11 different bills in front of us rather than the one bill, but section 8 is a matter of particular urgency because it relates to the question that has been in front of this Legislature a number of times already this session. It has to do with the orderly provision of group home living facilities in communities on an adequate basis.

The government has used the excuse for the last four or five years, that it is unwilling to change section 35(1) of the Planning Act because it can encourage a municipality to voluntarily pass bylaws that will permit the orderly inclusion of group homes within their boundaries.

I want to say to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) and the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), who are both here, as well as to the parliamentary assistant, that we're sick and tired of the systematic violation of human rights that is taking place across this province as municipality after municipality drags its heels on the question of passing model bylaws to permit group homes. We're sick and tired of the kind of harassment and exclusion taking place in communities like Etobicoke. It is time for the government to stop deceiving itself and everybody else that voluntary encouragement is somehow going to work. It's time to amend section 35(1) of the Planning Act and take away the power of municipalities to systematically violate human rights in this province by freezing the mentally retarded or the emotionally ill out of their community.

It's intolerable. We have been waiting—how many years now?—for the group homes for the mentally retarded that were originally to be provided in Etobicoke. They still haven't been provided after, I believe if I'm not mistaken, something like 18 months if not two years. The reason they haven't been provided, of course, is that Etobicoke has refused to sully itself by allowing the mentally retarded to live in group homes within their boundaries.

What kind of rubbish is this? How long does the government intend to tolerate this kind of discrimination? It is discrimination. This isn't a zoning issue, and it's not an issue for minor housekeeping amendments to the Municipal Act; it's an issue of basic human rights. No municipality has the right to say to a particular disadvantaged group, "You're not welcome in our community. Go away and live somewhere else. If that means you have to stay in an institution like Orillia, too bad for you."

That's precisely what they're saying, and as long as the government allows section 35(1) to be used against the disadvantaged it is saying that too.

The act in front of us, section 8 of the act in particular, is a very curious response by this government. Having dragged its feet and refused to deal with discrimination under section 35(1) of the Planning Act, the government is coming forward now in response to the fact the city of Toronto has had the courage and the decency and the goodwill to pass a model bylaw which permits the orderly and adequate development and location of group homes within the boundaries of the city of Toronto, which incidentally makes the city of Toronto virtually unique in the province. I believe there are one or two other municipalities that have shown the same kind of goodwill and the same kind of leadership, but they can be counted, and somebody can correct me if I am wrong, on the fingers of one hand.

So the government is coming forward in response to the city of Toronto's model bylaw. What are they doing? They are not even accepting the kind of initiative the city of Toronto was prepared to make. As I read Bill 173, section 8, as I look at the definition of "group home," I see it is substantially narrower than the definition in the city of Toronto's model bylaw. I don't want to belabour the point, because my colleague the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) indicated we were going to deal with this in committee, but I want to point out our concerns for the benefit of the parliamentary assistant so he can have a chance to reassess his position.

The city of Toronto's model bylaw talks about the orderly development, and spacing and location, of two kinds of facilities, residential-care facilities and crisis-care facilities. They are both defined in the same terms as facilities in which members of the group are referred to a hospital, court or government agency; such facilities being funded wholly or in part by any government, other than funding provided solely for capital purposes; and thirdly, such facilities to be regulated or supervised under any general or special act.

That is substantially different, that is a substantially broader definition of group homes than the definition provided in section 8 of Bill 173, which limits the definition of group homes to a residence licensed or funded under an act of the Parliament of Canada or the province of Ontario, et cetera. We are not worried about the et ceteras involving how many people and that kind of thing, or the purposes for which people are living in group homes but the minister in his bill as presented now by the parliamentary assistant has narrowed the definition to exclude, for example, a group home which is neither licensed nor funded but which accepts referrals from a psychiatric hospital or from any other hospital. That is substantially different and substantially narrower. I want to know, as we now get to second reading, why it is the ministry is not prepared to accept the definition laid out in the city of Toronto's model bylaw. Frankly, it causes one to be somewhat suspicious. You will have to forgive our paranoia, Mr. Speaker, but there is nothing on the government's record so far in this area that would warrant any kind of—

Mrs. Campbell: Trust.

Mr. McClellan: Trust; thank you. There is nothing in the record to warrant trust, only that which would warrant extreme caution, and indeed suspicion. Again, we will want these issues explored in exquisite detail when we get to committee of the whole House.

I go back, though, to the main point. None of the government's initiatives of this kind are going to mean a thing unless other municipalities follow the example of the city of Toronto, and one or two other municipalities, in passing model zoning bylaws. Again, there is absolutely no evidence that municipalities are following the urging, the musing kinds of urgings of the ministry to do this on a voluntary basis, so the legislation in front of us tonight will only apply to those municipalities which have already taken an initiative. It is regrettable to have to say the government is not even prepared to back up the initiative taken by the city of Toronto in its zoning bylaw but is even trying to water that down. What kind of a commitment is that?

Why did the minister fail to consult with the city of Toronto? Was he trying to ram this through? Was he hoping nobody would notice there was a substantial difference between the definition as set out in Bill Pr5 and the definition as set out in Bill 173? Was this one of the parliamentary assistant's little tricks, that unfortunately for him did not go undetected? The suspicion is certainly there, since the ministry did not even have the courtesy to provide a copy of the bill to the city of Toronto despite the fact that Bill Pr5 had been debated at the justice committee and the parliamentary assistant was present at that debate. He knew very well of the city's interest in Bill Pr5 and could have anticipated very clearly the city's interest in Bill 173.

I have the suspicion that there was an attempt at some fairly shoddy manipulation, to be brutally frank about it, and I don't like it at all. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, I think it was nipped in the bud. A copy of the legislation was provided to the city and there has been opportunity for some discussion, although not enough. We will have the rest of that discussion when we get to committee of the whole House.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to speak in favour of Bill 173, particularly with respect to the principles as set out in sections 2 and 3.

I make my comments, sir, fully disclosing my own personal interest in that I happen to be a director of a federally incorporated trust company. On sections 2 and 3 we're not dealing with any of the actions, either with respect to banks or trust companies, but rather with the opening of opportunities for credit unions to receive a variety of deposits and to benefit from that opportunity. As the critic of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations for the official opposition, I realize the responsibility for credit unions and for the work which they do is under the general ambiance of that ministry.

In sections 2 and 3 we see some long overdue changes which will allow credit unions and caisses populaires to benefit from the opportunity of receiving a variety of these deposits to which I have referred. In the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires Act of 1976 there was a reworking of the development of these financial institutions within the province of Ontario. Now we see, from the changes in section 2 which deals with a variety of other changes in the Municipal Act, that a municipality may deposit the benefits or results from certain funds—and certain funds not only for current purposes but also for trust purposes—with either a bank or a trust company, or in this third instance with a credit union. I believe these opportunities will be worthwhile for the further encouragement and development of credit unions within the province of Ontario.

The member for Wentworth commented to some extent on the interest rates and other changes which he would encourage to allow better competition. Of course as we're all aware, the responsibility for amending legislation in that area is entirely a federal one. I'm pleased that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) has made a variety of representations, both to the previous responsible government in Ottawa and also to the present federal ministry, to make a variety of changes to the Small Loans Act in order that the interest rates which can be charged and offered, both for borrowers and depositors, in each case can be up to the levels presently charged by the chartered banks and by the various trust companies, difficult though they may be for many people.

Certainly, the opportunity for credit unions to develop and flourish within the province of Ontario is a reflection of the kind of legislation which is encouraging, enabling as it does, and I think usefully, the future development of the opportunities of which various municipalities may choose to take advantage. I welcome that as one of the themes in the bill, and it certainly has my support.

Mr. Swart: My colleague the member for Wentworth has given, I think, a pretty comprehensive analysis of this bill. I am not going to repeat most of what he said. My colleague, the member for Bellwoods has put section 8 in perspective, and I am not going to deal with that either; but there are one or two comments I want to make, particularly with regard to section 1.

Before I do that, I want to say that we on this side welcome the broadening of the permission to members of council for the provision of fringe benefits, and they call them that, for the members of council. I am sure the government has done this primarily for those who spend full time in council work, and there are more and more of these people across the province. However, there are many others who spend a substantial part of their time and receive a substantial part of their remuneration from the municipality, and who in their other fields of operation may be precluded from having these kinds of benefits; they also should have the right to have these things provided by the municipalities.

I have to say I am somewhat surprised at the comments of the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp); he seems to want to have these rather severely restricted. We in this party welcome legislation which gives greater autonomy and assigns greater responsibility to the municipal councils. We have no fear they will abuse this additional permissive legislation.

As has already been stated, we too welcome the fuller use of the credit unions in all fields of municipal finance. I recall that a year or so ago there was a small move made in this direction; at that time I urged the government to go further and allow municipalities to use the credit unions fully for their financial requirements, whether in depositing or in borrowing. It now seems this has come almost full circle and they are to be allowed to do so.

I hope the parliamentary assistant, however, would state in his reply if there still are any areas where municipalities can't use the credit unions within their communities for their financial purposes. I believe there are some restrictions with regard to borrowing; I would be pleased if the parliamentary assistant could give a full statement in that regard.

If there are areas where they are still unable to use the facilities of credit unions, I suggest extension be given so the credit unions are put on exactly the same basis as banks and trust companies.

I have some concern with section 1 of this act. During the many years I was on municipal council it was a requirement that councils issue all the debentures for school boards. This was true whether the jurisdiction of the school boards was just within that municipality or whether they were school districts. If there was a capital expenditure to be made, the municipality within which it was to be made had to issue the debentures. During that period of time there was tremendous conflict, as my colleague the member for Wentworth has said, between the municipalities and the school boards.

I can recall, and I am sure the parliamentary assistant can also recall from his experience in municipal government, that certain municipalities refused to issue debentures and the school boards had to take them to court to get them to issue the debentures. Of course they had some concern because it did have an effect on their credit.

Then the government went the full cycle. It gave the school boards responsibility to issue the debentures. This has eliminated, to a substantial degree, the conflict between the municipalities and the school boards. Now they are returning to some sort of permissive legislation which would allow a school board to make application to regional governments, and to the county of Oxford, to issue the debentures on behalf of the school board.

I suggest this legislation is not only going to recreate some of that conflict that existed between the municipalities and the school boards, it will probably not meet the need it is intended to meet. In most cases, the regional council will only agree to issue these debentures where there is not a high debt in the finances of both the region and the area of the school board—and across the province they are now generally the same, with the exception perhaps of Niagara. Where there is a very high debt within the area, where the region is reaching its maximum and the school board finds it difficult to sell debentures, the region will be reluctant to issue those debentures and the old conflicts will arise.

I say to the parliamentary assistant the arguments which he gave very briefly in his introductory remarks are not sufficient to satisfy me there is going to be any benefit from this. In fact, I think on balance it may cause more problems than it will provide benefits. I would hope in his remarks summing this up he could dwell at some greater length on this matter than he has to the present time. He has gone the full cycle and now has come back half-way in between. What we have in this section may well be the worst of all worlds.

Mr. Rotenberg: In dealing with replies I will probably try to reply to each of the members opposite who rose. I will deal with one item in the bill more than once, but that might be a more efficient way than trying to jump back and forth between members. I thank the members opposite for indicating their support for the bill in principle. It seems there is really only one section of the bill about which they have some reservations.

The member for Waterloo North indicated some approval of section 5 of the bill, regarding the persons on local boards. Part of it was previously ambiguous, and we have fixed this up. More important, we have given autonomy to local councils to choose the number of members on a local board and how they are picked, rather than setting it by legislation.

As far as the taxi cab area goes, there are some changing circumstances. In order to be clear and specific, we have clarified the bill so that the handicapped and school children can be exempt from municipal licensing bylaws and municipal taxi bylaws, if those municipalities so desire.

The member for Waterloo North also questioned the impact of the costs of group benefits. I think he is aware, as everyone is, that council members can now set their own salaries, the amount of remuneration they receive. I think this is in line with that philosophy that council members really are responsible for their own expenditures wherever they are spent and certainly for the amount of money spent on themselves. If a council wishes to spend money on group benefits for members of council, certainly that council should have that power.

As for accountability and how much it will cost, all expenditures of a council are public documents, as are all its budgetary approvals and budgetary reports. In the budget of any council this item will be there for the public to see, and I'm sure it will be there for the press to pick up. Somehow or other, a council can spend millions of dollars while the press ignores it, but if councillors raise their salaries a couple of thousand dollars it's headlines. When a council decides it's going to spend X number of dollars on group benefits for members of council it will be in its budget, it will be public; the amount of premiums will be known and council will be held responsible.

There was also some question from the member on section 11, as far as buildings damaged by fire and leaving up walls are concerned. This section, as with so many sections of the bill, is permissive. It isn't mandatory that a municipal council must give a rebate or a refund or credit on taxes because a building has been damaged and is unusable. The council may or may not do that in its discretion. A council may say it is not going to give a tax relief, but after the walls have been taken down and it is in a safer condition it may say it will consider it. Because it is permissive and the council doesn't have to do it, it doesn't change that relationship between a council and an owner of a damaged building as to cleaning up the site and taking down the walls.

We have to understand all of these matters within the meaning of permissive legislation. It does not say a council "must". It just gives the council more autonomy, something I think all members of this House have always seemed to think was a desirable thing. Maybe we sometimes move a little bit too slowly in giving local autonomy, but we give these things upon request.

The member for Welland-Thorold raised the problem covered in section 1, which deals with debentures being issued by municipal councils.

When there are taxes to be levied there is no easy answer. There is no easy way to do it so everyone is happy. However in our changing circumstances, the changes in the forms of funding capital projects for school boards, some school boards will have to issue debentures.

I agree with the members opposite, from my own experience in municipal councils and here: when a school board asks a municipal council to issue a debenture there can be a certain amount of unhappiness about it, but it still is, in our opinion, the best way, rather than having the school board going to the market on their own and issuing a separate set of debentures, a separate prospectus, and implying to the lending community there are two sets of debentures being issued, there are two sets of credit ratings. The credit rating in a municipality is very important in determining the amount of interest paid. Quite frankly, if a municipality is going to save a quarter or half a point in the debenturing that may be more important to the taxpayers in saving money on debenturing, and therefore saving money on tax payments. It may be a little more important to the taxpayers than having a little bit of a rift between the school board and the council when each one is trying to shift the responsibility to the other for the new high tax rate if that happens.

No, Mr. Speaker, it is not an ideal answer. There is no right answer to levying taxes. We simply feel this is probably the best under the circumstances.

The member for Wentworth, I'm pleased to note, was also in accordance with sections 2, 3 and 4 dealing with credit unions and caisses populaires. I may say to the member for Welland-Thorold, as far as I know now the credit unions do have all the same powers, rights and privileges as the banks within the meanings of these acts.

The member for Wentworth, however, seemed to indicate we should not only make the caisses populaires and the credit unions the equivalent of the banks and trust companies, giving them all the same rights, but we should give them something extra and something special. Quite frankly, I can't go along with the philosophy of that idea. The credit unions are now in the same position as the banks and trust companies. They can compete from the same position. To give them some advantage or something extra within the context of these acts so they have an advantage over the banks or trust companies—I don't know if the member means he wants them to lend money at a lower rate or borrow money at a higher rate, I'm not too sure what kind of incentive he wants—I think, quite frankly, they all should be in the same position.

We now come to what probably seems to be the most controversial matter in this bill. That is section 8, the matter of group homes. There seems to be some lack of information—lack of research, lack of homework; I'm not sure what it is—available to the members opposite. They seem to think this was sprung all of a sudden on the city councils; today, yesterday, last Friday or something like that. I can't be responsible if the members of this House opposite haven't done their homework.

I can't be responsible if their colleagues on the city council who have the same party allegiance haven't done their homework.

I'm talking about the city of Toronto council, this is where there was reference about this problem. In point of fact there has been consultation with the city of Toronto from the time of the initiation of this matter by the government, from the time there was a problem with the city of Toronto Pr5, in order to find a solution satisfactory both to the city of Toronto and to this government. There was consultation, with one alderman specifically who was the author of Pr5. If people at that level don't talk to each other, we're not responsible.

There seems to be an implication across the floor that the members of the city council weren't aware of this act until a day or two ago. I would indicate to the members opposite the act was sent to the city of Toronto specifically, even though they get the Municipal Act anyway, the day it had its first reading. In fact I think they had a copy before it had its first reading in this House.

I am not too sure how the processes work down at city hall these days, but certainly if the city hall processes work properly those who are interested in the bill, those who are interested in the terms and conditions of the bill, can certainly find out what is going on and can know what bills have been introduced in this House, because it was sent to city hall.

There has been a constant and continuing dialogue with the city of Toronto; there was no last minute meeting with the mayor of the city of Toronto today. The consultation was continuing with the officials of city hall and the people at city hall; the meeting with the mayor today was not a last minute, sudden meeting, it was the culmination of a series of meetings with the city of Toronto people, both in person and on the phone, to understand, between us and them, what we are doing and how the city of Toronto will be able to operate within the terms and conditions of this legislation.

We had a communication back and forth with city hall and the city, in effect raised three objections to the legislation as it is in this act. Having replied to the city on how those three objections could be met, the mayor expressed an interest in having a face-to-face meeting in order to confirm what the government was prepared to do and how their objections would be met.

The member for Bellwoods has indicated the city wants a broader definition than is in this legislation. That is only partially true.

The city wants a broader definition in order to include crisis-care centres, and they also want to include group homes which are not funded by governments.

In other cases the city wants a narrower definition than is in the legislation. The legislation provides for group homes from three to 10 people. The city of Toronto wants six to 10 people. The legislation as provided allows it in a single dwelling unit. The city of Toronto wants it only in a single detached home, so it can't be in a semi-detached unit or an apartment or a duplex.

In some cases the city wants a wider definition, and in other cases the city wants a narrower definition. As I indicated to the city some time ago, and again in my talks with the mayor today, as far as the narrower definitions are concerned, whether in the city of Toronto or anywhere else, that is provided in the legislation. Section 8(2)(a), provides they may set up a registration system for any class or classes of group homes. If the city of Toronto wants to set up a class from six to 10, rather than the broader definition of three to 10, they can do that within their registration and therefore will only register those which are six to 10.

Mr. McClellan: According to your definition.

Mr. Rotenberg: No, according to their definition. The member for Bellwoods should do his homework, as the mayor of Toronto has done his.

The mayor of Toronto is quite satisfied they can set up a registration system that will cover the more restrictive groups they want rather than the broader definition within the legislation. As far as the broader definition goes, I think the members of the House realize this all arose because of the city's initiative and the section of the city's Bill Pr5 which wanted a broader definition.

We indicated to the city a number of weeks ago that we would like to proceed with this legislation as is, without including some of the broader definitions on group homes which the city of Toronto had in their private legislation. We have also indicated to the city of Toronto that if they amend the section as in Pr5 to accept the other definitions in the legislation as it is before us, but also initiate a private bill, a request which in effect would say the group homes are as they defined them, that is the crisis-care centre and the residential-care facility, we would not oppose that.

If they brought forward and amended their Pr5 to simply say for the purposes of this section of the act that for the city of Toronto the definition would include the crisis-care facilities and the residential-care facilities in their bylaw, we would not oppose that. In other words, we would not oppose the broader definition for the city of Toronto. That is quite acceptable to the mayor of the city of Toronto, and I assume to the council members of the city of Toronto as well.

I anticipate when this legislation passes, the city of Toronto will pass a resolution asking that that section of Pr5 be changed for the city of Toronto and, as indicated, the government will not oppose that request.

The member for Wentworth talked about some last-minute agreement with the mayor of the city of Toronto. I repeat, there was no last-minute agreement. The mayor of the city of Toronto simply wanted to have a face-to-face meeting so he could get from the ministry the explanation that had been given to the city before. The mayor was quite satisfied with the explanation. Therefore, as I say, he has indicated to me and I think he indicated by letter this afternoon, a copy of which I believe the member for Wentworth received, he is satisfied that the bill go forward in this form. He is satisfied and prepared to amend that section of Pr5 to broaden the definition and, as indicated, we will not oppose that definition.

Mr. M. Davidson: Did he have council approval for that letter?

Mr. Rotenberg: I indicated that has come from the mayor. I don't know whether he has council approval or not; it is up to the members of the council. I haven't always agreed with the mayor, but I think the mayor is one of those who has been pushing for the group homes. The mayor wants this to go through and I think the mayor, having assumed the responsibility of that office, also understands.

The mayor intends to take this to the council of the city of Toronto. Whether the council accepts that change in Pr5 is up to them. I don't see why they wouldn't because it implements what they want. As far as the rest of the legislation is concerned, it implements those matters which the city of Toronto wants to do in order to have this go forward.

The member for Bellwoods introduced something new into this debate, something I find quite surprising in the light of some of the other stands his party has taken in the past. In effect what the member for Bellwoods is saying is not that we should give permissive legislation to allow municipalities to have group homes, but that we should impose upon municipalities that they must allow group homes within their municipalities. He is saying we should change the whole philosophy of the Planning Act—not that there should be local autonomy, not that municipalities should be able to pass their own zoning bylaws, but we as a government and as a legislature should impose those zoning bylaws on municipalities.

That is quite a change in philosophy. That is quite a change in their constant and continuing cry for local autonomy. That party has always seemed to be in support of residents' groups, ratepayers' groups, always saying we shouldn't impose zoning, we should allow the local municipality to do it; we should allow public hearings, we should allow everything to go forward in an open, democratic manner; we should allow the municipalities to make up their own minds, we should allow the citizens of municipalities to participate in the planning process, we should allow citizens to have a voice in the changes of the zoning bylaw. But oh, no, not now. Now we should impose.

Mr. Speaker, there is a forum, there is a way, there is a method of appeal if a group in a municipality is not satisfied the municipality is doing the proper things in the Planning Act. There is a method of appeal if a group in a municipality is not satisfied with the way the zoning bylaws are being handled by the municipality.

In this case it happens too. If someone applies for rezoning for a group home and the municipality turns it down, I submit it is not the proper process of this Legislature to impose its will. The process we have set up is that person, that applicant, that group home or whatever, can then appeal the decision of the municipality to the tribunal which has been set up for this, the Ontario Municipal Board, which holds a hearing and can overrule a municipality. That is the way I think it should go. That is how there should be an appeal from a municipality that doesn't act according to how some people wish in the zoning bylaw; this Legislature should not tell a municipality how to administer their own bylaws.

I am surprised, Mr. Speaker. These people adjust very easily. They have principles in certain things but if the case of the day doesn't meet with their principles, they get a new set of principles and they always change their principles to meet the situation. I am really surprised that suddenly that party over there doesn't want to have local autonomy, with the local municipality being able to administer their own bylaws.

Mr. Speaker, the member for Kitchener-Wilmot, who I think really wants to assist in this process of getting group homes, has raised a very vital question, which is, are we putting forward registration or licensing? I would assure the member for Kitchener-Wilmot that it is registration, it is not licensing. Frankly one of the objections we had to the original Bill Pr5 from the city of Toronto was that even though the explanatory note said it was registration, it was in effect a form of licence in that it gave a certain discretionary power to the municipality not to issue a licence.

Section 3 on page eight in effect says that where an applicant meets the terms set out in the registration bylaw, the registrar cannot refuse registration, but I would point out to the member, to be fair, that this does not change the power of a municipality as far as group homes are concerned. The power to register by itself is not a further power to restrict group homes.

But, as I was indicating before to the member for Kitchener-Wilmot, municipalities still have the power under the zoning bylaw to allow or to restrict or to put in conditions to allow group homes. This bill does not alter that zoning power. The member has to understand that a municipality can prohibit or restrict or conditionalize group homes under their zoning bylaws, not only with this legislation but under the existing Planning Act under the existing zoning bylaw.

I would also point out to him that as of now this province does license group homes for children and shortly will be licensing all group homes. One of the conditions of a licence from the province of Ontario is that the group home must conform to all bylaws of the municipality. So, although this legislation doesn't change restrictions or doesn't make it more difficult for a group home, it doesn't make it any easier; it doesn't change. I want to be very open about that.

One final point. Someone raised the problem about section 10 of the bill which allows benefits for members of council. I would point out this has nothing to do with errors and omissions insurance that someone raised, this only has to do with benefits for members of council.

I think I have covered the points that have been raised by the members opposite and I am pleased there will be second reading of this bill this evening, after which, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this go to committee of the whole House at some other time.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

UNIFIED FAMILY COURT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 180, An Act to amend the Unified Family Court Act, 1976.

Mr. Sterling: On November 15, the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) introduced this bill on behalf of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and he outlined two reasons for the bill to be brought forward.

Basically, the bill takes out the termination date of the unified family court as at July 1, 1980. The two reasons given for this are, first, there are negotiations still going on between the federal and various provincial governments across our country regarding the appointment of judges to deal with family law matters which are now presently under the federal jurisdiction. Second, a proper evaluation of the unified family court has not been terminated or brought to a conclusion. I think a fair question that may be asked by members opposite is why?

The problem stems from the fact the Family Law Reform Act was brought in nine months after the unified family court was put in place. This presented a different atmosphere in which the unified family court carried on its function and statistics prior to that time were not really valid as to what happened later. It took a period of approximately six months before the kinks, as they might be termed, were worked out to get the courts into the use of the Family Law Reform Act.

It is felt by the Attorney General the project has been a success, but before prejudicing his decision he would like to receive the independent report being done on that court.

The other question that may be asked is does the bill as it is drafted in effect give an open-ended option to the Attorney General? Basically, the answer to that is if a decision is made at some future time to terminate the existence of the unified family court in Hamilton, it will be necessary to bring forth legislation to provide for the transfer of cases or the case loads pending in that court to another court. If a decision is made to expand the project, further legislation will also be necessary in order to do that.

This bill is merely a holding measure designed to preserve the existing situation until it is possible to make a firm decision on the future of the unified family court in Ontario.

I hope I have anticipated some of the questions and that I will receive the support of the members opposite on the bill.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the parliamentary assistant again giving us the reasons which were given initially, but I do have concerns about the fact this is left as open-ended as it is.

I am concerned that we are relieving what seems to me to be a pressure to get on with both the discussions with the federal government and also to bring forward a report which can truly assess the merits of this project. It would seem to me if the Attorney General feels this has been a useful exercise, as indeed I think most of us do, it would surely be better perhaps to substitute another date, rather than to leave it open-ended as has been suggested.

It may well be one has to bring back to the House some provision for those cases to be transferred, but nevertheless if the report is imminent, if the negotiations with the government in Ottawa are proceeding, it seems to me it is much more valuable to us in this House to have the opportunity to review the matter at a specific date, rather than this type of open-ended situation which we have before us.

I have very little more I can add to that, but I would like an explanation as to why one wouldn't just extend the date to a specific date and let us in the Legislature again have an opportunity to question the status of any report and the status of those negotiations which I presume, as the parliamentary assistant suggests, are ongoing.

Mr. McClellan: A perpetual pilot project.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes.

Mr. Warner: It is, as my colleague from Bellwoods says, a perpetual pilot project. As my colleague from St. George mentions, without a termination date in there this thing can go on and on and on. And if it is successful, as I suspect it is—we have no reason to believe it isn't a successful experiment or project—how long will it be before other communities will have the benefit of a unified family court? How long will we wait for the evaluation?

I am not very happy with the bill being open-ended because I think it lets the government off the hook. I think it allows it, without any termination date, to just carry on its experiment for who knows how long.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We have an insatiable thirst for knowledge.

Mr. Warner: The minister has an insatiable thirst for providing work for lawyers, to study this and study that ad infinitum. We need some answers.

I believe the unified family court in Hamilton happens to be an extremely good project and a very important one, but I would appreciate the government deciding and letting us know when they are going to report, even an interim report. Let us know what the government's judgement is on the court. I think one way to give us some idea as to when the minister is going to report back would have been to have had a termination date in the bill.

I won't say any more. We do have three minutes; that might be sufficient time for the parliamentary assistant to respond to the questions raised.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by my colleague, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, and by the critic of the Liberal Party, the member for St. George, is so eminently reasonable isn't it possible for the parliamentary assistant to discuss with the Attorney General the possibility of at least putting an outside date in the bill so the clause would read, "This act is repealed on a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor not later than . . ." and thus give himself some leeway, so there will be a date in there which will provide the kind of flexibility and will prevent its becoming, as my colleague from Bellwoods has said, a perpetual pilot project? It would seem to me that would be a very appropriate way to deal with the concerns we have. Otherwise, I suppose we will have to force an election on the issue.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, the report I referred to in my opening remarks will be available, it is expected, by July or August of next year. Maybe I was a little optimistic—by September 1 of next year. We are sort of open on the date. It is nothing that has that much meaning to us. We will bring it back to the Legislature if that is the desire of the Legislature. But we were just trying to save the Legislature going through this particular process again.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY DISPOSAL OF PCBs

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, last year before the standing committee on resources development, I presented a seven-point program for the disposal of liquid industrial wastes.

In the past year, we have made considerable progress in implementing these steps. Our new waybill system, with its new classification system, is in place and giving us the detailed knowledge on liquid waste movements that we need.

The classification system and waste disposal guidelines set out requirements for treatment and disposal of these wastes. These guidelines are now assisting industry in safely handling the materials.

Regulations are being prepared to require registration of wastes, to direct wastes to specific treatment methods and to establish perpetual care funds for waste disposal sites. In October, we released a ministry interim report on the subject of perpetual care and are currently obtaining public feedback.

On the transboundary movement of wastes, discussions are continuing with the federal government and an initial draft proposal has been released by them.

With regard to facilities and site selection, we have already chosen two short-term solidification facilities. The MacLaren report which identifies 17 candidate areas for long-term disposal has been released and we are obtaining public response.

When I introduced the program, I said interim storage facilities would be needed for some of these wastes until adequate, permanent disposal sites could be established. Safe storage is particularly crucial for PCBs, as there are no facilities currently available for their disposal.

I told the committee that the government was prepared to assume the lead in order to obtain these vital sites and that we would ensure they were established in the safest possible manner.

To this end, the ministry retained the consulting services of M. M. Dillon Limited, a Toronto engineering company, to recommend criteria and locations for establishing interim storage facilities for PCBs.

The primary recommendation of their report, which I am tabling today, is that one facility be established as soon as possible to store PCBs. This storage will be needed until plans and facilities can be completed for permanent destruction.

The report considered 53 potential locations under many criteria designed to ensure that a temporary storage site would be secure. While storage is a safe temporary control for PCBs, we asked the consultant to consider a wide variety of factors to make sure such a site would be ideally located. Many of these factors were obtained through consultation with environmental groups.

Some of these factors were: proximity to major PCB sources as opposed to distance from population centres; distance from major water bodies, environmentally sensitive areas and unusual geological features; existing land use; and good access and control of the site.

Based on these and other criteria, Dillon has recommended three preferred sites: South Cayuga, the Blenheim area and the Middleport area. Of those three, the ministry's technical staff has chosen the Middleport-area site for a detailed environmental assessment and proposed development.

They made this choice for a number of reasons. Since electrical transformers and capacitors represent the bulk use of PCBs, we felt it was appropriate the storage facility be located on Ontario Hydro property if possible. The Middleport site qualifies on that point.

The location also offers good control of the site as well as good access. No initial preparation of roads will be required. In addition, the facility will be close to major PCB sources so there will be a minimum transportation risk. Middleport is 15 kilometres southeast of Brantford. The proposed facility will be six kilometres from Middleport itself.

The proposal is to incorporate both bulk and warehouse storage, with special handling methods designed to protect the surrounding area. A minimum of 40 acres would be required for the overall installation, and the report recommends that the warehouse and storage facilities cover four and one half acres on that site.

Dillon has calculated that if the facility were to operate over a five-year period, it would handle approximately 4,950 tons of PCBs in liquids, contaminated fluids and solids.

Because of the importance of this facility to the citizens of Ontario, I want to keep them as fully informed as possible and involved in the decision-making process. To this end, I am proposing that a citizen-liaison committee be established with representatives from society at large, area residents and ministry technical staff. In that way, I feel we can ensure not only that the public is kept fully informed through all stages of this proposed development, but also that their input is considered and their concerns fully answered. To start this process, my staff have already been in touch with the appropriate municipal representatives.

In co-operation with the consulting firm, the ministry is gathering the information necessary for the proposal under the Environmental Assessment Act. This and any other data will be made available to the residents and the public through the liaison committee, and through open information meetings, prior to the hearing before the Environmental Assessment Board. I give my personal guarantee that everything will be done to ensure citizens are kept fully informed on every step of this process.

The Dillon report has estimated that there are currently 14,430 tons of PCB material being used in existing transformers and capacitors all over the province. As these transformers and capacitors come out of service over the next several years, their contents eventually will join the additional 550 tons estimated to be in storage now in various locations.

If this chemical is not properly stored as it comes out of use, it will without doubt contaminate our environment and work its way into our food chain. Ontario needs one site where we can ensure that storage of our PCBs is done safely and securely.

I would also like to stress that safe storage can only be a partial remedy. We need a facility which will provide for the complete destruction of PCBs and we need it as soon as possible. I am sure the members are aware of the efforts of my ministry in making an effort to find the best way to accomplish this, just as I am sure they are aware that public acceptance is difficult to achieve.

We in Ontario have made use of this chemical; so we must all accept the responsibility for its disposal. If approved, the Middleport facility will give us the needed time to establish the safe and efficient disposal facility which we so urgently need to eliminate this hazardous substance from our society.

I feel this last year has been a year of marked progress. This is one more step in the eventual and complete control of hazardous waste for the protection of the people of this province.

ORAL QUESTIONS DISPOSAL OF PCBs

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of the Environment. I won't ask him how come all the areas studied and stored in always happen to be Liberal ridings, because apparently they can't be burned in Conservative ridings.

In view of the professed interest of the minister in making sure that citizens are kept informed and participating in the fullest way possible, I would like to ask whether, in these unusual circumstances and given the urgency of the matter, the minister will endeavour to provide funding for the various citizen groups which undoubtedly will wish to be represented at the hearings, to bring expert testimony and have assistance with regard to asking the proper questions and cross-examination and so on.

Given the funding that obviously exists on the side that will be proposing the facility, how about giving some fair chance to the citizens who might want to make sure all the experts are brought in who might have contrary views? Why doesn't the ministry fund them to make it a fair and equitable hearing?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I have several responses to that question, Mr. Speaker. The first response I would like to give is in reply to the inference that somehow or other there was partisan political consideration in these deliberations. Let me tell the honourable member that this side of the House is not prepared to play those nasty games that they are continually playing. We are not prepared to do that.

Interjection.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The leader of the Liberal Party has a few attributes of his personality, of his facial configurations, that aren't any hell either. He talks about my long nose; I admit it, but it may be it is going to help me sniff him out.

Let me talk more seriously about this very serious concern.

Mr. Eakins: Be serious.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will be a lot more serious, I am afraid, than some of the members opposite who are taking a view on this item and many other environmental items.

Mr. Speaker: Just answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. It is hard not to hear those nasty remarks.

Perhaps the leader of the Liberal Party is not aware of the complete protection that is embodied in the Environmental Assessment Act for the people of the province. I have said to him repeatedly that any waste site will be done under the Environmental Assessment Act. It's another commitment here. I have, on previous occasions, brought in the most expert of witnesses to give the full facts before an environmental assessment hearing. We will continue to do that.

We believe that process does allow for the witnesses to come, and does allow for the public to be protected. No, I don't see the need for funding on a specific case, such as this illustration. I disagree. I think our job is to put the facts clearly and fully on the table and let the board make the decision as they should do.

Mr. S. Smith: Even with the best will in the world on the part of the government, which we seriously question, does the minister not realize that any system of hearings, any quasi-judicial situation, requires to some extent that those who might be adversaries in the process also have a reasonable opportunity to be well represented and well defended as necessary?

Does the minister not see that in providing, for instance, the $200,000 to a couple of companies that are having hearings on a certification project in Blenheim and Niagara Falls, the ministry is on one side of the matter? If the citizens' groups are to participate meaningfully, as did the Indian group, for instance, in front of Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt, they require funding so as to get their own experts, not just the ministry's experts who are giving the ministry viewpoint. They require funding to make a fair and adequate presentation of whatever case they might wish to present so that thoroughness will be the order of the day. Why not be fair and equitable and, in this instance, provide a certain pool of funding for the citizens in that area, given the importance of the matter?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: What the Leader of the Opposition does not seem to understand or recognize is that the function of the ministry, paid for by the taxpayers, the servants of the taxpayers, is to put all that information clearly in front of the board.

He scoffs at those in my ministry who will put in great numbers of hours and a great deal of expertise forward for a hearing—not to gloss over the facts somehow or other, but to the contrary.

I think the recent events in Mississauga gave a credibility to my ministry that was never quite seen before. Let me say, in that instance, the people turned to my ministry to be guaranteed there was complete safety there. They were quite willing to accept that expert—

Mr. S. Smith: On PCBs?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No. I am saying, in the recent spill they turned to my ministry and wanted all of our expertise; more important, and to their credit, they trusted us. In this open process my ministry has, we do put all of the facts forward—not just the pros, but indeed the pros and cons.

If the Leader of the Opposition is saying he cannot trust my ministry, he is dead wrong.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I am glad to see the leader of the Liberal Party has accepted an idea I have been proposing for two years. I would like to ask the minister, does he not agree he will never obtain public acceptance for the location of disposal sites in any municipality unless the people in that municipality see they have had full opportunity to present their case, which requires public funding of citizen groups and public assistance in some cases to the municipalities which may wish to present the case for the citizens as a whole? I cannot see how he can get public acceptance if the people do not think they are being given full opportunity to state their own case. They do not wish to have the ministry state their case for them. They have their own concerns.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can add very little to what I have already said. This process of environmental assessment is the most open and the most progressive of any jurisdiction. The opportunity is certainly there, and the expertise is available for the citizens' groups. We are prepared to work with them. Why else would I have suggested my staff would sit with those public groups, other than to ensure the fullest disclosure of the facts and the fullest amount of information we can possibly give?

I will tell the Leader of the Opposition we do it from an open-mind position, not a positive position that there is no answer to the problem of waste in this province. Indeed, there must be answers and we are seeking to find them. In the last year we have found many of them.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the Environmental Assessment Act is so wonderful in the eyes of the ministry, why are there so many exemptions to it on government projects?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the honourable member looks at the situation, Mr. Speaker, he will realize in 1975 there was a very extended grandfathering period, if I can use that term, where it was known those projects which were already under way would, therefore, not logically now start to be under the Environmental Assessment Act. That's the way it was then, and it had a lot of logic in it. It wasn't as though those discussions went on without a hearing. The hearing was held under two other acts, the Environmental Protection Act and the Ontario Water Resources Act.

To have a full and complete environmental assessment, one must start at the conceptual stage of a project, well in advance of acquiring property, well in advance of making some of those decisions that have to be made and many years in advance of a facility's coming on stream. In the last little while, we are seeing those projects coming under the full review of the Environmental Assessment Act. A whole new change of direction will be seen. I think what has happened was very logical. The act is coming into full force now.

NATURAL GAS CONVERSION

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker. Since I believe the minister agrees the problems in energy are that we are running out of cheap oil in this country and not running out of natural gas, can the minister tell us exactly what his government is doing to expand the availability of natural gas in areas of our province which are not now covered, such as some of the smaller urban centres like Madoc, Bancroft and places of this kind? What is the government doing now to expand the availability of natural gas to centres of this kind in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: At the present time, Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition will know as a result of an announcement, the information on which I shared with members of the general government committee last week in the estimates, the established natural gas suppliers are very busy at the moment trying to cope with the numerous requests for conversion. The information that was shared with the committee at that time shows the amount of interest there is in this particular program on the part of the consumers in already serviced areas and areas that can be accommodated for this. This occupies a great deal of their time in order to meet that particular demand.

My understanding—and I am meeting with the natural gas companies shortly—is that they are awaiting some further particulars and some further information on the incentive program, about which we have been hearing briefly during the course of the last few weeks, and how that program might relate to opportunities which they might seize to expand service in areas not now serviced by these companies in order to provide natural gas to those particular parts of the province.

Mr. S. Smith: I take it the government is basically waiting for the outcome of certain discussions to do with incentive pricing of natural gas, if I understood what the minister said. He's nodding his head. I assume I have then.

Can the minister then comment on these discussions, and in particular can he comment on the report that the government of Alberta is considering a scheme which would reduce the price of natural gas to 65 per cent of the equivalent price of oil? Can he tell us, particularly, whether the government of Ontario is demanding that this reduction be of such a nature that the benefits are actually passed on directly to the consumer in the form of a lower price paid, or is it simply going to go to the companies themselves?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Leader of the Opposition should understand that we have been trying to get some clarification with respect to the program. It has only been talked about in generalities. We have no more detail, and we are trying to get some clarification, as I am sure the natural gas companies are, as well. At that time we will be able to comment.

There is no point in announcing a position with respect to a program about which we are trying to get some details in order that we can have a position. In other words, how would we be able to be specific with respect to answering your question until such time as we know what the program being proposed actually is?

saving on our supplies of heating oil in the winter of 1981-82 is going to be conversion to natural gas, will the minister undertake to meet with the industry providing conversion equipment so as to ensure there are no supply bottlenecks next winter or the winter after that?

Will the government undertake to bring in incentive programs to help encourage home owners to make the switch from heating oil to natural gas at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As the honourable member knows, Mr. Speaker, the government of this province has taken a position with respect to the price of natural gas that it should be unpegged and provide an even greater incentive with respect to its use as an alternative to home heating oil.

With respect to the latter part of the honourable member's question, we will be able to make some statement with respect to our program in that area once we have some clarification with respect to what we have been reading about in general terms insofar as a new incentive program is concerned related to the pricing situation, as he indicates.

In answering his question, I assume the equipment he is talking about is what is needed for purposes of conversion. As the honourable member will know, one of the reasons for the backlog at the moment is the inability of the suppliers to keep up with the demand in this particular jurisdiction. I agree with him we should be doing all we can in addressing that particular situation to cope with the increased demand for conversion.

Mr. Sargent: Here is an easy question for the minister, Mr. Speaker. In the event that the conversion from oil to gas doesn't come on stream and there is a big shortage of energy, would he consider setting up a multi-million-dollar make-work program for cutting down the thousands and thousands of dead elm trees in our part of Ontario, to make work and provide firewood for stoves?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am very optimistic that the conversion program to natural gas, which we have been talking about in this exchange, will be quite successful.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, speaking about this conversion program—we have had a lot of talk about that, and I have seen no government policy heretofore—is the minister aware of the very serious difficulties the natural gas companies, and particularly Union Gas, make and cause for the people who want to convert? For example, they will not pump out the oil; they will not take out the oil tanks the people have in their houses; they will provide no trade-in value for a perfectly good oil furnace in place.

Does the minister not feel that his government should talk to those distributors, to force them to give people who want to convert—because it is obviously the correct thing to do—a far better shake and not take advantage of them financially the way they are doing?

Hon. Mr. Welch: You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that some weeks ago, during the course of a debate on our energy policy, the honourable member who has just asked a supplementary question did recite in some detail the problems he personally was having with respect to conversion in this particular matter. I want to assure him that I have sent a copy of the Hansard report of that particular debate directly to the president of the company that services that area.

LEGISLATION FOR THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Premier about the government's efforts to provide protection against discrimination against the handicapped and specifically about Bill 188.

In view of the mounting opposition by groups representing the disabled to the government's bill to protect the handicapped against discrimination, and since these groups have taken the view that the bill is grossly inadequate and a separate bill would lead to separate and unequal status for the handicapped, will the government now agree to withdraw Bill 188 and to bring in an adequate, comprehensive and effective bill to protect the handicapped against discrimination as amendments to the Ontario Human Rights Code?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the leader of the New Democratic Party shares the government's desire to deal with this issue. We intend to move ahead with the legislation related to the handicapped.

I understand that some concerns have been expressed; the minister will be addressing these concerns in meetings with those people wishing to make these representations.

It is the intention of the government to have as comprehensive a bill as possible. To delay it, to suggest that it come in as part of amendments to the Ontario Human Rights Code, would not be moving the process ahead. If there are some alterations to be made in the bill itself—and I haven't met with these groups yet, but I know the minister is in the process—we are quite prepared to do that.

We want to see that particular legislation approved by this House. The minister will have more to say on it after he has had meetings with the groups who are registering these concerns.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Premier not aware of the overwhelming opposition to the proposed legislation by the groups representing the handicapped to the point where they are prepared to accept certain delays in the legislation if they can get a guarantee from the government that it will be replaced by amendments to the Human Rights Code?

Is the Premier also aware that there was no consultation to speak of with those groups or with the advisory committee for the physically handicapped in Ontario? Since that consultation did not take place prior to the bill, and since these groups are now saying they don't want this bill in its present form but want amendments to the Human Rights Code, why will the government not accept their view, consult with them, and bring in the amendments to the Human Rights Code as they are proposing them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The minister has every intention of meeting with those groups. In fact, there was consultation prior to the legislation, and the minister will be meeting with them in an attempt to resolve the difficulties.

Mr. S. Smith: In view of the opinions being expressed by the representatives of the handicapped, why would the Premier not bring in a bill to amend the Human Rights Code and then allow any further amendments that might happen to come up for debate to be voted on by a free vote, just as the federal House has had on a number of matters?

Mr. Sterling: Why free?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Have you no position?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: The words "free vote" seem to cause a tremendous degree of consternation over there. I can appreciate that; I can understand that; I'm not sure if they're more nervous about the word "vote" or the word "free." "Vote" is somewhat nerve-racking for these people.

Mr. Speaker: What was the question?

Mr. S. Smith: The question is, why would the Premier not accede to the wishes of the handicapped persons and have a proper amendment to the Ontario Human Rights Code brought before us for debate and accept that, if other matters happen to come before this House by way of amendment, those should be voted on by way of a free vote? Why does the Premier find that an unacceptable procedure?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I won't embarrass the leader of—he's not of the Liberal Party any more; I see in all his communiques he leaves the word off. I knew why he did that federally but why is he doing it provincially? I've never found a party name to be offensive.

Mr. Peterson: Your own name is offensive.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand that, but don't apply that to all my relatives.

I won't embarrass the Leader of the Opposition as to why he wants to talk about free votes and why he would leave the leadership of his party if there wasn't a free vote. I won't pursue that because I think it's really rather ludicrous in the context of this very serious matter of dealing with legislation for the handicapped.

As I said to the leader of the New Democratic Party, the minister will be meeting with the groups who have expressed an interest. Surely the members of this House are anxious to have legislation dealing with the question of the handicapped, and we as a government would like to see this proceed. I think really what the member is suggesting is a political device to get himself off the hook with his own caucus; but he has to solve that himself.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Every member of this Legislature has a right to participate in the question period. Most of all, they have a right to be heard.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Premier why we should accept a bad bill, with the argument that we need to get legislation through in a hurry, when we have been waiting since 1974 and 1975; then, from 1977 on, we were promised there would be amendments to the Ontario Human Rights Code? It doesn't make sense to try to use the argument of haste now with what is simply a bad bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This government is interested in good legislation, Mr. Speaker. Those members may not be, but we are, and we intend—

Mr. Bounsell: You don't have good legislation here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen. The history of that party doesn't indicate they are at all interested in good legislation. It is always a parochial, non-objective point of view they express over there.

We are prepared to consult with those groups which have a vital interest in this. That is the intention of the minister and of the government. If it is necessary to make alterations to the bill, to accommodate legitimate concerns, we are quite prepared to do so. I am simply suggesting if members want to delay this process for some period of time, that's fine; but we would like to move ahead.

Mr. S. Smith: Since everyone in Ontario is aware the reason the Premier didn't bring in an amendment to the Ontario Human Rights Code was to get himself off the political hook, why doesn't he show the courage now? Let him bring it in, and let's see where the members of his party stand. Let's see where the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) stands. Let's see where the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) stands. Bring it forward and let's see where they stand over there.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I only go by what I read. Quite obviously, like a fish, the Leader of the Opposition took the bait today, hook, line and sinker.

MINING COMMUNITIES

Mr. Cassidy: A question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that it is now two years since the Premier announced the formation of his cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities, and since in that two-year period four of the nine iron ore mines in Ontario have closed down, can the Premier say what specific policies the cabinet committee has recommended to bring about the revival of one-industry towns which have been affected, such as Atikokan?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) read into the record yesterday some material related to this matter. It is still a problem. The member's colleague the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) asked the identical question when his leader was away two or three days ago.

I acknowledge there is some difficulty, and there is no simple solution to it.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Premier say if the cabinet committee continues to meet on the economic future of mining communities, and when does it intend to bring forward in this Legislature a policy to deal with the future of single-industry towns in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The committee doesn't function just related to the question of mining. It also relates to the pulp and paper industry. While they don't like the policy we have adopted, those members who have constituents in those communities who do relate to the pulp and paper industry are very much in support of the policy we have introduced just to deal with that particular problem in northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Premier: In view of the lengthy answer I got from the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) yesterday, I would like to put the question to the Premier as well. While I appreciate some of the things that have been done, would he not agree that it is time those communities could expect some guidelines as to what the government is going to do in regard to expanding the economic base, expanding tourism, providing industrial development officers and assisting in supporting the tax base of those communities that are losing their industries?

Does the Premier not agree that it is time there was a set of well-known rules and guidelines to deal with these specific problems?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think it's a question of a well-known set of guidelines. I think one deals with these situations, not necessarily individually but in terms of attempting to help those communities. For instance, what the Minister of Industry and Tourism has introduced with respect to the tourist industry, I think is probably going to have a significant impact on some of those communities about which the honourable member is concerned.

I'm not kidding anyone. We don't pretend to have answers to every individual problem. As a government we have been making some progress in terms of the pulp and paper industry, which the honourable member, in fairness, has supported, in spite of the fact that the member's leader hasn't. I thank him for that. The member's leader didn't hear me refer to the fact that the member was supporting that policy while he didn't—but that's not unusual in the Liberal caucus, in any event, so it doesn't surprise me.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the Premier has admitted he doesn't have any answers to the problems of one-industry mining towns in northern Ontario, can he, as a member of the cabinet committee—and I assume he is a member of that cabinet committee—tell us if he has asked the right questions regarding the future of one-industry mining towns in northern Ontario?

For example, has the committee specifically studied the report that was undertaken by the three steel producers of Ontario—Algoma, Stelco and Dofasco—with regard to the amounts of ore in northwestern Ontario?

What independent studies has his government done, and what will he tell the Legislature about the viability of those deposits at the Caland mines, Bending Lake and Lake St. Joseph?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, these matters are being studied by the ministry and by the cabinet committee.

I'm sort of an ex officio member of all cabinet committees, I should inform the honourable member. The difficulty is not always in asking the right questions, as I find here every day of the week except Wednesdays. The difficulty is finding the answer. The questions are there.

TEACHER-BOARD DISPUTES

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. I'm glad to see she is here and I hope she is feeling a little better. My question relates to the continuing contract difficulties in Brant county and in North York with regard to the teaching disruptions there.

Is the minister today in a position to explain what progress is being made in those particular situations and would she be in a position to recommend that compulsory arbitration take place, especially in view of the length of the disruption and the fact that both parties seem to be very far apart, and in view of the fact that we're winding up around here and we may not be in a position to legislate them back?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time, I have no intention of legislating anyone back. It seems to me it is up to the parties to the dispute in Brant to find a solution to their problems with the assistance which can be provided for them through the Education Relations Commission.

I think if the parties to that dispute are looking for the Legislature to solve their problems for them, they may be gravely disappointed. However, if indeed the educational program of those children is in jeopardy, I can promise the parties to that dispute that we will find a solution which will probably be unsatisfactory to both of them. But we are concerned primarily about the children and about the educational program.

It is certainly the best solution in any of these circumstances that a negotiated agreement, agreed to by both parties, provide the basis for the contract upon which they will work together for the ensuing years. I would hope the parties to these disputes would listen to that, would understand that philosophy and make every attempt to find those solutions.

Mr. Cunningham: I have a supplementary question relating to the difficulty facing the North York high-school students in their desire to compete in extracurricular athletic activities.

As a matter of policy, does the government condone the possible threat of sanctions or blacklisting of coaches who participate in teams from schools that currently are involved in disruptions? Will the minister take some kind of specific, finite and definite action to ensure that students may participate in athletic competition in Ontario, regardless of whether there are sanctions in force?

Mr. Speaker: That is really not a supplementary, but if the minister has a brief response I'll let her answer it.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would agree that it is scarcely a supplementary. However, that is one specifically peculiar situation which is a matter of grave concern to me. It is one of the reasons I established the external review committee to look at the terms and conditions of Bill 100, because the concept of work to rule is one which has potentially great damage and jeopardy for the rounded educational program of students. It is one which should be examined very carefully by those who are concerned about the board-teacher relationship and the legislation which controls that relationship.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, the minister must surely be aware there are student demonstrations allegedly planned for North York because of the work-to-rule situation. Given the fact feelings are running very high and that if there are disruptions individual schools might end up being closed, to nobody's benefit, why does the minister insist on going through with this obviously wrong principle? Why doesn't she bring together the sides for final offer selection or some other form of compulsory arbitration, put an end to the work to rule and put an end to the strike in Brant county? Why do those children have to suffer when there is nothing they can possibly do to remedy the situation?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: First, I would like to remind the Leader of the Opposition that students in North York have provided a model of behaviour which we in this Legislature would do well to emulate from time to time. They have functioned extremely responsibly and are certainly providing an example for both the board and the teachers' federation in their responsible approach to the problem they're facing. There is no indication at this point there will be demonstrations of any kind. I think it's unfair of the Leader of the Opposition to suggest to the media that these are impending or imminent activities.

There will be a meeting of the North York Council of Student Presidents within the next day or so to consider future action as a result of the very careful deliberations which the student presidents have taken over the last several weeks. I am in very frequent contact with those representatives because many of them live in my own riding. I'm extremely proud of them. They're doing a very good job and we are attempting to do what we can to help.

I would remind the Leader of the Opposition the teachers' federation was offered final offer selection and rejected it out of hand by a very large majority. Final offer selection is no panacea. It is fine for specific, singular items for solution, but in the broad spectrum of solutions which must be found it is no answer at all. That board and that local of the teachers' federation must find a solution to their problem. We are willing to provide them with any assistance we can to help them to find that solution, but they must find it.

ENERGY EXPORTS

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Now that the Prime Minister has indicated a unilateral willingness to supply the US with emergency oil and given that Canada is already a signatory to the emergency oil-sharing agreements of the International Energy Agency, can the minister inform this House whether he has obtained a firm understanding from the federal government of what the implications may entail for Ontario this winter?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I haven't any firm information from the federal ministry relative to the news item carried today in connection with some modification with respect to a small increase in the export of heavy crude oil. As the honourable member will know because of her visit to the National Energy Board at the end of last week, I am expecting within the next day or two an update with respect to the supply situation as of the end of October on the basis of the November 10 accumulation. Perhaps once I have that I will be in a better position to share with the honourable member in the House the details of that particular matter.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I was not alluding to any forthcoming pronouncements from the NEB. I ask, in a supplementary way, is the minister satisfied with the terms of the international oil-sharing arrangement which commits Canada to cutting oil imports by 47 per cent, while the US is only obligated to cutting oil imports by 19 per cent if an emergency is declared? Is he able to tell us what a 47 per cent cut in Canadian oil imports would mean to residential and business consumers in this province?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As far as Ontario is concerned, we are not dependent at the moment on any imports at all. The approximate 20 per cent of the national needs is all for the eastern part of Canada. The implications as far as Ontario is concerned wouldn't be great unless there was to be some rearrangement with respect to the country because of that emergency.

As the honourable member appreciates, and I hope she does, it is very difficult to answer hypothetical questions with respect to this matter. I think the important thing for Canadians as of this December day is that there is apparently no need to respond to any particular emergency situation, but we have to monitor these matters in so far as our own supply is, from time to time, on the basis of the actual situation. We have federal legislation which would be brought into play if need be to arrange for the national situation in the event of some problems with respect to supply.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, since this subject of petroleum supply for Ontario was first brought to this House on October 12, and since between that time and now nothing substantive whatsoever has taken place, all that has happened is rhetoric of one sort or another, will the minister undertake to deliver one statement to the House this next week which indicates comprehensive action on his part to soften the blow that ultimately will occur?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I feel the honourable member is not being quite fair in the preamble to his question. Every time a question with respect to supply has been brought up, we have responded on the basis of information which has been made available to us and on the basis of information the ministry has been able to obtain in consultation with the oil companies.

I am told that the November 10 information is now with the board. I have a Telex which I received just before coming into the House which would indicate that I will have an update on that matter.

I am told also that the media release will again stress the obvious need to curb consumption—a point which the honourable member has shared during his question—conservation of our resources, whatever the results of that particular survey are and will properly caution against alarm. That has always been my concern in responding to questions—wanting to share information which the honourable members are entitled to have without creating the problem itself.

SAFETY AT ROCK CONCERTS

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Solicitor General concerning the recent disaster in Cincinnati involving a rock concert and the loss of life and injury there.

As the Solicitor General, being the man responsible for disasters and the authority in the fire marshal's department—

Mr. Speaker: I think that would be a legitimate point of privilege.

Mr. G. Taylor: The minister will respond to that at the appropriate time, Mr. Speaker.

Would the minister, in his capacity as the chief person in that regard, have the legislation reviewed or the public halls reviewed to make sure a similar disaster would not happen here? I have attended with my children at rock concerts in Maple Leaf Gardens, where they have some 3,000 people on the floor of the ice surface and another 16,000 in the seating section and the performers—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. G. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have more detail, if you so desire.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Solicitor General have a response?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know if I have a response, but I have a defence. Obviously, I am reluctant to accept responsibility for disasters, despite the allegations I hear across the aisle from day to day.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a very tragic, very distressing occurrence. Certainly we will want to learn as much as we can from that very terrible tragedy to avoid any such occurrence in this province.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Housing has the answer to a question asked previously.

OLC SALE OF LOTS

Hon. Mr. Bennett: On November 29 there was a question asked by the member for St. Catharines concerning land offered for sale by the Ontario Land Corporation in Niagara Falls and Welland.

The Ontario Land Corporation owns serviced lots in these municipalities: 41 lots in Welland and 129 in Niagara Falls. Last September these lots were offered for sale to the builders registered with the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada new home warranty program. They were also advertised four times in the Welland Tribune and the Niagara Falls Review.

Market studies in July and consultation with the local Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation office indicated prices for serviced lots in Niagara Falls ranged from $300 to $325 per foot frontage. Therefore, OLC's asking price for a 40-foot single lot was $12,000, which was at the low end of market. In Welland, the market price in July ranged from $300 to $325 per frontage foot, or $15,000 for a typical 50-foot lot, again based on the low end of market.

In view of the lack of response from qualified builders, asking prices were reduced to $11,000 per lot in Niagara Falls and $14,500 in Welland. This was communicated to over 300 HUDAC builders on November 9 by a circular letter addressed "to whom it may concern." I would be pleased to provide to the member for St. Catharines the mailing list of the builders who received the circular.

It is OLC's policy to sell lands to builders registered with the HUDAC home warranty program. If the member or others have individuals who are willing to buy lots from OLC from its surplus inventory, I would be pleased to hear from them. One of the reasons we have tried to sell to developers is for the simple reason that quite often grading and levelling and subdivision agreements must be entered into with the municipalities.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister clearly saying the average individual citizen who doesn't happen to be in the building industry will be eligible to purchase these lots and the minister will assure me if those people make applications to purchase one of those lots they will have an opportunity to purchase them?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: If the lot is ready and able to be sold as an individual lot, we would entertain an offer from an individual anywhere in this province. If the lot happens to be in a condition whereby it must be part of an overall subdivision because of grading and service requirements, then obviously it would have to be sold as a parcel to afford the opportunity of moving out the surplus lands from OLC.

PRESTOLITE PLANT

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. Is the minister aware that a new group of investors has come forth to join Joe Mason and the employees in the reopening of the Prestolite plant?

Is the minister prepared to discuss with these people the provision of provincial funds under the Employment Development Fund as he was in the case of the previous people involved in the reopening of this plant?

Thirdly, has the ministry been approached by the new investors for such moneys?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, yes and indirectly.
[3:00]

AMBASSADOR BRIDGE

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, Mr. Speaker. We will try the minister again.

Is the minister aware that Central Cartage of Michigan has dropped its application before the Foreign Investment Review Agency for the purchase of the Ambassador Bridge between Windsor and Detroit, the only bridge of the 14 between Ontario and the United States that is not government owned? It is now applying under the name of Fallbridge Holdings, a Canadian incorporated company but wholly owned by Central Cartage and therefore still a foreign-owned company. Will the minister in this government ensure that this sale to this foreign company be vigorously opposed before FIRA?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, the member well knows that all we do in the case of FIRA applications is to convey to the federal government our feelings with regard to any particular application, whether they meet our priorities and whether or not they are consistent with our goals and ambitions.

As the member is well aware, pursuant to the FIRA legislation we cannot disclose the recommendations we may make to the federal government. I think though it would be fairly safe for the member to conclude that as minister of tourism and as minister responsible for industry as well I would have certain predictable reservations about the ownership of that particular bridge, which is so important to both industry and tourism in the province.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: If the Canadian government and this government continue to be uninterested in purchasing this very profitable endeavour—over $2 million per year profit—would the minister at least ensure that this bridge eventually comes under government control? Or indeed, would he discuss the matter with his colleague the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), to determine whether or not the Ontario Municipal Board would be inclined to allow the city of Windsor to float additional debentures to purchase this bridge at a very reasonable price, particularly in view of the tremendous profitability of this venture?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be pleased to pursue the latter suggestion with my colleagues. I am not sure that we might have so direct a degree of influence on the discussions and the decisions of the OMB that we may make that possible.

I will say that I for one, would much prefer to see the bridge owned by, for example, the city of Windsor, than by a private company be it Canadian or American.

RAPE CRISIS CENTRES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, yesterday part of a series of questions was asked by the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) of my colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Walker), about the policies of St. Joseph's and Queensway Hospitals with respect to the inspection of possible rape victims.

The staff of my ministry have been in contact this morning with the chief administrators of both hospitals, both of whom have assured us it is their policy to examine possible rape victims.

SALES TAX REBATES

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will try to be as short as possible Mr. Speaker. This is to provide some additional clarification of my earlier response to the question raised by the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins), concerning refund of sales tax to a vendor whose customer becomes bankrupt before paying taxes.

Where a merchant sells taxable goods on credit and the account becomes a bad debt, the sales tax legislation allows us to refund to the merchant the tax on this sale if he has submitted it to us. Provided that the merchant does not continue to extend credit to his customer, we will refund the tax outstanding from credit sales made in the last six months. I referred to 18 months; I correct that, it's six months of dealing with the customer.

I should emphasize however, that this provision applies only to the sale of goods and not, for example, to the sale of buildings where the tax is paid by the contractor and not by the purchaser of the building.

In the case raised by the honourable member involving bankruptcy of a customer, the tax portion of the outstanding account at the time of bankruptcy will probably be refundable. However, if the member would like to provide me with details of the specific case I would be prepared to look into it for him.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. Swart: My question, Mr. Speaker, is of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Will he recall that last Tuesday I asked his colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), to investigate and intervene in the storage of explosives and toxics and flammable materials in rail cars in the Port Robinson railyards and he replied that the Minister of Transportation and Communications had made representation to the federal Minister of Transport on this overall issue and that an interim order on the make-up of the trains would be made in a day or two? I ask the minister now if he has seen Bill C-25, the federal answer to the problem. If he has seen it doesn't he agree that that bill is wholly inadequate and can he tell the House whether that interim order was made last week and, if so, does it apply to situations like the one in Port Robinson?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, yes, we have seen the new bill and we have the draft regulations. Although we are reviewing the bill I couldn't at this moment agree with the honourable member that it is totally inadequate.

In regard to the interim order, I have information that the order was issued by way of a Telex message to the railway companies. It was last week, as I indicated that it probably would be. The wording of the order does provide that tank car shipments of flammable compressed gases must be separated from the tank-car shipments of chlorine, hydrous ammonia and sulphur dioxide by at least five non-placarded rail cars which are not listed in section 74-589(j) of the so-called red book of the Canadian Transport Commission.

I just have a Telex message on this matter. I haven't actually seen the printed order because, as I understand it, it was being translated and printed so it could be officially presented and gazetted in both languages. The order does provide for the separation of cars in the train by five cars carrying non-dangerous materials.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he does not realize that that interim order only deals with trains in transit and does not deal with a situation like that which we have in Port Robinson and many other railyards in this province where they have stored cars containing very hazardous materials, materials which will interact, side by side? Will he immediately make representation to the Canadian National Railways and to the Canadian Transport Commission to eliminate at once the hazards which exist in storing these kinds of products in rail cars side by side?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker, I will not contact the Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Transport Commission. My contact would be with the federal Minister of Transport and we will bring this to his attention.

LEGAL SERVICES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question for the Attorney General in regard to northern Ontario. Has the Attorney General had time to consider our conversation about providing notaries public in northern Ontario who would be able to aid in land transfers and things of that ilk for communities that are 50 or 100 miles away from the nearest legal assistance and who have trouble getting into these communities to conduct this kind of business?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to divert the honourable member. I am just reading the seventh page of a response to him in relation to boundary waters on Lac La Croix so I am sure he will enjoy all seven pages.

As soon as the estimates process is completed, Mr. Speaker, I hope I will have an opportunity to meet with officials of the law society to discuss the member's concern. I think the legal aid plan might be utilized in some manner to afford that assistance to people who live in the north who just don't have access to legal assistance. If anything can be done, I think it should at least be attempted through the legal aid system.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I gather from that the minister intends to deal again with the legal fraternity, but obviously they are not going to be able to provide assistance on more than maybe one day a week in some of these communities. Does the minister realize that a lot of the people in these communities are on shift work? If they happen to be working for the railroad they are out of town for two or three days and if somebody comes into the community even one day a week that will not be sufficient. What we really need are lay people with the ability to conduct some of these legal matters, such as notaries public and under the act the minister could restrict them to exactly those functions he considers necessary.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have a little difficulty with the suggestion, as I think I indicated to the honourable member. The idea of training individuals to in effect give legal advice, without the supervision of a lawyer who is licensed to practice in Ontario could be a rather risky enterprise. We do use paralegal assistance in our community law offices in various parts of the province, but an underlying principle in the provision of needed legal assistance in this manner is that there be some accountability at the professional level.

While I am very sympathetic to their problem, I would not be prepared to encourage a system that might lead to people receiving bad legal advice. I think perhaps the member and I should sit down and discuss further the nature of the assistance he considers to be most necessary. If the assistance is of a relatively limited nature, that would be something else again, but there are a number of aspects to this problem that have to be considered and I would be very happy to discuss this matter with him.

Mr. Speaker: Since there isn't time for a supplementary from the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier), perhaps you could include him in the meeting.

MOTION

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the resources development committee sit tomorrow from 9 a.m., to consider Bill 24, An Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act, 1971.

Mr. Foulds: Could the government House leader indicate why he has amended the motion presented to me by my House leader to strike out the words "to 10 a.m."? I assumed there was an agreement for the resources development committee to sit merely for one hour rather than to sit for an unlimited time. Or is it to be continuous?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I just got the typewritten copy of the motion a minute ago. It was my understanding we basically had agreed the committee would need an extra hour, from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m., to consider the bill, and then would move on to estimates. However, I was of the feeling if we put the motion in the terms it was written, 9 a.m. to 10 a.m., they would have to cease to consider the bill at 10 a.m. even if they needed another 15 minutes. I felt we should allow that flexibility to the committee, rather than to tie its hands completely and say it had only one hour to do the bill.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT

LIBRARY SERVICES

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind the honourable members that pursuant to standing order 105, I have received the annual report of the director of library services which I have today laid on the table.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PUBLIC COMMERCIAL VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 161, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, this is somewhat of a housekeeping amendment. It deals with clarification of some provisions that were made in Bill 89 last June relating to the so-called grandfathering of unlicensed truckers. It makes some housekeeping amendments regarding the common bill of lading and the W licence applications for regions. It really could be considered housekeeping legislation. I've presented a full explanation of these items to my critics.

I just want to indicate I will be asking that Bill 161 go to committee of the whole House. I'd like to advise the critics I have one amendment I will be implementing. They have been issued the amendment.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, we endorse the legislation which reflects the findings of the select committee on the highway transportation of goods. These amendments are somewhat minor but help to clarify the legislation respecting the grandfathering situation as described this past summer in Bill 89.

I appreciate the minister's consideration of the suggestion I made with regard to the extension of time in keeping with the original legislation. My concern then, as it is now, was that many people in the industry who are operating without benefit of a licence but who, in fact, may come within the provisions of Bill 89 were unable to make their application to the board in time. The amendment will extend the time to somewhere around the end of February of next year, which I believe to be in the best interests of the public and the people involved.

The balance of the amendments to the act are housekeeping in nature and we support them.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, the major thrust of Bill 161 is one that I can accept and I think the minister for consulting with both the Liberal critic and myself on it.

I have some questions and then maybe some concerns about one of the amendments the minister is proposing. I understand what he is attempting to do and I agree with the major thrust of what he's attempting to do; however, I will have some questions on subsection 1 of the first amendment he's proposing. Perhaps we can deal with that in committee.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe there are any questions to answer. I understand the member for Etobicoke wishes to ask some questions in committee and I'll answer them at that time.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 175, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, just very briefly again these are some minor amendments to the Highway Traffic Act. These amendments provide for the issuance of a special licence plate for road-testing purposes to motor vehicle inspection stations which need proper authority to do a road test on a vehicle that may have had the plates removed because it was unfit.

There are also some minor amendments regarding the probationary licence program. It clarifies the suspension of a licence and makes amendments to the definition of an ambulance and fire department vehicle, emergency vehicles and other minor modifications to the legislation passed last spring—last June I believe it was—allowing for emergency vehicles to proceed under certain circumstances through a red traffic light.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, again these are housekeeping matters relating to the Highway Traffic Act and somewhat of a minor nature and we endorse them.

Mr. Philip: As the minister said, the amendments are housekeeping. The one that struck me as interesting is the one that deals with the fire and ambulance amendment to section 6 of the bill.

Perhaps the minister would like to discuss this in committee, or perhaps he can simply answer it now. Is there legislation forthcoming, or some kind of policy forthcoming on extractions, since this has been a concern that both myself and the Liberal critic have had for some time. We have met with his officials. It seems to me that people are dying on the roads and on our highways and they are not able to be removed expeditiously. Many of them are becoming wheelchair victims unnecessarily because this minister, the Solicitor General and the Ministry of Health can't seem to decide whose jurisdiction extrication comes under.

Accepting the fact this is a housekeeping amendment, this one section is at least some hopeful indication this government is finally coming up with some kind of policy on extrication and we can expect some action on this in the near future. If so, when?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask the minister a couple of questions pertaining to these amendments.

The first one I would like the minister to answer, and if possible to advise on: I recall the time we in this Legislature accepted the originating amendments to the Highway Traffic Act allowing emergency vehicles such as ambulances and fire department vehicles to proceed through a red light subsequent to a call, after having made a full stop. I would like to know from the minister whether he has received any representation on this from police departments, fire departments, et cetera. There have been a number of accidents, I know, in a couple of jurisdictions and there has been some discussion about provisions of the Highway Traffic Act. Some people seem to claim that our amendments—made, I think last year—render the situation more dangerous than it was before.

I am not one who necessarily subscribes to that view, because I think the legislation before was even more confusing; in some ways this legislation makes it all clearer. I am wondering if the minister has received complaints about it.

The other matter is that I was not aware there was a vehicle on the road called a cardiac arrest emergency vehicle. I was not aware of that sort of vehicle on our highways. Is this something new, Mr. Speaker? I have not heard of it. What does it look like, for the uneducated, unsophisticated, or what ever? What are we looking at? What is the public looking at, at an intersection, when it meets one of these animals coming his way?

Finally, I would like to say to the minister that it seems to make an abundance of good sense to me that special powers be given to these emergency vehicles when they are responding to a call, but when they are going back there is no reason why they should be speeding or proceeding through intersections on a red light. That amendment in section 7(a)(i) seems to make good sense.

Hon. Mr. Snow: With regard to the comments made by the member for Etobicoke I would say that we do recognize in this bill the emergency extrication—if that's the right word—vehicle when properly equipped as required in the legislation, to have the same privileges in going to an emergency as a fire or police vehicle.

As I'm sure the honourable member knows—there has been for some time an inter-ministerial committee working with the Attorney General, Solicitor General, my ministry and others on this whole matter of emergency support vehicles. I understand that the report is about ready for publication and will be published in the very near future by the Solicitor General.

With regard to the member for Ottawa East's comments, the cardiac arrest emergency vehicle provision in this bill is at the special request of the Ottawa Civic Hospital, I believe.

Mr. Roy: That is why I asked the question.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The member said he didn't know what it was or where he might expect to find it.

Mr. Roy: I've never seen it in action.

Hon. Mr. Snow: To my knowledge, there is only one of these vehicles at the present time. It is located in the city of Ottawa. It runs from the Ottawa Civic Hospital. It was brought to our attention after this amendment was put in that that vehicle should have the same provision. If it has the siren and the red light, it will have the same privileges. The member might expect to find it in Ottawa.

I would also like to say I have not had any complaints or any problems brought to my attention by police or fire departments since this legislation was brought in. I had a meeting last week with about 150 to 200 police safety officers from practically all the police forces in the province. As a matter of fact, I had a discussion on this particular matter with them and no problems were brought to my attention.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

House in committee of the whole.

PUBLIC COMMERCIAL VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 161, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 1 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor.

Section 1(1):

"Subsection 6(11) of the Public Commercial Vehicles Act, being chapter 375 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1970, as enacted by the Statutes of Ontario, 1979, chapter 56, section 6, is amended by adding at the end thereof 'other than a class F, FS or R operating licence, as prescribed in the regulations.'"

Section 1(2):

"Subsection 15 of the said section 6 is amended by striking out '120' in the second line and inserting in lieu thereof '180.'"

Section 1(3):

"Subsection 19 of the said section 6 is amended by striking out 'under section 19 of the Ontario Highway Transport Board Act' in the fourth and fifth lines."

Will you give us a short explanation, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Three items are covered under this amendment. Subsection 1 deals with the grandfathering provisions of Bill 89. The way the bill is written at the present time, any applicant for licensing under those provisions was prohibited from applying if that applicant held any type of a PCV operating authority during the period in question.

After consideration, and after the bill was passed, certain problems were brought to my attention. I consulted with my opposition critics and agreed on this amendment. The holding of a class F, FS, or an R licence, which are very minor licences under the system, would not prohibit an operator from applying for another type of licence.

Subsection 2 is the extension of time for the application under this provision from 120 days to 180 days from August 31. This extension of time was requested by the member for Wentworth North. I had no objection to implementing that amendment.

Subsection 3 is a housekeeping amendment which clarifies that after the granting of a licence under this grandfathering provision there will be, according to legislation, a review of the probationary licence after the one-year period rather than at the option of the board.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Chairman, in anticipation that these amendments are going to pass I'd like to ask the minister if he would consider not only itemizing these changes in the Ontario Gazette and wherever else he might consider, but also some form of publication in the press, so people who would be interested in this and people who might be able to make applications pursuant to the original provisions of Bill 89 are aware of it so we don't have a situation, say in March or April or some time thereafter, of people coming to us wanting to make applications pursuant to these provisions and finding they are unable to do so.

Because it's a highly technical matter that applies to very few people and sometimes there isn't an understanding of just what is involved, it would be my hope that where people can apply they will, so we don't have some difficulties some time after the end of February, when people who might want to participate in this would find themselves pre-empted from it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I will try and see what we can do to publicize this. I would hope anyone planning to apply under this provision would know about the provision. Of course, this was the provision recommended by the select committee three or more years ago and was finally legislated last year after lengthy discussions with the industry. It was proclaimed with the 120-day period.

We'll certainly try in every way possible to publicize it. I don't know that I want to give the member a commitment that we'll do a mass advertising campaign, but I'll certainly discuss it and see what we can do within the industry to make sure everyone knows of the extension of time.

Mr. Philip: I assume what we have here are three amendments and that they will be dealt with separately. They're dealing with matters that are basically related to the same problem of regulating the deregulated, but they're substantially different.

The problem I have is, first of all, philosophically I disagree in my guts with regulating in any form the gipsy operators who have shown such disregard for the law in the first place. I recognize and the minister recognizes we have a problem of what to do about the small fellow, who really should be called a gipsy operator, but who might have picked up an F, an FS, or an R operating authority along the way. Should he be penalized or should he be simply considered as part of that gipsy operation, that nonlicensed body we now allow in under the grandfather clause?

I would have thought the minister would have discussed this amendment with the industry. I was disturbed a few moments ago when I asked him, before we dealt with the bill, if he had contacted the industry, and he informed me he hadn't. He has always boasted with some justification that he has consulted with the industry on the amendments to all of the provisions of the select committee on the highway transportation of goods. I know he has done that, but suddenly this one comes along and he hasn't consulted with the industry on it. At least that is what he has informed me.

My first question is what happens if someone has an A operating authority and also has an R or an FS? Is the minister suddenly then going to allow him some kind of grandfathering by putting in this amendment, or can he assure us he is not? If he is, then what he is doing is saying to every legal, large operator, who may have operated part of his business illegally or without authority, that he now can come in under the grandfather clause.

If we are going to do that, I want to be aware at least of what we are doing. If we are going to do that or if we are going to give authority to those who have had an F, FS or an R operating authority then what do we say to the people who may have another kind of operating authority? Will they not come to us and say: "You made this exemption for these fellows. You have exempted all of the gypsies. Why am I the one who is penalized?"

I would like to have some answer to that question. First, why has there been no consultation with the industry; and, second, how can we handle the fellow who may have an A but also an R operating authority?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I did tell the honourable member a few moments ago I have not discussed this amendment with the industry personally. I know members of my staff met last week with representatives of OTA. I can't tell him at this moment whether this particular amendment was discussed. Certainly they were aware of the bill, but I can't say this amendment was discussed.

I personally have two meetings arranged. I believe one is scheduled with the OTA next Monday in my office, where I meet with them regularly to discuss numerous items. As it so happens, this bill came up for debate before that meeting could take place.

I can't tell the honourable member for sure, but I really wasn't that concerned because I felt this is a very minor amendment and not something of any grand scale. It is to deal with a situation where one of these operators may have had, for instance, one dump-truck licence during that period, which would prohibit him from applying for some other more major part of his operation that may have been operated on a lease or a semi-illegal basis.

I can assure the honourable member it certainly is not the intention that anyone who has any other class of licence other than the ones in the amendment, the F, FS or R, to have the privilege of applying under this bill.

I am advised the Ontario Trucking Association was certainly advised of this bill on the day it was introduced. That still doesn't tell me whether they were advised of the amendment I introduced today.

Mr. Philip: Perhaps I can help the minister on that. I took the trouble of calling the Ontario Trucking Association when I saw the amendment and when I was concerned about exactly who we were letting in under this amendment. I spoke to the executive vice-president and he expressed shock. He had seen the bill but not the amendment. He expressed the same concern I have, that perhaps we don't really know who we are letting in, who we are grandfathering, under this particular section.

Unless I can have some assurance from the legislative counsel to the minister that we are only allowing in these small operators who may have accidentally picked up, in the process of their operations, the F, FS or R operating authority, then I have real problems in accepting this particular amendment.

Under those circumstances, where we have some reasonable doubt and concerns, I would ask the minister to consider withdrawing this one amendment pending some discussion with the industry and finding out what their concerns are. Perhaps we can have an opportunity to bring that in and handle that problem, which I recognize as a problem. The minister and I are in agreement on that.

Rather than bring in a bad amendment, an amendment which may do something we don't want to do, that neither party wants to do, perhaps the minister would be willing to withdraw it until he has had an opportunity to discuss this specific amendment and its implications with the industry.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am advised by my legal advisers there is absolutely no doubt in their minds this amendment we are putting in allows only those who have had the three specific types of licences to apply. That is the best commitment I can give. It certainly is not the intention to open it up any further.

I can give the honourable member a commitment that it is not my intention—and I won't have the opportunity I am sure, before the time limit expires for the application of this grandfathering—to make any further amendments to the bill that would bring in any others. I have no intention of accepting any further pleas for loosening this regulation.

My legal staff here and my assistant deputy minister assure me they have no doubt this does not open the floodgates to anyone other than the holders of those particular classes of licence.

Mr. Philip: I assume then what the minister has just given us in fact amounts to a statement of policy or direction to the board. Therefore someone who happens to have an A operating authority and also one of the others just mentioned in the amendment will understand, or the board will understand, these are not open for consideration under the grandfathering clause.

Under subsection 2, which is the matter of striking out 120 in the second line and inserting 180, it seems to me there has been more than ample coverage in the various trade magazines about Bill 89. I don't really see why an additional 60 days is needed, but I am not going to object strenuously. If it pleases the Liberal critic then I am willing to go along with it.

I think his suggestion of additional advertising or additional publicity may well be worth the effort with the understanding that enforcement will be very tough after that 180 days. Because some of the very people who have operating authorities and have also operated gypsy operations have done so out of frustration that they are being undercut by the gypsy operators.

Surely, once we have this in place, we have to say at the end of the 180 days, "Game over; if you haven't applied, if you don't qualify, you are not getting it now, and we are going to nail you every time you go along our highways in competition with those who have followed the law."

I hope we can have the assurance with the minister that having passed that subsection, we will at least give it the kind of enforcement that is needed after the 180 days.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the honourable member I have no intention of extending this particular thing any further. I must say this amendment is totally at the request of the member for Wentworth North. Personally, I have not had any requests from the industry for an extension to this time limit. On the other hand, when I had that request, in taking it into consideration I had no real reason to say we should not give that extra 60 days if the honourable member had some information that I may not have had that he felt made it necessary. So, in the spirit of co-operation, I agreed to that amendment.

Mr. Cunningham: Perhaps I might offer an explanation here. Through discussions I have had with some people in the industry it's apparent there is a slight conflict that I guess is somewhat unavoidable in Bill 89. The conflict is that it would be illegal—I think the suggestion was made by the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) during the course of our select committee on the high-way transportation of goods—to conspire to deal with an individual who would purport to truck for hire without benefit of a PCV licence.

Ostensibly, what is required in Bill 89 to make successful application under this provision would be the open admission on the part of an individual who has operated without benefit of a PCV licence, under the guise of a lease or a buy-sell arrangement or not even that, of the fact they had operated without benefit of a licence and, of course, they had to be continuing to operate even up to the date of the application. This put some people in a difficult position and they were wondering just what the effect of law would be. They were somewhat hesitant to go before the board and admit that they were operating illegally.

To complicate matters it was even more difficult for them to obtain the assistance of witnesses, of shippers they had worked with, some of whom may not even be in business any more, to come before the board and admit, "Yes, we have been using somebody who doesn't have a PCV permit," and to say, on behalf of the carrier, "Yes, we have been operating and we have sinned," et cetera. Therein lies the difficulty and that reticence I think has been common with a number of operations and they have been reluctant to make an application.

With that in mind, I suggested if we could just extend it for a temporary period of time then those individuals may make an application. I agree with the member for Etobicoke that if at the conclusion of the 180 days, which I gather would be around the end of February, they have not made their application and if at the conclusion of the hearings applications either haven't been granted or they haven't been made, then the full course of the law should come into effect and the so-called bad actors should be dealt with with the full force of the law. Conversely, those provisions of the act respecting shippers who would conspire with people who don't have a licence should apply as well and strict enforcement should take place.

That was the trade-off we made, the concession we made, to the regulated industry to facilitate the licensing of these heretofore unlicensed operations, and I feel that is the only way the legislation can work. It's the only way the compromise we have effected can be facilitated.

I would hope that in these extra 60 days anybody who hasn't obtained a licence and who might be able to make an application under these grandfather conditions would in fact do so. If they don't, then that's their fault. We have done the best we can and the law will provide for people who break it.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, out of interest—and I am sure it will be of interest to the journals that cover our deliberations on this—can the minister inform us how many non-authorized trucking companies have applied to date? How many have given the minister some indication they are going to apply for this grandfathering? He informed me the other day there were very few, but it would be interesting to know who is applying, where they are applying for and what authority they are asking for.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give the honourable member that information. I can get it. I will inquire from the Ontario Highway Transport Board. I am not aware of any particular applications under this provision. Of course, they have until the end of December. The last time I inquired it appeared there was very little interest, but it may be that the applications will come in before the end of December, or now, before the end of February. I will inquire of the board. As you know, applications do not come to the ministry and the only way we would know about them is to make an inquiry as to how many there are. I will inquire and get that information.

Mr. Philip: I have one question about the third part of the amendment the minister is proposing. Can the minister give us some assurance that the review that will take place at the end of a year of those who have in fact been grandfathered in will be a thorough review, the kind of review that will be as vigorous as the proof of necessity and convenience an applicant would have to go through in applying for an authority? Can he give us that assurance? Will they be simply rubber stamping and saying, "Yes, you seem to be operating OK to us"? Will there be a thorough investigation and a hearing and an examination of their performance during that year?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, this is the whole purpose of the amendment. The amendment here is to clarify that the review is not at the option of the board under the other section of the act. The amendment is to say that a review will be held, and I assure you it will be thorough.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion on the proposed amendments?

Mr. Philip: Just on a point of order, can we vote on it section by section, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I see no reason why we cannot. They are distinct subsections. I will put the subsections separately.

All those in favour of subsection 1 of Mr. Snow's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

Subsections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 161, as amended, reported.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 175, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, do you have any amendments for this?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Chairman, no amendments.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I want to know what the minister's intentions are about the point system in so far as it applies to probationary drivers.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't have the regulations that will be under this particular act for the probationary licences. I don't have the detailed regulations here in my hand at this moment. I understand they are almost ready. They will be going to the regulations committee in a matter of the next couple of weeks.

Mr. Renwick: I wasn't asking for the actual document. I just wondered what type of modifications and what type of exemptions the minister intends to provide for probationary drivers. If he hasn't got the information, I suppose I will have to wait until it comes out in the regulations.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The basic thrust of the probationary driver's licence, as I am sure we debated here when the bill was passed last year, is to detect the offending new driver. I say "new driver," not necessarily "young driver," because any driver getting a licence whether he is 16 or 66, would be on this system.

The basic thrust of the regulations will be to trigger the demerit point system earlier, in order to bring to the attention of the new driver the error of his ways—speeding or improper turns or whatever it may be—earlier than would normally come about via the normal demerit point system. There will be, I believe, somewhat different, short-term suspensions at a smaller number of points. I believe it now is 16 kilometres per hour that you must be speeding before you lose demerit points. I think we are considering regulations—and I haven't seen the final draft—so that a speeding ticket for the new driver for less than 16 kilometres per hour would trigger a demerit point.

Mr. Renwick: Is it the minister's intention that when the probationary period is over and the regular licence is issued the driver would commence with no demerit points—in other words, that any demerit points accumulated during the probationary period would be eliminated—or would they be carried over on his record?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am sorry, I did not expect to have a debate as to the details of the regulations as part of the debate on the legislation, otherwise I could have had our draft regulations here. As I recall the draft we have discussed, there will be provisions in these regulations that if a probationary driver builds up a certain number of demerit points that trigger a suspension then his probationary period starts all over again from that point. He must also have a certain period of no offences before the probationary licence turns into a full licence. That is about the best I can explain it right now.

Mr. Renwick: That's fine. I wouldn't dream of asking the minister any embarrassing questions if he would only put in a GO station at Queen Street East and de Grassi.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are you proposing that as an amendment?

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, with respect to this ability to prescribe modifications to the demerit point system, would the minister agree with me that, even from the attempt to explain the kinds of patterns of modification which may occur and the restoration of full points or partial points as that system moves through, there's going to have to be some education go on so the people know just how this program is going to work?

Does the minister intend perhaps to make a statement in the House or at least to put out some sort of press release information so that not only will the members of the House know about this circumstance but so there will be some publicity available to the probationary driver so he or she knows what kind of pattern may be expected if there are convictions or demerit points that are going to cause a licence to be in jeopardy?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Certainly we will be publicizing the fact when the regulations are ready. Of course they will be gazetted but I realize everybody does not read the Ontario Gazette every Sunday morning like the honourable member may. This mainly affects new drivers and I'm sure we'll be putting out appropriate pamphlets and information as part of our driver education manual and in our driver test centres, so the new driver getting his licence will be fully aware of the provisions of the probationary licence.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps there might be the opportunity to have an information kiosk at the GO subway station at Queen and de Grassi.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Philip: I appreciate the minister's reply to my question on extrication but it leaves me with as many questions as I have answers. I'd like to deal with at least some of them at the present time rather than delay the minister during his supplementary estimates, which of course are coming up before we adjourn.

Did I hear the minister say that before the House adjourns we will be having a copy of the report on extrication before us? Is that his intent? Is that the understanding?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, I'm told that a report is being printed, that it's coming out any day. It's being published by the Solicitor General with his estimates before the House, so maybe the member would like to ask him about it, because the member did mention to me a few moments ago that he was bringing other matters up with the Solicitor General during his estimates. He may know exactly what day that report is coming out. I understand that my staff expect it any day now.

Mr. Philip: I have trouble bringing things up with the Solicitor General because I sit beside him in the chair, so it's much easier for me to talk to the minister across the floor since his ministry is involved with it.

Is the minister indicating that the fire departments or the police will be responsible for extrication? Is that the thrust of the policy?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I haven't seen the report; there's a new ministerial committee working on it. I understand the report will be coming out quite soon but emergency measures such as that do come under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General. What the report will recommend at this time I can't tell the honourable member.

Mr. Philip: Can the minister tell us how long it has been since first this interministerial committee was struck and how long we've been waiting for the report? My calculation in rough terms is something like a year and a half; it may be longer than that.

Can the minister tell us why it is that his ministry, the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of the Solicitor General have not seen fit to—at least in the interim—subsidize or give some kind of financial support to groups such as the Simcoe rescue squad so they can expand their operations, particularly their training operations, on the assumption they are saving lives; people are dying on the highways unnecessarily and many more lives could have been saved had this kind of operation expanded? The minister will be the first to admit the Simcoe rescue squad has provided a tremendously valuable service to people not only of the Barrie area but also to many of the people in my own riding who travel north to the cottages on highway 400, which can be very treacherous in this type of weather.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps we could find out clearly whether the minister's responsibility is really only to change a definition. From what I have heard, the responsibility here is that of the Solicitor General. Your involvement is one which may be ancillary, to make a definition change or do some other things. Is that correct or do you have an involvement in this kind of project, the Simcoe one mentioned, that has received a lot of favourable publicity?

Hon. Mr. Snow: That is why we have the interministerial committee with representatives of my ministry, the Solicitor General's, the Attorney General's and the Ministry of Health to consider this whole matter of extrication equipment and vehicles and who should be supplying it and who should be funding it.

I have had no provision in my ministry nor in my estimates and I'm not sure I have the legal authority to fund such services. I am not sure in my own mind, if these services are required, who should be supplying them. Should they be under the auspices of the OPP or under the auspices of the Ontario fire marshal? Should the municipal fire departments be the connecting link between the municipal government, the provincial government, the fire marshal's office and these services? It has nothing whatsoever to do with this bill.

I understand the honourable member's interest and I am interested too. But all this particular amendment does is put that type of vehicle, when it has the appropriate specified equipment on it, in the same position as a fire truck or a police cruiser or an ambulance going to an emergency. We have brought that particular type of vehicle into the act. There are some of these vehicles throughout the province, not only the Simcoe rescue squad vehicles.

Mr. Philip: By way of supplementary then, supposing we have a situation where the position paper comes down and says that a particular ministry has responsibility for that, and supposing a group such as the Simcoe rescue squad decides the service that is going to be provided by that particular ministry is not adequate and that it wishes to continue with some of its operations, would its vehicles be covered or just the appropriately designated vehicles of the ministry this long-overdue study finally decides is going to be responsible for this?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I believe the explanatory note that went with this says a ministry-recognized organization. I don't think we can leave this bill so loose anybody with a beat-up old truck can put a red light on the vehicle and call himself a rescue squad and have the privileges of the bill. As I see it, it says a crash extrication vehicle operated by a ministry-recognized organization.

Mr. Philip: If no ministry has recognized this organization, at least until this date, then it does create some problems. That is the point I was making. I wasn't talking about an old pickup truck whose operator wants to get around the law by putting a light on the top of his truck. The minister knows that.

Bill 175 reported.

LAND TITLES AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 149, An Act to amend the Land Titles Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any section in the early part of this bill that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations wishes to amend in any way?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to move a very minor amendment to section 48, which is really a typographical correction.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any questions on this bill prior to section 48?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have some comments and questions to direct to the minister on section 40.

Sections 1 to 39, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 40:

Mr. M. N. Davison: When we discussed this bill on second reading, on Tuesday night as I recall, I expressed to the minister the concerns I had about wanting to know the government's rationale for this section 40 and the sections of the other bill before us today, the Registry Amendment Act, that are removing certain things from the Condominium Act and transferring them to these other pieces of legislation. I wanted also an explanation of the government's position regarding the registration process with condominiums.

I don't know if the minister wanted to respond to the comments I made at that time—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I never understood them.

Mr. M. N. Davison: He didn't understand them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Maybe if the member made the comments again, I could find out what he is talking about.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I will go through them again for the minister.

The thing concerning me is the implication for condominiums and, most specifically, the condominium unit owners. They are the same kinds of implications and considerations that have been important throughout the last decade, since we allowed the construction of a new type of home for people to own and in which to live.

When the government first introduced condominium legislation back in the late 1960s, I can understand that because it was a new thing in Ontario there were going to be growing pains, there were going to be difficulties, there were going to be mistakes and there were going to be lessons to learn and everybody in this House and everybody in the community would have to suffer through them to some extent.

The government became aware of the problems and, as pressure mounted, it established, finally, back in 1976 or 1977, the Ontario residential condominium study group, the Kealey commission. This was to report on the difficulties in the condominium world and to make recommendations to the government so the government could then rewrite condominium law in order that the problems of the late 1960s and early 1970s could be corrected.

Although he was not minister at that time the minister will recall also that there were very serious economic problems with condominiums. There was a real difficulty created because of uncertainty about condominiums. There was a huge number of empty units on the market because of all the problems that had developed through the late 1960s and early 1970s.

When the Kealey commission reported back in 1977, it made a number of recommendations—I think the total number was 126—to the government for changes in condominium legislation. The first four recommendations coming out of the first chapter of the Kealey commission report dealt with the registration process. I'm sure the minister will recall that.

When the ministry brought in the condominium legislation back in 1978 it never did deal adequately with the problem of registration. It was left over, and the government never moved on it. There were comments to the effect there will have to be some changes from the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs; the Planning Act was talked about; this, that and the other thing.

I suppose at the time, and I recall discussing with the former minister, the necessity to move in on the registration process and have in the Condominium Act a clear group of changes in the registration process that would work to restore confidence in the market and help the condominium unit owners. It went so far that when we were in committee of the whole House on the Condominium Act I introduced what was the largest amendment I've ever introduced in this assembly. It was a seven-page amendment to sections 56 and 57 of that act to bring in a registrar of condominiums who would have some control and act in the public interest, in the consumer's, unit-owner's, interest.

That was defeated, unfortunately, by the government for reasons I don't know. We didn't get it and we still have these continuing problems. Now surely the time has come when the government should have taken some action on the registration process with condominiums. But instead of doing that, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, they fiddle about. They make changes to the Land Titles Act and the Registry Act. They delete two subsections of the Condominium Act under sections 2, 4 and 5. That's really inadequate.

I would like some explanation from the minister about the lack of desire, or lack of will to move. Does the ministry consider there is no problem with the registration process? Is that the reason? Does the ministry consider it's up to other ministers in the government to move on an ad hoc, bit by bit basis to improve the registration process? Does the ministry have some plan to bring on stream in the next year or two amendments to the Condominium Act to improve the registration process? I'd like to know the reasons.

Unless there is some kind of co-ordinated approach to deal with those difficulties, I don't see any reason to support amendments designed to take sections out of the Condominium Act, further fracture it and make it more difficult for the condominium buyer to find out what is the law and what isn't the law. I'd like to hear the minister's explanation.

For the purposes of saving time, I'm happy to talk about all of the condominium changes, both in this and the act we'll be doing later, Mr. Chairman, because they're totally interwoven. I won't make any comments on those. I think we can deal with it all under this one.

Mr. Breithaupt: When the member for Hamilton Centre began his remarks the minister said he didn't understand what the earlier comments were. I regret to say I don't understand what these comments now refer to.

It seems to me the whole matter of compulsory registration has nothing to do with the ownership of condominium units. It would appear to me this section deals solely with the registration of a plan and clears off the title under the land titles system where land might otherwise be registered under the registry office system. It has nothing to do with the ownership of units, with the transfer of units or with that amendment with respect to a registrar of units. It would be my understanding it is only a matter of registration before any individual is even close to becoming an owner of a condominium unit.

If that's the case, then I don't understand how those comments relate to condominium land as such under the registry office. If it's not the case, maybe the minister does have some comment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Now, I understand, Mr. Speaker. If the member had elaborated a bit the other night, I would have understood.

The member for Kitchener is absolutely right, it has nothing to do with this act. What it has to do with is a preregistration. We are talking in this act about actual registration. I am looking at the Kealey recommendations the member brought forward. For instance, the first one is for the builder-developer to disclose his intention to the municipality to develop a condominium project.

All of these things are far in advance of the actual registration of the plan. It has been my position and the government's position—I think it is the only position—that if the member wants improvements in the preregistration area, realistically it is the responsibility of another ministry, the other ministry being the Ministry of Housing, because it deals with official plans.

It would be extremely difficult under the Condominium Act. We start from there when nothing exists. How could the Condominium Act provide for dealing with subjects prior to a building permit or the actual physical implementation of the building, or the registration of a plan for the condominium? Obviously, it deals with all of the ramifications of the official plan and more properly is under the Ministry of Housing.

In those recommendations the commission was talking in terms of site-plan application, of site-plan agreements, of a building permit, the conditions and standards of development levies for the municipality, and so forth. All of these are well before you head for the registry office to either—depending upon where you are in a province—go through the land titles procedure or, where there is no land titles procedure available, go through the registry office with a certification of title.

As to why the Ministry of Housing or so forth, hasn't dealt with these recommendations, to be honest with you that is the responsibility of the Ministry of Housing.

In terms of the one remark that was made about all the difficulties with registration, we are at a loss to know where those difficulties are, at least within the registry system. If it was something before the registry system, then I would be perfectly willing to carry the member's concern to the Ministry of Housing. Many of these things, in fact almost all of them, are even before the Condominium Act begins to take effect.

The truth of the matter is, if you start off with the builder-developer discussing his intention, that really is under planning. Is the municipality going to allow a condominium to be located at the particular site or the particular area the builder is discussing? That precedes the Condominium Act and obviously must precede any attempt to register any type of plan, because there has to be an agreement.

Surely these things are within the Ministry of Housing and the official plan. We haven't really taken anything out of the Condominium Act for any purpose other than when you are registering a plan for a condominium. We feel a much better form of consumer protection is to have it right in the act that you have to use registration, rather than having it in the Condominium Act with an application to the Land Registry Act or the Certification of Titles Act—putting it right up front in the registry office where the actual declarant makes the registration. We think that is much more effective in terms of land registration than to have it in another act. There is very clearcut authority to deal with any difficulty in terms of registration.

Bear in mind, if we have been accused of anything in terms of registration, it is of being too strict. There are many municipalities which maintain we should accept and register plans when the lower floors of a structure are completed and there appears to be every indication the upper floors will be. There is an argument in the development industry that the finishing off of a small number of units in a large building is sufficient evidence that we should accept the registration of condominiums. We don't. We invoke the doctrine of "substantial completion." It is all very well to say that because certain things have been done on the lower floors they obviously will be done on the upper floors and that deeds can be issued and so forth. We want substantial completion.

That has been an area of criticism, but I don't really think the member would want us to change our present position. I know that from time to time on a borderline case it does cause some inconvenience to someone trying to obtain his deed. By the same token, if we let the development go holus-bolus and someone is promised a deed to something which may or may not be completed, if something does happen in the evolution of the individual condominium unit within that structure there can be some very grave repercussions. To my knowledge that is the particular criticism that has been levied.

Again, looking at the two acts in combination, one of the things we want to do is to preserve—I emphasize to preserve—the registration where land titles are available—that they be a land title. No deviation, no eroding, nothing in that area. But where that land title is not available, then we want to proceed under the Registry Act for its cer-tification. So we are not eroding, we are sticking right where we are.

If the member wants to ask why we are doing this now, the plain and simple answer is the expansion of land titles has not gone as swiftly in this province as was anticipated when these acts first dealt with condominiums. The reason for it is quite simple. It is more expensive than land registry. There have been budgetary restraints and so forth. In the years 1979, 1980 or 1981 it is not going to expand to the extent that was anticipated. Notwithstanding that, even where it is not available and even where the pressure is such that you really want us to keep going through them, we have stuck to the certification of the type.

In terms of registration of the plan whence the deeds will come, provided the condominium is successfully completed, we haven't changed very much at all. We haven't eroded the Condominium Act; we have put it right up front where the declarant comes in to register, right under the very act, that he registered. That is all we have done in the package. If the member is going to tell me he prefers to keep it in the Condominium Act and to duplicate it in the Registry Act because we feel much more confident in the actual Registration Act than we do in an overriding statute, then we may have a difference of opinion.

The advice that has been given to me is that it is a far more efficient method of consumer protection in having it up front in the registry statutes than it would be in the Condominium Act.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Either the minister is insisting on taking a very narrow legalistic look at the issue I am trying to put before him or he doesn't understand what the issue is. I'll try once more to explain it.

There is a process commonly described as the registration process, not in some legal, technical definition of registration of a single document before or under some subsection of the Condominium Act or any other act but the process that takes place from the beginning of a development until the time we are left with our registered condominium. I am sure the member for Kitchener understands the use of the word registration—the registration process, as it was put and used before the justice committee when we dealt with this.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes. I have some understanding of the Condominium Act.

Mr. M. N. Davison: My criticism is simply this. The ministry chose to ignore a substantial number of the difficulties and problems that were plain to anybody sitting on the committee when it was doing its work. I don't understand what the reason was then; I don't understand what it is now.

What I am saying to the minister is this. Rather than take two subsections out of this act now the ministry should deal with the real problems that still exist in that registration process. In the broadest context, that is all of the problems that can occur up until the time we have a registered, functional, operational condominium corporation. If the minister doesn't understand that, I don't know if I can explain it to him any better.

I think the minister and his advisers are taking and understanding only a very narrow definition of the words "registry, registration or registration process." I think the ministry now has a responsibility to address the problems they wouldn't address back in 1978, when we were dealing with the Condominium Act. I don't want to outline them all, I'm not even sure that it would be in order to do that, but we have not provided a way a condominium consumer in this province can get accurate information about a proposed declarant or developer involved in the process.

To this date there is no functioning consumer adviser on the condominium issue for condominium unit owners or prospective buyers. The proposed declarant has much too much freedom in that process. We still have people living in what were supposed to be condominiums but are nothing more than apartment buildings. All of those problems come from the government's and the ministry's refusal to deal with that registration process: all of the processes up until the point in time at which there is a registered, functional, operating condominium.

I think it would better serve the ministry, the government and the people in this province if, instead of fiddling around with these alterations to the Land Titles Act and the Registry Act and the Condominium Act, they would sit up and do something about the real problems. They have ignored them for long enough and since the ministry is involving itself in the Condominium Act once again, now or certainly the spring session at the latest, would be an appropriate time for the government to finally act to solve some of those problems.

That is plain English, Mr. Minister. I hope you catch the drift, as it were. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will take that under advisement, Mr. Chairman. One would think the member would have said it in those words the other night. I would have given him exactly the same answer. I realize the lateness of time and so forth but when the member was referring to problems in registration, it was in the focus of this. It may have been my mistake but obviously the member for Kitchener had the same difficulty. In any event, I will take that under advisement and I will inform the member prior to the starting of the spring session as to what the intentions of the ministry are.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I appreciate what the minister says. That's a very gracious step on his part. It's an improvement. I await the beginning of the spring session.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I said I would inform the member before the start of the spring session.

Section 40 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments or questions on any section?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have an amendment to section 48.

Sections 41 to 47, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 48:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 48(2) of the bill be amended by striking out "b" in the first line and inserting in lieu thereof "a."

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, that's to correct a typographical error.

Mr. M. N. Davison: My caucus and I are in complete agreement with typographical errors being corrected. It has my support.

Motion agreed to.

REGISTRY AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 150, An Act to amend the Registry Act.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have a new section 9a, and amendments to section 27 and section 49.

On section 9:

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, the new section would become 9a. It will be in addition to section 9.

Mr. Chairman: In addition to 9?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It would be a section in addition to 9, to be called 9a.

Section 9 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section: "9a. Subsection 2 of section 20 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) Subject to subsection 3, the land registrar shall enter every instrument that mentions such parcel or lot of land in the abstract index in the prescribed manner under the proper heading of each separate parcel or lot of land.

"(3) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations designating instruments to which subsection 2 does not apply and governing the manner of making entries of the abstract index."

He further moves that the said section 9a comes into force on proclamation and that the legislative counsel be directed to make the necessary consequential changes in the numbering and references.

Motion agreed to.

Section 9a agreed to

Sections 10 to 26, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 27:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 27 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(6) The said section 78 is further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(13) A description as defined in the Condominium Act, 1978, in respect of land that is within an area to which the Land Titles Act applies, but not within an area designated under subsection 3 of section 160(a) of the Land Titles Act, shall not be registered under this act."

Motion agreed to.

Section 27, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 28 to 48, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 49:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 49(1) of the bill be amended by inserting after "sections" in the first line "4," and by striking out "35" in the third line.

Hon. Mr. Drea further moves that section 49(2) be amended by inserting after "sections" in the first line "4" and by striking out "35" in the second line.

Motion agreed to.

Section 49, as amended, agreed to.

On section 50:

Mr. M. N. Davison: I just wanted to take this last opportunity, Mr. Chairman—I may never have one again—to put forward my strongest possible recommendation to the minister that somehow surely these three acts in the new Polaris project should result in lower legal fees to home purchasers, when they buy their homes. There is no longer any excuse for those outrageous and unjust fees.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I suppose as a great defender of the faith, Polaris will make a great number of improvements in this province. It will enhance, furthermore, the reputation of John Graves Simcoe, who started all of land registry and so forth. I will tell you, I simply do not think the legal profession in this province is overpaid, particularly those who deal in real estate.

Section 50 agreed to.

Bill 150, as amended, reported.

FAMILY LAW REFORM AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 159, An Act to amend the Family Law Reform Act, 1978.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Kitchener have anything on Bill 159?

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, Mr. Chairman. There is an amendment to section 1, which has been agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: Now that we have it on the floor let's make all kinds of amendments.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, that could be done. First of all, let me thank not only the government House leader, but particularly both the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry) and his parliamentary assistant, the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling), who have been of great assistance in bringing forward to this stage the idea approved by the House in private members' hour two weeks ago.

There is a requirement for several changes in wording, in order that this amendment be in the style and practice of the Family Law Reform Act. As a result, I will be making amendments which will deal particularly with the three separate headings I proposed be changed in section 27, to which I had spoken during the debate on second reading.

None of these particulars deals with changes in principle approved by the House, but they do give further detail so the three subsections follow the intent of the original legislation.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Breithaupt moves that section 1 of Bill 159 be amended by striking out clauses (a), (b) and (c) of the amendment to section 27(1) of the Family Law Reform Act, 1978, and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) a person entitled to support under the order;

"(b) a parent of a person entitled to support under the order; or

"(c) a person or agency mentioned in clause (a) or (b) of section 18(3)."

Mr. Warner: I'd like first to pass along my personal congratulations to the member for Kitchener who has achieved what few members of this assembly have been able to achieve, that is, as a private member and an opposition member to bring about a change in legislation. For that he is to be commended.

He has persisted on the issue and brought forward an excellent bill which was debated here. It's most pleasing to see it go that extra step and to know that when we're finished with it it will become law.

I'm quite pleased to support the amendment he has moved. In speaking to it I can only express again the kind of frustration which I expressed during the Attorney General's estimates at the unfortunate aspect that when those delinquent fathers don't pay the pressure is put on the mother who has been left to raise the children.

Unfortunately, the pressure is often put on her by the Ministry of Community and Social Services, because it's sometimes made clear to the mother it's her responsibility to find the delinquent father and, if she is unable to do so, her mother's allowance payments will be cut back. Often she has been further frustrated in attempting to get some settlement through the courts.

In one small measure I hope this amendment to the Family Law Reform Act will help quite a few mothers in obtaining the kind of support they deserve and require. There is a larger issue to be answered and the government has obviously failed in attempting to resolve that problem. In fact in some instances as I have cited, where the Ministry for Community and Social Services is held responsible it has made the problem worse. That's highly unfortunate. Why they choose to treat mothers who are attempting to raise children on their own in that way, I have no idea.

As I say, I welcome the amendment that has been put forward and the bill itself and I will support it.

Mr. Sterling: It's my pleasure to rise and support the amendment put forward by the member for Kitchener. The attitude of the Attorney General and myself towards the member for Kitchener's bill is that this is continuing the nature of the hearings and the legislative process that took place with regard to the Family Law Reform Act. I think that process culminated in a very successful piece of legislation. As I have said, we recognized that there were going to be some shortcomings in that bill that we weren't able to foresee when we were going through the process.

We all recognized at that time that we were really turning around a century of antiquated law. It is really surprising—and I say again, I am quite proud to be part of that committee—in that we were able to construct a bill which has had really quite a small number of inadequacies.

I would like to again congratulate the member for Kitchener for bringing this bill before the House to rectify one of those inadequacies. I hope that in the springtime we will be able to bring forward some additional amendments to the bill, because there are one or two other small areas, where we can—

Mr. Wildman: Are you going to publish this in the Kemptville Advance?

Mr. Sterling: You could publish it in the Kemptville Advance, the Winchester Press, or any other place.

Mr. McClellan: It isn't even Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Sterling: They come out on Wednesday. It's okay, I can phone them.

Ms. Gigantes: Is this your big speech of the year?

Mr. Sterling: You haven't been listening, Evelyn, but at any rate, I congratulate the member again because the bill will clear up a problem that does exist for some people.

Along with the Attorney General and the House leader I thought we should carry this forward into legislation as soon as possible, therefore we have supported it all along.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McClellan: During the second reading debate, my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) raised the question of the use of the word "may" in the second line of section 1(1) and he had indicated during the second reading debate that he would prefer the use of the word "shall," so that upon the application of any of the three parties named in Mr. Breithaupt's bill, the court would automatically invoke automatic enforcement.

I intend to move an amendment to change the word "may" to "shall." The reason I want to pursue that is based on the comments of the parliamentary assistant during the second reading debate.

I would remind the committee of what the parliamentary assistant said when he was talking about the automatic enforcement provision in the bill: "One of the features of the support provision of this act is the enforcement system contained in the act and in the rules and procedures of family courts across the province. The clerk of the court is empowered to enforce the orders at the request of the person receiving support. When the request is received, the court staff begins monitoring payments under the order and sends out reminders if payments fall behind."

This is the point I want to stress, the parliamentary assistant said: "Unfortunately the procedure varies across the 53 family courts in the province. This is due in some cases to the wishes of the family court judges and in other cases it is due to staffing restraints."

In other words, apparently there are some parts of Ontario in which the clerk of the court—I don't know if the clerk of the unified family court would be included but I doubt it, but at least the clerk of the provincial court (family division) would refuse to accept the application for automatic enforcement. I don't think that that's acceptable.

I don't think I should even need to justify that position. It should be self-evident. Upon the request of one of the three parties for enforcement and upon filing the necessary material as prescribed by the rules of the court it should be automatic that the court assume the responsibility for enforcement.

I do not stand easy with the provision that allows the clerk of the court—and I assume that means the clerk acting on the instructions of an individual judge in a particular court—to refuse to do this.

I want to make the bill apply equally all over the province, by changing "may" to "shall", so that whenever one of the three parties applies for automatic enforcement, they will be guaranteed to get it.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. McClellan moves that section 1(1) of the bill be amended by striking out the word "may" in the second line and replacing it with the word "shall."

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I must oppose the amendment, basically on the basis of the process that is practised in family court. If we put in the word "shall," it would really go contrary to the existing process.

One of the steps in the procedure of enforcing an order is to call the errant person into court and ask why he is not paying the maintenance order. The judge is given the opportunity at that time to postpone the payment on the maintenance order if there is reason why he or she cannot make the payment on the maintenance order—if something has gone on in between. Under the new act this is usually a process in which only one of the individuals is brought in. It is not a case where you review the order. It's a show-cause type of hearing whereby the person is called in to say why he is not paying the order.

If he gives sufficient reason, the judge has the power to stay the payment on that maintenance order or to make an arrangement for some kind of payment until the person can come back and alter the order.

The problem with "shall" is it doesn't really give the discretion to the judge to accept those reasons. He just has to order the payment to come forthwith and that's all there is to it.

That's the main reason for the government's opposition to this amendment.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that by now we would have moved far more rapidly into the matter of automatic enforcement, with some procedures which would protect the very cases the parliamentary assistant has made reference to.

There is no question that there are cases where the default—I can remember one case where a man was terminally ill and even then was forced into the court, against the wife's wishes, simply because the agency giving support payments to the wife had insisted on those procedures. That shouldn't happen in family courts.

The alternative places a terrible onus on the wife or the mother—in the past in any event—in these matters. I had hoped we would have moved faster to correct those procedures. As long as the show-cause proceedings are still going forward without automatically enforcing the reverse kinds of procedures to give protection, I don't know how we could accept that particular amendment. I say it with the greatest reluctance, because I do understand what lies behind the amendment and I would very much like to support that principle.

I have some experience in the matter and I think we must allow the person against whom an order has been made to give some explanation. The difficulty is that it really is almost an abuse of the system in so many cases, but it causes one to want to support the "shall" rather than the "may."

Mr. Renwick: I wonder whether the parliamentary assistant might consider giving his support to the proposed amendment.

In the ordinary parlance of the term, everybody assumes that if one obtains an order, it would of itself speak. But the process of the court has meant obtaining an order really doesn't mean anything because one has to take this additional step of enforcing the order.

I understand the courts have become enmeshed in this problem of the time interval between an order being issued by the court and its enforcement. That is where this whole idea of showing cause has crept into the system, with immense delays and immense inequities. When the parliamentary assistant says that the process is dictating what will happen then it destroys the kind of amendment the member for Kitchener has tried to insert into the bill to eliminate, to the extent possible, this interminable delay between an order of the court and its enforcement. Even this procedure as set out in the act says one gets the order but then one has to make a request. The parliamentary assistant is saying that not only does one make the request, but the judge can revert to the old system, have his show cause and nothing ever happens.

Surely, when we have a statute which says that "shall" shall be construed as imperative and my colleague moves that the word "may," which is permissive, be changed to imperative, one is saying what the ordinary lay person on the street believes to be the case, that an order of the court is to be obeyed. One doesn't have all these intermediary proceedings.

The time has come when the order should be that the beneficiary of an order can have a mandatory way of getting that order in force. That does not deprive the person against whom the order is issued of an opportunity, when faced with that order, of coming to the court and saying, after the event but in a much more difficult situation, "I don't want to obey the order and I want to show you why."

But at least this will be a step forward, and this will permit the beneficiary of an order to say: "I can go to the court. I can do what the court requires of me." That's what the act says, "upon the filing of such material as is prescribed by the rules of the court," do what the court says. The enforcement process will automatically follow and leave it to the person against whom the order has been issued in the first place to then take whatever steps he needs if he feels he can't comply. Surely the court must be in the position to say: "You have had your day in court. You have had your opportunity to speak to the order before it was issued. The order has been issued and now you are subject to that order."

Mr. Chairman, there has always been provision under the rules that regardless of whether or not you are engaged in the enforcement of an order, if a person is the person against whom the order has been made he can usually make application to the court to have the order reviewed, if it is too onerous.

The whole weight and thrust of making it imperative is to put the shoe on the foot of the person against whom the order has been originally issued. He is the one who has to respond. He is the one who, if he hasn't been complying, has been the recalcitrant person. Surely the shoe must be on his foot.

There are two things he can do. He can say this order is inequitable or unreal because of changes in circumstances and come to court to vary the order, which he is entitled to do. It has nothing to do with this enforcement provision. He can give the court an opportunity to assess the equity of it. Or, the person who is the beneficiary of the order can say, "Look, the order is there, I want it enforced and I want it enforced in an imperative way." Then, when the attempt is made to enforce the order, if the person against whom the order is outstanding has been so lax in taking any action, even at that point under the rules of the court he can come and say, "Look, I still can't deal with it."

Let us not, in a funny way, punish the victim. That is what the use of the permissive "may" is. You permit the person who has the benefit of an order to have to take some other step. Then you allow the court to interpose an interminable delay on the matter.

By moving to the imperative in this clause, I don't think you are in any sense depriving the person against whom the order is issued of any rights. All you are saying to him is, "If you want that order varied in any way, you better get around to doing something about it. You can't lie in the woods and wait." So the person who has the benefit of the order has to go to the court, comply with the rules of the court and then has to be subjected to another interminable delay in order that this co-called show-cause action will take place.

It is a strange world and it is unfortunate but this is a man's assembly. Most of the orders are out against men and I doubt very much whether we should be the ones who are, at this time, delaying the enforcement of these orders by granting the bench the opportunity of further delay. I think if the judges were consulted they would probably welcome this way of dealing with the matter, because I would assume that not only are these so-called show-cause matters delaying, but they are extremely frustrating for the judge who has to sit and listen to them.

As I say, at the risk of repetition, if the person against whom the order is made doesn't like it because circumstances have changed and he can't abide by it, or doesn't think he should abide by it, he can apply to the court to get the order varied.

Let's concertina this interminable time lag that has crept into the time between an order of the court issuing and the continuous enforcement of that order. I would ask the parliamentary assistant to reflect on what the member for St. George has said and what my colleague has said and accept this amendment, knowing full well the rules of the court are sufficiently flexible to avoid the kind of inequity which may, in some odd cases, occur by the person who is the object of the order having an opportunity to come and get the order varied if he wants it. But he can't lie back and wait for some interminable process before he has to obey that order.

Mr. Sterling: The basic problem with the argument put forward is that the reason for holding a show-cause hearing at all, or to have such a procedure in the whole process, is for the court to be able to proceed without both parties being there. In other words, the wife, in the normal circumstance, doesn't have to come in from far-away places and either lose a day of work or have to get a baby sitter to have a show-cause hearing. It is up to the court to determine why this individual is not paying.

There was nothing more frustrating in my legal experience than seeing a show-cause hearing recalled and the husband, in the normal case, not showing up for that hearing. Consequently, the woman, who is usually financially pressed because of the predicament normally associated with this kind of an order, is out half a day's pay, or a whole day's pay, and in some cases has incurred babysitting, transportation and other costs.

The problem I was trying to express relates to this: If the husband comes in, and there appears to be good reason for him not being able to meet the maintenance order, and if the section has the word "shall" in it, the clerk has no authority to stay his action until a rehearing of the issues can take place. That is the basic argument I am trying to put forward.

If we put "shall" in, there is no real reason ever to have a show-cause hearing. You might as well have both the parties back there to argue the issues over again, because I don't think you can make an order, in changing the maintenance order, without having both parties there. That is basically the reason for us not wanting to put the word "shall" in. It would put the clerk in a legal predicament of having to enforce an order which shouldn't be enforced because the person who is paying it is not in a position to pay it.

Also, I feel there would be a greater reluctance to hold these kinds of hearings. The rationale behind having show-cause hearings would go. You would go back to the system, which I didn't like, before the Family Law Reform Act was put forward. In that situation you would require the other spouse to be there to prove the case, or have a hearing where the spouse pressing for the maintenance payment would be there to accept a lower payment on a maintenance order.

That was basically the reasoning behind insisting that it stay as "may," as indicated in the original bill.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could clarify something. Did I understand the parliamentary assistant to say that, prior to the amendment on a show-cause hearing, the wife had to be there? That, of course, is not so on a show-cause.

The problem when they put it was that, as a rule, or at least in many cases, the wife did have to make a sworn statement. Her evidence was not the best evidence since, for the most part, if any moneys had been paid into the court, they had probably gone either to the Ministry of Community and Social Services or to the municipal welfare assistance. She had really no idea about that financial statement, but she was not present unless she chose to be at a show-cause hearing. [5:15]

In the days I remember a great many of the orders ran around something like $10 a week. Suppose that at the time this comes into effect you have five years' arrears. I am not sure what a clerk could or would do with that kind of enforcement. If the husband has a good cause—and, believe it or not, most didn't but some did—at what point could the husband seek a variance of that second order? That's where I am having problems.

I would dearly love it if we could say "shall" and that there might be a provision for the kind of procedure where a husband was able to plead a change in circumstances. I don't know what it is today, but certainly in my experience I would say that in at least 70 per cent of the cases—and that may be a conservative estimate—there was no justification for the nonpayment.

This is why I think there should be some procedure open for those cases where the husband has a legitimate excuse. In some cases that did happen.

I wonder if it isn't possible for this to be struck down, and for the parliamentary assistant to discuss the matter further, so we might be able to work into this bill that kind of provision so that we can use the word "shall" and make it stick.

Mr. McClellan: Just a final comment: I would ask the parliamentary assistant to accept the suggestion of the member for St. George. I want to go back to the parliamentary assistant's own comments in the second reading debate.

I would like to reread his remarks about the variance across the province in the use of automatic enforcement by the courts. The parliamentary assistant said: "Unfortunately the procedure"—and here he is talking about the procedure of automatic enforcement—"varies across the 53 family courts in the province. This is due in some cases to the wishes of the family court judges and in other cases it is due to staffing restraints."

Neither of those two reasons is the same as the reasons he has given here today. I am prepared to look at amendments which take care of the show-cause difficulty. I don't pretend to understand the lawyer's argument that has taken place. If there is a problem with respect to the show-cause aspect of it, let us come back with drafting that takes care of that. Please don't ask us to accept that in some parts of the province, because of the whim of a family court judge or because of staffing restraints, the family court will not undertake automatic enforcement of support orders or maintenance orders. That is intolerable, and I am sure the parliamentary assistant will agree that it's intolerable. So I say to him he should accept as a kind of consensus that where we ought to go is to stand this down and see if we can't find the wording to take care of "show cause" and eliminate inequities between regions of this province or from one family court to another. Again, I am quite convinced the parliamentary assistant or the ministry cannot accept that, because of the whim of a judge or because of a staffing restraint, a person in a particular court district should be ineligible to get automatic enforcement of a support order.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments on the amendment?

Mrs. Campbell: Is the parliamentary assistant not prepared to respond?

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, quite frankly, I don't know how you could draft this bill to take in the problems outlined. I think they were probably better described by the member for St. George in terms of the long-term maintenance payments which hadn't been made. In other words, if the arrears were very great, what do you do in a situation where maintenance arrears have built up for whatever reason and there aren't any assets to make that payment?

I am quite willing to stand it down. I'm not certain I can come up with an answer this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, but if you want to adjourn the debate on this particular bill, I could discuss it with the staff, because I hadn't had any notice of this particular amendment. I will have to leave that up to the mover of the bill.

Mr. Breithaupt: This is a most difficult situation, Mr. Chairman. Clearly, I don't want to lose the bill because of another amendment which is probably a very worthy one. It's going to cause a great number of difficulties to attempt to accommodate the results which will flow from changing the word "may" to the word "shall," at least from the point of view expressed by the parliamentary assistant.

I think it's clear that the members of the House have been favourable in their comments in attempting to make the correction and the change I have proposed. It is also clear members feel very strongly that orders, once they are made, should be enforced as a rule rather than following the somewhat less imperative approach the legislation has historically had.

I wonder if a possible compromise might be to follow the comments made by the parliamentary assistant earlier. He referred, in the second reading debate, to the need to have certain other amendments to this bill brought before the House. He said there were certain other amendments being considered.

One way of dealing with the matter might be to have this theme further developed as part of a discussion on those amendments. I recognize that would give several months of possible difficulty in some cases. However, I must say I have not heard of particular problems where a clerk has not enforced an order based on some capricious approach. However, the law, as the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) has mentioned, has been permissive rather than imperative. If the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) could agree, possibly a way to resolve the matter would be not to proceed with that amendment and to stand it over for a clear opportunity to consider that theme and have a response expected from the ministry when the bill, as a government initiative, comes before us for some or certain amendments in a new session, as was suggested would likely be the case.

This may be a way to get what we want accomplished today and, as well, to consider that change in thrust that I think members generally and probably would favour as well when the entire Family Law Reform Act might be open for a variety of amendments in the new session.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. McCellan's amendment will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Bill 159, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells, the committee of the whole House reported four bills with amendments and one without.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 177, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, this particular bill is introduced to allow the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to expand from its present seven members to an unspecified number of members. Basically, the reasoning behind this thrust is that it would be desirable to appoint some members to the board from areas of the province other than southern Ontario, where most of the board members now come from.

Evidently, the chairman of the board has indicated there has been difficulty in composing a panel of the board from time to time. It would be hoped that some of the new members of the board to be appointed would be from other areas of the province, including northern Ontario and eastern Ontario, and perhaps some members who are bilingual. That is the basic thrust behind the bill.

The members of the board are paid on a per diem basis and, therefore, the overall expense of the board should not be increased in accordance with the number of members on the board.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, just for a brief moment, I would like to express some concerns I have. If you look at the bill, it seems to be a pretty straightforward matter; I'm sure that, basically, is the intent. I guess the only concerns I have are with the membership and with what the parliamentary assistant has said. I recognize the need in other parts of Ontario, and that of course has to take a good deal of preference.

The thing that bothers me is that, when the minister is talking about new members, he should remember we have just begun, in a pretty tentative way, to understand the rights of children before this particular board. We have had some discussion in the Attorney General's estimates about the kinds of orders that can be made, particularly if a child has been abused sexually, for example, and where one does not have clear-cut evidence at that time as to physical damage; rather, one looks to the future in the hope of bringing assistance to that child.

I am concerned if what is being said here will have any limiting feature on that sort of case, so far as the understanding of the board is concerned. I was hoping that, if we needed any further legislation, it would be here how to enable that particular board to make an order—not for a lump sum kind of judgement or order, but rather to carry the matter so that in the future there could be, as a result of the monitoring, the kinds of service brought to the assistance of a child that may well flow from the kind of traumatic experience the child has had.

One would need to continue to have, both in the north and in the south, people with that kind of sensitivity and experience. I would not like to approve this amendment without being very certain that it won't affect that kind of situation.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary assistant puts forward what appears to be a very reasonable argument as to why the change is necessary; why, instead of not fewer than five nor more than seven members, it should now be unlimited to meet a need in northern and eastern Ontario in particular.

It all sounds quite reasonable. If one had a suspicious mind, one would think this possibly is opening the door a little bit more to the defeated Tory candidates—giving them a chance at some remuneration. For example, if the parliamentary assistant perceives a need in northern Ontario that isn't met, I would like him to explain why it is so absolutely necessary to meet that need by way of the Lieutenant Governor in Council and not the local communities. Why is it not possible for the communities in northern Ontario to make the appointments?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Well, they do; they have a lot of input.

Mr. Warner: Yes, they have a lot of input; there are several NDP members from northern Ontario over here. But, in addition to that, I don't understand why he wouldn't do that.

Perhaps the parliamentary assistant, in order to alleviate an otherwise suspicious mind, could tell me how much these appointees will be paid and, since he places no restriction upon the numbers, could he tell me in terms of the information he has regarding the need, approximately how many people he intends to have appointed on a part-time basis or a regular basis over the next little while. Perhaps he could explain why it isn't possible for the communities in northern Ontario to make the appointments of people to sit on the board?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, this bill poses the precise problem that has been raised both by the parliamentary assistant's remarks and by the remarks of the members who have spoken before on this bill.

If that is what the bill was about—that is, to provide for the regionalization of Ontario or for the travelling of the compensation board to various parts of Ontario, and had said so, and the explanatory note had said so—then, as an adjunct to that, if the parliamentary assistant wanted to eliminate the restriction on numbers, it would have made sense; or he could have said, "We will increase the numbers that are to be made." But he is asking us to divine the purpose from the explanatory note, and that says nothing whatsoever about better service being rendered in other parts of Ontario.

For the life of me, I do not understand why we are faced with bills that are supposed to be self-contained and explanatory, and then have an extraneous reason given for the purpose of the bill. If there had been just a single section saying the board shall from time to time as it sees fit sit in northern Ontario and in eastern Ontario and in other parts of Ontario—if it had said something like that, the parliamentary assistant wouldn't have this kind of a problem. But he is asking us to eliminate the upper and lower limits on numbers and then to take on faith that somehow or other that is going to improve the service in the other parts of the province. That is an impossible jump for us to be expected to make—and we're right here in the assembly—let alone anybody who sees the Statutes of Ontario and finds this amendment has been introduced. There is no way somebody is going to say, "This was designed to provide a method by which the services of this board could be provided in different parts of the province on a more efficient basis."

It is just not possible to do that, and he is asking us to take it on faith because he stands up and says so. My colleague is entitled to his scepticism; we all share it. If he wants to stand the bill down, to draft a clause that says what the bill is about, stating the purpose it is intended to serve, then he would have no trouble with the bill; but it is a waste of our time to be asked to make this kind of innocuous amendment to achieve some unstated purpose of government.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't going to participate in this debate but then I heard northern Ontario raised; so I thought I should participate.

I have a number of concerns. Since, as my colleague from Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) has indicated, the parliamentary assistant has indicated that the purpose in removing the upper and lower limits is to provide for perceived inadequacies in various regions of the province, I would like to know right now, before deciding whether to support this amendment with change, how many people are on the board now from the north and what communities they are from. If, as the parliamentary assistant indicates, there are none, could he please explain, following his rationale, why he is eliminating the minimum number as well as the maximum number?

If the idea is to increase the numbers on the board, why is he removing the minimum? It doesn't seem to make a great deal of sense. If what he is saying is that he is going to appoint as many as necessary, could he please tell us what the ministry considers to be the necessary number? How many will be from which regions? How many will be from eastern Ontario, central Ontario, southwestern Ontario, the northeast, the northwest, and north-central Ontario—if you want to include my area?

I would like to know how many native people he considers desirable, if any, to include on the board.

As my colleague, the member for Riverdale indicated, if the minister's justification for the change is as he states, he hasn't made that clear in the wording of the bill. He hasn't set out a regional basis for appointments, and he hasn't stated what would be necessary in terms of numbers. We don't even know, from the way the bill is worded, whether the Lieutenant Governor in Council might not, through attrition or some other process, lower the number of people on the board. That might be desirable, but I would like to know what justification or rationale he has for either increasing or lowering the number.

Would the parliamentary assistant please tell us what he is doing? They haven't done that in the bill.

Mr. Sterling: I indicated in my opening remarks there was more than one reason for asking that the legislation be amended to increase the number of members on the board.

One of the reasons was that it would be a better opportunity for regional representation. I also mentioned that the chairman was having difficulty in filling the panel for the different hearings. In the year ended March 31, 1979, there were 713 applications heard by this board. That was up by 25 per cent from 570 applications the previous year.

At the present time, the board normally sits with a panel of two members. The board's experience is that there sometimes is difficulty in forming the panel for the increasing number of hearings the board is now entertaining. As most members are aware, this board's activities are becoming more widely known to people in Ontario. Therefore, applications tend to increase each year. That is another reason.

In addition to the increase in the number of cases and the difficulty of the board in forming a panel, there is the regional aspect I mentioned previously. Right now, the board sits outside of the Toronto area at least once each month. It sits in various parts: it sits in Sault Ste. Marie, Thunder Bay, Kenora and Sudbury in northern Ontario. At the present, as I indicated in my opening remarks, because the members are all from the southwestern and southern part of Ontario—at least, that's what I was told prior to coming into the Legislature this afternoon—there is a backlog in the cases heard outside of the Toronto area.

It is thought that, with the appointment of additional members outside of the area, this backlog would be decreased and the hearings would occur at an earlier date. Also there would be a saving to the government in terms of the transportation costs for the board members since they are reimbursed for those costs.

It is thought there would be a further five or six part-time appointments to the board. All the members of the board, save the chairman, are part-time. I do not know how many there will be from each particular area. I imagine it would depend on the need in the area exhibited by the caseload experience in the past.

With respect to the concern of the member for St. George in relation to child-abuse cases, we may very well have to bring the legislation back to deal with that particular problem. This bill was not meant to address or even to consider that problem.

In answer to the question asked by the member for Riverdale with respect to amending the bill, I don't know what kind of an amendment he has in mind in terms of expressing the meaning or the intention of the bill.

Mr. Wildman: Set out the regions.

Mr. Sterling: The only problem with setting out the regions and the number of people per region is that it could fluctuate from time to time in the future. Quite frankly, I don't know why the bill should set minimum or maximum limits. We're moving into something completely new and the number of board members should fluctuate with the demands placed on the board. Therefore, this sort of open-ended bill would seem to be the right approach.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

INTERPROVINCIAL SUBPOENAS ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 178, An Act to provide for the Enforcement of Interprovincial Subpoenas.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned on the introduction of this bill, it provides for a method of enforcement within Ontario for out-of-province subpoenas dealing with civil and provincial offences in other jurisdictions. It also gives Ontario residents the responsibility of receiving a subpoena from reciprocating provinces. Those provinces have been outlined in the explanatory note on the bill and include British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and the Northwest Territories.

The idea is to avoid the expensive and complicated procedure now necessary to subpoena someone and to obtain a judgement in our present justice system.

The bill provides for protection of the witness going to another province by providing him with conduct or witness money which must be paid in advance. There is additional protection for the witness in the bill to prevent an abuse of the process in that the subpoena cannot be used to entice the person into the jurisdiction in order to serve him with further legal documentation to draw him into other legal proceedings.

I think the bill is fairly straightforward. It results from the proceedings of the uniformity of legislation in Canada commissioners. I think it is a good piece of legislation which really shows the co-operation that can be shown between the different provincial jurisdictions in a country.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I understand the purpose of this bill, but I am particularly concerned about section 7. We have the principle of the bill, that someone has a subpoena and is brought into Ontario. We have witness fees, and certainly this province cannot be deemed to be overly generous about this kind of provision. But we have the provision, for example, the cost of hotel accommodation for not less than three days at the place where the witness is required to attend in court, in an amount not less than $60.

Then we have the unusual provision of them demanding additional sums to cover this kind of situation when a person is under subpoena. It is bad enough, I suppose, when it is in your home province, but if you have come from British Columbia, and this is the kind of fee schedule we show and they have to move to get more money, I just wonder how, in practical terms, we are going to enforce this kind of thing.

Surely we should be pretty reasonable right off the bat, rather than have that kind of provision which doesn't seem to be very reasonable if a witness has to be called into Toronto, for example, to give evidence.

The principle of the bill is one, which I think, is long overdue. The tragedy is that not more of the provinces are in support of this sort of procedure. One would hope we would end up with all the provinces supporting this, because in the normal course it should speed up the justice procedures and make it possible to get on with trials across the whole of Canada.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, you will probably be disappointed to know I am going to be brief on this one.

We support the principle of the bill put before us. As the member for St. George has said, it is overdue. It is not the member for Carleton-Grenville's fault this province normally follows, rather than leads. He has probably had a hand in it, but it is nice to know we have followed along with British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and the Northwest Territories in attempting to catch up in modernizing the law. So we will support the bill.

I also would like an answer to the question raised by the member for St. George.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say I think this type of legislation is long overdue. I would subscribe to the comments made by my colleague from St. George, especially about fees.

It is bad enough that you get subpoenaed to end up in BC for Thursday, December 27, or something. At least you should have sufficient funds. Where are you going to find a hotel room in Vancouver for three nights for $20? Do we want the witness to stay in an area of the city which is questionable? Do we want that of our witnesses in this province? Surely, if the member were subpoenaed, he would not want to be placed in that position. I think our fees should be reasonable to start with.

I want to make another comment. What is wrong with the province of Quebec? Maybe he knows and maybe he doesn't. Why are they not in this? I would think there would be more witnesses exchanged with Quebec than all the other provinces together. It seems to me that is where we would really need it. That has been my experience in my very limited practice. You know that is so.

I would like to know whether the member might help us on that. If the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) can get along with Lise Payette, surely there has to be a way the member could get along with the Minister of Justice of Quebec and get some form of reciprocal agreement with that province.

I really do think that in the administration of justice this legislation is necessary, but let's make it workable and if we are treating everyone within the system with a certain amount of justice and lawyers are trying to get adequately paid—and it is tough—if we are causing this type of inconvenience to witnesses, let's give them enough. They are not in it to make money. The disruption of ending up some place else is bad enough but at least there should be sufficient funds to be able to survive while you are there.

Mr. Wildman: By the way, I have a subpoena for you.

Mr. Sterling: From out of the province? If the member opposite did have a subpoena for me he would also have with him in his hand the conduct money necessary for me to appear in that other court in that other jurisdiction.

I agree with the members opposite that the money is not enough, but the fact of the matter is this legislation is identical in the schedule, in the money, in every other aspect with the legislation in the other provinces. The amount, I also indicate, is the minimum amount. Once the witness appears in the trial he has every right in section 7 in Ontario—and a similar section appears in all the legislation in other jurisdictions—to ask for what it is costing him to stay in that area.

The money has to go out. As you know the subpoena often goes out quite some time in advance of the trial. Therefore, the money is going out on the front end. We wanted to keep the legislation in tune, as an exact replica of the legislation in the other areas, because it is basically what has been recommended to us by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. Therefore, we put those amounts in. Again I indicate those are minimum amounts. You can ask the courts for additional amounts of money if those amounts are going to be incurred.

The other thing—I didn't know this and I had asked the question the member for Ottawa East asked about Quebec. I thought, why isn't Quebec under this piece of legislation. The answer I got was there is legislation that actually goes back to pre-Confederation days which is still in force and is enforceable in the courts, which allows witnesses to be subpoenaed from one province to the other. By evidence of this piece of legislation we would be quite willing to go along with Quebec and have them pass a similar piece of legislation which would automatically opt them into it as well as the provinces that are already there.

I hope that this answers the questions of the other members.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. A rough count indicates there are only 10 members in the assembly; I would think that would be far below a quorum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

ONTARIO MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENT CORPORATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 171, An Act to amend the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, this act complements some other legislation brought forward, I think by the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), perhaps the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells). It amends the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act so that the corporation can issue debentures for school boards.

It is required to allow school boards to have access to low-interest debentures through the advantages provided by the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act's low rates. It is also required because of the change in policy enunciated about a year ago, last budget by my predecessor, when he changed the method of financing capital works for school boards in the province.

Instead of having the school boards finance 100 per cent of their needs, with a complicated grant system whereby we paid them back not only the capital but the interest, we are now giving—75 per cent I believe it is—up-front grants for those approved capital works and allowing the school board to decide whether or not it will borrow the difference by borrowing through the municipality it is in or going to the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation for its funds.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), I just want to say we will support this bill. Obviously, this particular act means the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation will have more control on the debentures of the school boards. It also means there is going to be a clearer understanding as to who is responsible for these matters.

I think the municipalities themselves will welcome this particular change; and as the Treasurer has indicated, having funds available at a lower interest rate means the public will save money, I guess, in the long run. This being essentially a housekeeping bill, we have no problem with it and obviously will support it.

Mr. Laughren: When I first looked at this bill I didn't understand it; now that I have examined it for several weeks I am in the same position.

If my understanding of the bill is correct, and this is open for debate in itself, it now allows the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation to purchase debentures—the Treasurer said “issue debentures,” and I am not sure he really meant that—on debts of a school board.

I don't know how word gets out on bills like this, but in the riding I represent, which is admittedly more sophisticated than many of the ridings other members represent, my phone has been ringing incessantly on this particular bill. People from Shining Tree have been calling me and asking me about the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act and wanting to know whether the change in this act will apply to local services boards, as is recognized under Bill 122 as brought forward by the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Perhaps the minister could answer some of those questions, because the people in Shining Tree are concerned about the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act and whether or not it is some kind of devious way in which bills will be shifted from the province to the good burghers of Shining Tree. I hope the Treasurer will allay my fears.

Of course Shining Tree is only one of many communities which I could give examples of. We understand and we are worried about the fact the Minister of Education has brought forth a number of bills which are not unrelated to this one.

We are worried there might be a subtle shift from the province assuming certain obligations concerning the cost of education in this province and putting—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I'm not running away to Chapleau with you; you can't even count.

Mr. Laughren: Come to Chapleau with me.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It's only one bill.

Mr. Laughren: The flying club there needs someone with your assets.

Mr. Foulds: You wouldn't care to define those assets.

Mr. Laughren: Back to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

There is suspicion out there across Ontario that everything the Treasurer does has some kind of more subtle meaning than is evident in the wording of the legislation. I would just ask the Treasurer if he would assure us this bill is not some kind of attempt, devious or otherwise, to shift some of the obligation of educating Ontario's people from the province to municipalities such as Shining Tree.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to you, in spite of the cynicism I get from the left of me here—I was minding my own business in my office and one of the page boys came along and said "We are short of bodies in the Legislature. Come on up here to support the Treasurer in passing this legislation." So I thought I should come up here, get it on the record and say something nice about the people to my left.

I have been looking at the Treasury critic of the NDP, and I just remark to him that he looks pretty good. In fact he looks more like a Treasurer than the Treasurer himself. I am surprised the Minister of Education didn't take up the offer of just a second ago.

I just want to say to my colleague from Nickel Belt the people of Vanier have had the same response to this bill as the people from Shining Tree. The phone has been ringing off the hook over this legislation, yes; but I explained to him the Treasurer's motive in bringing forward this legislation was honourable.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am a little worried. Yesterday they had to clear the Toronto Stock Exchange for some mysterious cause. I have been sitting here sniffing some of the stuff coming from the Clerk's desk and I suspect the wind has been going that way and they have had a little too much glue fumes over on the far side.

Mr. Foulds: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. There are no untoward smells coming from the Clerk's desk, I am sure of that. I resent this attack upon the servants of the Legislature when they cannot defend themselves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is there any other honourable member wishing to speak to this bill?

[8:15]

Mr. Roy: I am not finished, Mr. Speaker. You know from my previous experience in this chamber that usually I conclude somewhere close to the legislation. I just want to say to the minister, and to my colleague from Waterloo North of course—

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's where he's at that counts.

Mr. Roy: No, no; we have so many members from that area we have to get the ridings straight.

Once my colleague from Waterloo North advised the Treasurer he was in support that was good enough for me, the support there was automatic. I just wanted to put on the record, Mr. Speaker, that I received many calls; and that I am glad to see that the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation will finally be authorized to purchase debentures, that is important in Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The good burghers of Shining Tree certainly are good. I recall stopping in at McDonald's and they were excellent.

Mr. Roy: Oh no, do you want the rest of us to walk out?

Mr. Foulds: You're going to lose your quorum again Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: After you have been Treasurer you have got very little else to lose but your quorum.

Let me assure my colleague from Nickel Belt, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this bill that is deceptive. In fact for a change we have got rid of a double-entry book-keeping system that truly was confusing. We put it on a much simpler basis so the real net debt of a municipality shows; it doesn't appear on my books as an asset and on their books as a liability, making everything inflated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question before the House is approval of second reading of Bill 171. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Mr. Laughren: Never.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will say "aye".

All those opposed will say "nay".
In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to .

Ordered for third reading.

First Clerk Assistant: The 21st order, second reading of Bill 179, The Powers of Attorney Act, 1979; Hon. Mr. McMurtry.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: On a point of order, a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker; the minister is not with us at the moment. I wonder if I could ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments to make sure he is here shortly.

Mrs. Campbell: Why isn't he here now?

Hon. Mr. Gregory: He is on his way; the parliamentary assistant is on his way.

Mr. T. P. Reid: This is typical of the way they are running the province.

Mr. Laughren: This is not a point of order or privilege.

Mrs. Campbell: No, it isn't.

Mr. Laughren: A point of order is to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Campbell: Move we adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am waiting for someone to call the orders of the day.

Mr. Warner: To the point of order, Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be anyone on the government side who is in charge of the government business. I would ask, sir, if they are not ready to proceed with an order of the day that the House be adjourned.

Mrs. Campbell: Well, move we adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would be up to someone to move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Warner: I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. T. P. Reid: A move to adjourn is always in order.

Mrs. Campbell: It is not debatable.

Mr. Warner: Do you want me to move it twice, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Would you allow the Speaker to rule on it rather than you?

On a point of order, I wonder if I could ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments. We have had some delay in getting the member here. I am assured he is on his way.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It is not our fault.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I am not suggesting it is anybody's fault.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It's your fault.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: No; I don't think it's my fault either.

The member has come in, Mr. Speaker. I ask that we proceed with the 21st order.

Mrs. Campbell: There is a motion on the floor.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, we obviously have a desire to carry out the business of the House in an orderly way. I would remind every member present, and the Speaker that we previously dealt with a matter not listed on our order of business. We did so out of a spirit of co-operation. Having done that, we then moved to an order which is printed but for which there is no accountable minister. I submit it is a very unusual way for the government to ask us to conduct the business of this assembly.

Having said that, if we have now rounded up someone who can account for the legislation, as good or bad as it may be, I'm quite prepared to withdraw my motion and proceed with the orderly business of this House.

POWERS OF ATTORNEY ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 179, The Powers of Attorney Act, 1979.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, as indicated on November 15 when this bill was originally introduced for first reading, the former Powers of Attorney Act is being repealed and replaced by this act. I believe it will be more appropriate and of much more use to people who want to appoint a power of attorney, not only for carrying on business during the time when they have capacity to carry on that business but also to carry on when they no longer have the mental capacity to transact their own business. There are appropriate safeguards in the bill for the termination of the power of attorney should there be an abuse of the power of attorney by that attorney.

This bill is based on the Ontario Law Reform Commission's report on the powers of attorney. I believe it will be a useful and powerful document that can be used by many of our residents to avoid costly court proceedings when people, at a late date in their lives, have lost the capacity to conduct their own business affairs.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, the bill is a welcome one, generally. I think most of us have wrestled with powers of attorney for quite some time and recognized the need for some change.

The one thing I would like to ask is this: as I read the bill, in those cases where there is a power of attorney now it does not fill the requirements under this legislation. I do not see, and if I have missed it I would like to be directed to it, a section which could prevent some of the chaos I see occurring with this interim kind of situation.

It's the only comment I have. I welcome the bill, but I do know of powers of attorney which are outstanding where there has been no declaration or finding in the sense of this legislation. For instance, where a person has been named as an executrix in a will the power of attorney she has given to someone else is in effect, or has been, and yet she has been found not to be capable of acting as an executrix, for example on the basis of medical evidence. Where does that leave that kind of power of attorney at this point?

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, this party supports the bill brought forward. In our opinion, it is needed legislation.

I might add that we appreciate not only the explanation which was given but also receiving a copy of the form. I just wanted to clarify—if the parliamentary assistant could indicate—whether or not the form which was provided will be an appendix to the bill. It's normal, in most cases, to have this type of form as part of the regulations. We don't normally get to see this as part of the legislation but, rather, it's left to the will of those who determine what regulations there shall be. I'd like to ask the parliamentary assistant to clarify whether or not the simplified form which was provided will become part of the legislation which we pass here tonight?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire, unless my colleague wishes it, that the bill go into committee, but there are a couple of matters in the bill that are of concern to me. Perhaps if the parliamentary assistant could answer them in his remarks on second reading it may not be necessary to put the bill into committee.

I'm referring particularly to the form at the back of the bill. I'll skip the typographical error that's in there. The word "my" somewhere in the body of the bill should be "may." What confuses me and worries me about this kind of form is the capitalization of the particular clause which may or may not be inserted, depending on whether you want the power of attorney to be enforced should you become incapacitated. It's in capital letters. The provision in the bill is "may," "a general power of attorney may be in form 1 . . ."

I don't understand whether or not there is any significance in the capitalization. I don't want somebody, somewhere, some time to raise the argument that the form of power of attorney can be in any other form, but the particular words have to be in capital letters. I think the document leaves a technical question which should not have to be asked.

I would specifically ask the parliamentary assistant, on second reading, to say why the capitalization is provided in the form. What is the necessity of having it capitalized? If somewhere, some time, somebody puts it in lower case rather than upper case, is it opening an argument that someone can say the power of attorney is no good? That's the principal question I have.

The bill, of course, deals with some very technical matters which, in case law relating to powers of attorney, was the subject matter of the Ontario Law Reform Commission's report many years ago. I'm glad that even at this late date the mills of the gods have ground this out of the ministry and that we have it here before us just before the next decade starts.

Perhaps the parliamentary assistant would let me know whether or not that general form poses a problem, because I know that he is an acute, discerning, technical, legalistic member of the profession and I'd like his opinion on it. Otherwise, I would suggest the bill go into committee and we put the upper case language into lower case and make certain there is no confusion about it. [8:30]

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize to the House for my late arrival. Unfortunately I was unable to get back to the Legislature as early as I anticipated.

In relation to this power of attorney, I would like to point out to the members—and I didn't do this in my opening statement—that the form for power of attorney under form 1 is considerably freer of technical and legal jargon than the standard form lawyers use for power of attorney.

I must say that in reviewing this particular bill in the justice policy area, I was not satisfied with the first form brought forward because of my experience in my small law practice that people did not understand what all this technical jargon was about. I wanted to simplify the form; I wanted to make it as straightforward as possible. I think this form will be much more easily understood by the public.

In relation to the questions by the member for St. George relating to powers of attorney created prior to this act coming into force, they will continue in force under the old law, and therefore if a person wanted a power of attorney to extend to a situation where that person became incapacitated they would have to draw a new power of attorney.

I felt in my original involvement with this particular piece of legislation that form I was a part of the bill and I want to assure the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere that form I is an important part of this piece of legislation because it will be the part used by the general public and I think it is appropriately placed as part of this act.

I am assured by legislative counsel it will not matter whether the lower and upper case contained in that form is included, either in lower case or in upper case, and I would refer the member to section 5 of the bill for that authority.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

ARCHITECTS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 176, An Act to amend the Architects Act.

Mr. Sterling: Under the present Architects Act, an architect is prohibited from working for a corporation. Unfortunately, this prejudices the rights of architects in Ontario to participate in offshore endeavours. Many foreign jurisdictions would rather deal with a corporation and actually stipulate that it will be necessary to when dealing with services that are provided by architects.

Therefore, this bill provides an amendment to the Architects Act to allow architects to work and provide architectural services for incorporated companies that have contracted for services outside of our jurisdiction.

Mrs. Campbell: I am very pleased this was adequately explained because I had some difficulty with this bill and with the explanation which was given to us.

I have nothing further to say on this bill.

Mr. Warner: This is a very interesting little bill. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant can explain, but I take it what this bill does is protect the architect who is resident in Ontario and who may be responsible for shoddy workmanship outside the province from being sued. I take it that is the major effect of this bill.

Mr. Renwick: I am unhappy with the bill. I don't know whether it has any immense consequences to the world in which we live but I am unhappy for a number of reasons. Is the parliamentary assistant prepared to give us the facts of the specific instance that led to this initiative on the part of the ministry to put this bill before us so we can understand what its implication are, rather than generalizing about jurisdictions wanting to deal with corporations out there? Who did the ministry hear it from, what was the reason, what was the representation that was made by the association of architects? What was its purpose and what will be done to protect the revenue of the province of Ontario from architects here taking on jobs abroad; doing all of the work here but funnelling the money into a corporation organized and incorporated abroad and defrauding the revenue here?

All of those questions make me wonder why the government is meeting the specific request made by the architects' association disguised as a generalized piece of legislation. Either there was a specific request or the Ministry of the Attorney General had better start disbanding part of its staff. If all they have to do is think up this kind of amendment to the Architects Act they have too many lawyers over there, one or the other.

Will the member for Carleton-Grenville level with us and tell us precisely why this bill is in front of us? I can't believe it simply came out of somebody's head that this was an essential piece of legislation to be put before this House on the evening of December 4, 1979.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, in looking at the legislation, I've had some difficulty understanding exactly what it means. My colleague the member for Riverdale suggested that, possibly the Ministry of the Attorney General has too many lawyers. That may be. I suspect one of the reasons we are getting this legislation is that the architects in the past have been too busy to worry about this legislation—except in the last few years when they had nothing to do. Now there may not be too many lawyers but too many architects out there looking for them.

As my colleague has said, I thought we were going to get a comprehensive bill dealing with architects. I thought this was in the works. I think it's not unreasonable for members of the Legislature to get some explanation from the parliamentary assistant why we are not getting the comprehensive legislation.

Second, let us get at exactly what is happening here with this legislation. The architects have apparently tolerated the situation for many, many years and now this legislation is brought forward. What is the motivation behind it?

I must admit I have always had some difficulty understanding the process of how, all at once, legislation ended up on the floor of the House correcting problems which apparently had been tolerated for many, many years and nobody seemed to do anything about. I suppose if there is an example of this, this is the legislation here. All at once we are getting legislation which apparently permits architects now to work for a corporation and the corporation apparently to be able to do work for the government or on a project situate outside Ontario.

I have some difficulty and I would appreciate some explanation.

Mr. Sterling: I must say I am a little amazed at the outrage expressed by the members opposite.

First of all, if we refer to section 10(3) of the bill we see it relates to projects situate outside of Ontario.

The other matter is if, as alleged by members opposite, it is a method of draining off income out of Ontario, if the shareholders or the owners of the company are Ontario residents, they have to report world income, no matter where the corporation might be. I cannot in all honesty follow the member for Riverdale's argument on that end of it.

Often, in foreign jurisdictions, and in particular in the oil-rich countries, approaches are made to companies, consortiums in Ontario. They don't want to contract as a normal owner with an architect and then have the architect work with the contractor to put up the building. They want to buy a package for the whole show. They want the building designed, built and they want to deal with one party and one corporation in that particular matter.

We will admit it's the architects' association that wants this bill.

Mr. Foulds: Why?

Mr. Sterling: They want the bill so they can participate in this business cheaply in the Middle East in these overall contracts. The Middle East countries are requesting that they deal with corporations.

In dealing with the federal government from time to time in the past, they have requested that in service contracts they deal with corporations rather than individuals. It doesn't make any sense to me that anyone would want to deal with a corporation rather than an individual, but that's sometimes what some governments want.

This bill basically puts architects on the same ground as architects from other jurisdictions who involve themselves in offshore business. I would have thought there would be wholesale support for that kind of an idea. Isn't selling our technology in a foreign country desirable?

I'm sorry, I missed the point of the member opposite on that; I do not see how they can drain off income through this particular matter. Either the member for Riverdale doesn't understand the Corporations Tax Act or I just can't follow his argument; I think his suspicions are unfounded.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

STATUTES REVISION ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 181, An Act to provide for the Consolidation and Revision of the Statutes.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, this bill basically gives the legislative counsel the right to put together all of the statutes that have been accumulated in the province. I thought it might be wise to outline the difference between this bill and its effect as compared with the Revised Statutes of Ontario 1970.

Basically, the largest change will surround the index of the statutes. In the past, the index has been an alphabetical listing of the subject matter within the statutes. The index under the new 1980 RSOs will be an alphabetical index of subject matter covering all areas of legislation, so in dealing with licences, we will deal with the Municipal Act, we will deal with the acts of the Ministry of Natural Resources regarding fishing licences, et cetera. It is hoped this will provide the public with a better access to the law relating to the Ontario Legislature.

That is probably the main thrust of the difference in this particular Revised Statutes of Ontario. Most members are aware this procedure has gone on in the past. It was done in 1970, 1960, 1950, 1937 and 1927 and going back, with revisions about every 10 or 15 years.

There has also been a request in relation to statutes which are not included in the RSOs. Many people, and in particular the legal profession, have been concerned about acts which are not included in the RSOs. In the 1980 RSOs there will be included a list or schedule of all of the statutes which are not included in the 1980 RSOs. These generally are statutes which have dropped out of use and are of interest only to a small portion of the province.

The only other part that will change is that short titles will no longer include the word "the." The Abandoned Orchards Act will become—I don't know how to say it without using it now—Abandoned Orchards Act. This is put in because when people are quoting the act they automatically use the article in front of the title. It looks rather ridiculous when you're writing "the The Abandoned Orchards Act."

The revised statutes and revised regulations will cost approximately $2 million to produce. In the past, this has been recovered from sales from the Queen's Printers.

Mrs. Campbell: I recognize this is, for the most part, simply a matter which we go through, or this House goes through, about every 10 years, even though I recognize some changes in this piece of legislation. One of the things that really does bother me is why at this time we should not have built into an act of this nature some provision whereby we can repeal some of those bills which are obsolete.

I was very pleased to be present when Mr. Stone was explaining to us the matter of the Railway Act and the importance which he felt it had historically, but I wonder how many other statutes there are which are not repealed and which are still of some effect on our lives. Why wouldn't it be useful, when we do a 10-year review or revision, to provide some mechanism whereby these statutes could be referred to the appropriate ministry—if we can find the appropriate ministry, with some of these elderly numbers—so that we could get over some of the problems of having legislation which is not included in the Revised Statutes of Ontario but which is still in effect?

I recognize that this gives us authority to reintroduce them, but why wouldn't it be a good time to try to get rid of those pieces of legislation? Goodness knows, there must still be a good many of them in effect that nobody really knows anything about, acts which are too obsolete to be usefully brought forward or even referred to. Why don't we take this opportunity to have some procedure built in so we can repeal those bills which are no longer of use to us?

Mr. Warner: I certainly understand, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you do, after having gone through several bills both before the supper hour and afterwards, why the Attorney General isn't here. He is embarrassed by the legislation which we have had in front of us; poorly drafted and unexplained. As the parliamentary assistant probably knows by now, it was not originally our intention to put each of the items into committee, but because of the numerous unanswered questions they have to go into committee stage. It is unfortunate, but it is very poor legislation that has been placed in front of us today.

On this one, I have a few questions. I would like to know, for example, if it is the intention of the government through the revision of the statutes to place the material to which the parliamentary assistant referred into the computer system so there will be computer access to the statutes for the members of the assembly, for the lawyers through the Law Society of Upper Canada, and for anyone else who might wish to see it; for example, would the computer access be available to the Metropolitan Toronto library or to anyone else, the University of Toronto or others? It seems to me that if you are going to bring the legislation into the 20th century, as you seem to be attempting to do through this bill, it would make sense to computerize it so that people who are interested can retrieve the information very quickly and thoroughly.

I might also mention, Mr. Speaker, because I know you will have an interest in this, that section 1 of the bill makes mention of a person who is well known to members of the assembly and who, in my opinion, is deserving of a great deal of praise. Mr. Arthur Norman Stone is mentioned in section 1 of the bill. I haven't been around this assembly all that long, but he is probably one of the few people who has actually been named in legislation.

This gentleman, in my opinion, is worthy of our highest praise because he has served the members of this assembly in very good stead. It has been my experience, in the short while I have been in the assembly, that at any time I as a back-bencher have required information which would assist me in my work here, the legislative counsel, under the direction of the senior counsel, Mr. Stone, has served me extremely well and, as far as I know, he has served each member of the assembly extremely well in providing the kind of information and assistance which we require to do our job as well as we can. I am certainly pleased to see he is mentioned in person in the legislation. I think it is a tribute to the kind of quality that man has always exhibited.

Having made those few remarks, I indicate that this party will support the legislation and I look forward to the parliamentary assistant's comments on the computer access.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would echo the comment of the previous speaker as far as he has directed his comments towards Mr. Arthur Stone and his colleague Mr. Fader.

Every 10 years we sort of look forward to the revised statutes coming along because the amendments which have been made over the last 10 years makes researching far, far more difficult. You are chasing all over in those red books trying to find out whether any statutes in the Revised Statutes of Ontario 1970 have been revised. Those of us who occasionally practise look forward to the revision that takes place every 10 years because obviously the matters are consolidated, they are put into order and it makes things far more easy for those involved with the law, whether they be lawyers or those involved in the research of the law.

I have to say, without wanting to be offensive at all to Mr. Stone or Mr. Fader, that it must be a considerable task to get all this material together, to index it. It sounds like something with which I would not personally like to get involved. However, as I said, those of us involved in a limited capacity with law look forward to the revised statutes for our use, but I would hate to be the one involved in preparing the Revised Statutes of Ontario. That sounds to me about as exciting as being parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General and having to go through this legislation over the last while talking about the enforcement of interprovincial subpoenas, Powers of Attorney Act, Architects Act and so on. It has not been the most exciting evening, Mr. Speaker.

In any event, I would like the parliamentary assistant to know I look forward to the 1980 amendments. I understand many of the statutes are being translated into French. I don't know how far the translation has progressed, but I can think of one thing less exciting than preparing the revised statutes and that is translating them. That is not a job I would look forward to, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker. However, that is going on.

I appreciate we are talking about a limited number, but it would be helpful if there were some way to indicate which revised statutes are available in both official languages. I understand that at present statutes in common use such as the Highway Traffic Act, the Residential Tenancies Act and other acts of a similar nature are being translated. But it would be helpful if we could have some idea which revised statutes are translated and which ones are in the process of translation. I suppose we will not know for 10 years after the revised statutes come out which ones are translated, except for the occasional press release coming from the Attorney General's office.

These are some of the things that concern us. Another matter, and I think my colleague has discussed it, is the possibility of having the statutes indexed and computerized in order to provide more rapid access to the required information. Is anything being done in this direction?

Mr. Speaker, having said all this, I am boring myself. I will not bore you any longer.

Mr. Renwick: I just have a couple of matters. I wonder whether the parliamentary assistant might look at some point at the Interpretation Act, which governs all the statutes; it is a fascinating piece of reading. We certainly never need to worry that amending the law changes the law. There is a specific provision in the Interpretation Act which says if we change the law we're not to be thought to have changed it; it is considered to be the same as it was before it was amended. I never did understand that.

There are two provisions which particularly concern me. One is I don't think any members of the assembly in this day and age think that when we pass a statute with a penalty clause imposing imprisonment we are thereby authorizing the imposition of imprisonment at hard labour. I would be inclined to think there isn't a single member of the assembly who would have thought we were authorizing the imposition of hard labour. I would suggest that somebody, some time, look at section 24 of the Interpretation Act which states, "Where power to impose imprisonment is conferred by an act, it shall be deemed to authorize the imposing of imprisonment with hard labour."

With the swing to the right of the Tory government, I think the citizens of the province are entitled to protection against the imposition of hard labour. With the member for London South (Mr. Peterson) and the member for Eglinton (Mr. McMurtry) in charge of the whole operation around here, I would be inclined to think we should make certain that provision of the Interpretation Act is changed.

I notice we do pay deference, even in a very male-dominated assembly, to Her Majesty. In the definition section, it is "Her Majesty, His Majesty, the Queen, the King, the crown" et cetera. But all the statutes are denoted in the masculine gender. I wonder whether for the next 10 years it wouldn't be a good idea for us to reverse it and to provide that throughout all the statutes—I'm sure the member for St. George would support me—instead of "he" or "his," it be "she" or "her." That would mean that the provision of item (j) of section 27, which is headed "implied provision," would have to be changed.

It presently reads, "Words importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, include more persons, parties or things of the same kind than one, and females as well as males in the converse." Perhaps if the suggestion were accepted that "he" and "his" should be replaced by "she" and "hers," we could reword that, for the next 10 years to say that, "Words importing the singular number of the feminine gender only include more persons, parties or things of the same kind than one, and males as well as females in the converse."

With those two suggestions, each of which I think merits the attention of the government, I have no further comment on this bill. I'm not even going to ask that it be put into committee, provided the parliamentary assistant will give us his undertaking he will adopt the two matters to which I have referred.

Mr. Sterling: First of all, I would like to indicate that in some ways this kind of legislation should not really flow from the Attorney General or from the government. In many ways it might be a bill which should be considered an expenditure from this legislative assembly itself. Truly, the publication of statutes does not really have a lot to do with the government. It's a right of the people to receive the statutes as they might be.

As such, I'm quite easy with any suggestions that might be put forward. However, I do think that at the present time we have been charged with bringing these bills before the Legislature.

I would try to answer some of the concerns of the members opposite. First of all, the repeal of the old—

Mr. Speaker: They only reason why you have it is because either the Clerk or the presiding officer does not have the authority.

Mr. Sterling: We might be very willing to pass that over to you.

In relation to the repeal of the old section, I couldn't agree more with the member for St. George's comments. The only thing I can suggest—because I quite frankly don't think it can be done prior to the production of the statute—is that that matter should probably be raised when the revised statutes for 1980 come out and then an attack should be made on the whole process of these older statutes. As I mentioned in my opening remarks there's going to be a compendium, a list of those that are around but aren't printed. Actually, the government of the day should be put on notice so they have to justify why these acts are still around.

In regard to the computer system, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, the indexing of this particular statute as set out has been specifically designed to fit into a computer system. I'm informed by legislative counsel that they hope to be able to put this on a computer within a three-year period. Again, whether that is done earlier or later is up to the Legislative Assembly as a whole. There is also a considerable amount of work in that particular task.

I did find the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere's remark a bit amusing. First of all, he attacked the drawing of this legislation and then, in the next breath, he paid tribute to our legislative counsel.

Mr. Warner: Not this legislative counsel.

Mr. Sterling: I affirm his remarks in terms of that. This bill has been drafted by that very legislative counsel.

In regard to the member for Ottawa East's remarks, I wanted to indicate to him the Queen's Printer actually produces a monthly checklist to indicate the statutes which have been translated and are available to the public. At the present time, 12 acts have been published. A further five acts have actually been translated and the translators are working on another three in that particular group. Those lists are produced on a monthly basis to inform the public.

The only problem I see with identifying which RSOs are available in English and in French might be more misleading than of help because it's a continuing process. I only wish all of them were translated. If that were possible, we would certainly try to do that.

In regard to the gender in relation to all the statutes replacing "he" with "she" or "her" with "him," or whatever, doesn't really solve the problem. It only changes the problem around. I don't know whether the member is being facetious in making the suggestion or not.

Mrs. Campbell: By all means, I'm serious.

Mr. Sterling: I think, too, the idea of producing statutes is to make the general public know what the law is. That's the whole idea of this exercise. I don't condone the usage but the public still uses the masculine. That's the way it is. The change should occur in the public and not within the statute.

Mr. Warner: It's called leadership.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's the silliest thing I've ever heard.

Mr. Sterling: The idea is for the person out in the public, the average person in Ontario, to understand what he is reading. I am told by legislative counsel that the "she" doesn't replace the "he" as a problem but if both "he" and "she" are included, then one confuses a lot of the problems included in the legislation. That is the position put forward by our experts.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the parliamentary assistant as he talks about the male and the female, my understanding of the Privy Council judgement of some 50 years ago was that it determined at that stage that women were persons and that any remark concerning the male was pure obiter dictum. Could he help me?

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

REGULATIONS REVISION ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 182, An Act to provide for the Consolidation and Revision of the Regulations.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, my opening remarks with regard to Bill 181 would be identical for this particular bill. In other words, the changes envisaged in that particular bill relating to the recording of statutes and indices, et cetera, also relate to the regulations. I would therefore limit my opening statement to the remarks I made in the prior bill.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I do have some serious concerns about this bill. I recognize again that it is somewhat routine but I would like to know from the parliamentary assistant if we are ever going to reach a stage when we really look at the regulations which we put out in this assembly. Is there not some opportunity, as we are producing these documents, to really analyse the regulations, particularly the ones relating to the ComSoc area? I am sure there are many others which are discriminatory, which are, in my view, in opposition to natural justice.

We discussed this matter with Mr. Stone at the estimates committee, but he was in no position to be of assistance to us because basically, it is a policy matter. He did say that they did look at it from the point of view of natural justice. I wonder, with all the regulations we put forth, when we have a provision in bills which permits regulations to be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, if we are not giving to the government of the day the opportunity to bring in regulations which do not in very real terms carry out the principle of the bill in the ComSoc bills, the family benefit legislation and others, since it is the Attorney General who brings forward these bills, why he is not more concerned with the assurance that the regulations do reflect the actual purport of the bill, the heart of the bill and that the bill is not intended as a discriminatory act. The regulations appear so often to indicate that in passing the legislation we have in fact approved regulations which, for my part, do not carry out that purpose.

At what point, if not now, can we discuss the matter of continuing these odious, in many cases obnoxious, discriminatory regulations? Even the minister talks about them as an anomaly. If he goes that far, I am safe in going where I have gone tonight.

Would the parliamentary assistant please, in addressing the matter, give us some assurance from the Attorney General that he is prepared to look at these regulations from that point of view, from the human point of view?

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I think the parliamentary assistant realizes full well that much of the power, if not most of the power, of the government rests not in the legislation itself but in the regulations which are passed unimpeded by the Legislature.

As my colleague from St. George has mentioned, we know from Community and Social Services the kinds of problems that are presented to people because of regulations. Ontario Housing Corporation is another oppressive body that through its regulations causes a great many problems for people. Those regulations we can't do anything about. This House can pass all the legislation it wants in trying to provide decent housing for people, but it can't do anything about that little elite group over there on Bloor Street who control and who dictate how the housing shall be meted out to the people of Ontario.

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, when the committee was dealing with changes to the Landlord and Tenant Act, we attempted to get the chief dictator for Ontario Housing before the committee. He refused to appear. He didn't want to muddy the waters by coming before us because, in his own words, he really didn't know very much about housing, his field was finance, so of what purpose would it be for him to come before us? We didn't have any way of getting to him. We didn't have any way for him to appear in front of us, short of getting a Speaker's warrant, so we had to deal with the matter mostly in the abstract.

We had no way of obtaining for ourselves the exact rules under which the Ontario Housing Corporation determines how it will browbeat people. The regulations allow the government to hand out the patronage to those people they feel fit to run the various corporations, such as the Ontario Housing Corporation, who then in turn administer the show the way they want to.

Our problem is very frustrating. I look at the power section of this bill. It mentions that in the performance of their duties under this act the commissioners may omit any regulation that is obsolete. I can think of quite a few regulations which I determine to be obsolete. I wonder if the parliamentary assistant is ready to accept those suggestions from me as to which regulations are obsolete.

Mr. Sterling: That's easy to answer.

Mr. Warner: If I draw up a list of obsolete regulations, is he prepared to ask the commissioners to omit them?

Mr. Sterling: Never.

Mr. Warner: No. What we are being asked to pass tonight is an extremely powerful piece of legislation. We are being asked to again grant to the government unlimited powers with respect to regulations. It is the regulations which govern this province, make no mistake about it.

It reminds me of the battle which I went through at the time of the increase in OHIP premiums. It was a tax; we knew it was a tax and the government knew it was a tax but we had given away our powers to control it. The government knew full well it could impose a tax on the people of Ontario without bringing it before the assembly. It was an insult to parliamentary democracy, in my view; an absolute insult.

We run through the same kind of argument with regulations. I don't determine what regulations are; I don't have any vote in that, but at least I have a vote in legislation. When legislation is brought before the assembly, I can go for or against. I have no such vote in regulations.

They sit closeted somewhere dreaming up all sorts of strange and weird regulations that oftentimes have nothing to do with the ordinary lives of citizens. When I think of the citizens in my riding who are so often beset upon by the Ontario Housing Corporation I could almost cry, because I have no control over those regulations. Who will bring Mr. Trusler under public control?

The Premier (Mr. Davis) sent a letter at one time saying he didn't think a tenant should be on the Ontario Housing Corporation because the tenant would have a vested interest. The Premier of this province does not believe tenants should sit on the board of the Ontario Housing Corporation. When the Ontario Housing Corporation spokesmen were before the committee representing the absent chairman who refused to appear they mentioned that none of the directors were tenants of Ontario Housing. They felt they could still make all the decisions that were in the best interests of those people who require the assistance of public housing. Not one single director was a tenant in Ontario housing.

Can I affect the regulations that govern that? Not one iota.

We all understand it is necessary to update the Regulations Revision Act every 10 years and so tonight we will approve it. It is with a great deal of reluctance I do that because of the immense power which is placed in the hands of the government, because of the way in which it chooses to govern this province, not by legislation but by regulation, and because it knows full well it is totally incapable of bringing forward decent legislation—I mean significant legislation. The government can give us the trifling bills which it has today and we will support them, but it is faced with a real challenge, such as trying to provide some legislative assistance to the handicapped people, and it fails and fails miserably.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is really going a little far afield.

Mr. Warner: It is possible that I have strayed from the principle of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: We are talking about consolidation and revision—nothing at all to do with legislation.

Mr. Warner: That's right. You know, Mr. Speaker, as well as I do, that if the government manages to squeeze through that terrible piece of legislation, Bill 188, they will—

Mr. Speaker: My job is to see that you are relevant.

Mr. Warner: —they will draft the regulations to which we will not agree. It is the regulations which govern our lives in this province, not the legislation. The parliamentary assistant understands that full well.

I suppose it is through the pressure of wanting an orderly way in which we will update the regulations in the province that we will support the passage of that bill. I assume that, like the statutes, we will make the regulations available to the computer system, but

I want the parliamentary assistant to answer that question.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I just have one question of the parliamentary assistant and again a reference to the Interpretation Act.

I don't think very many members of the House who are interested in this whole vexed problem of regulations and their promulgation and the extent, as my colleague has said, that they govern the province are aware that we have an omnibus provision in the Interpretation Act which in my opinion should not be there. We have a provision in section 22 that "The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may make regulations for the due enforcement and carrying into effect of any act of the Legislature and where there is no provision in the act, may prescribe forms and may fix fees to be charged by all officers and persons by whom anything is required to be done."

For practical purposes, we don't need in each piece of legislation the enabling clause to permit the Lieutenant Governor in Council to pass regulations because the Interpretation Act has an all-encompassing section such as that. I think it is time we got away from this residual type of power in a statute as all-embracing as the Interpretation Act. We should repeal that section, so the power to make regulations is determined by the particular statute so there is no confusion about where the source of the authority is.

I have no idea of the extent to which that is used, but it would be very surprising to me if I were to find among the Ontario regulations published in the Gazette a regulation for which there was no authority in statute but which was passed under this general omnibus provision of section 22 of the Interpretation Act. That is my major comment.

My question simply is, is the intention of the government to publish an annual volume of the regulations, or are we again only going to take this first step—have the revised regulations of Ontario 1980? Those who are interested in being able to have available to them the regulations for the next 10 years will then have to go through the laborious process of clipping them out of the back of the Ontario Gazette keeping them in some cumulative form and making up their own binders so they can find where the regulations are at the present time.

It would be a help if at least a limited number of annual volumes of the regulations were published. I don't care what format they are in but they could be published as annual volumes so that at least in the major law libraries across the province and in this assembly, in the legislative library, we have available to us in a bound form, readily available at or near the end of each year the regulations which are passed, much in the same way as we have an annual volume of the statutes. I commend that suggestion to the parliamentary assistant and would appreciate hearing what consideration he has given to it.

Mr. Roy: Just briefly, Mr. Speaker, a few comments about this Bill 182. I think Mr. Stone and Mr. Fader will understand there is nothing personal about the frustration expressed by at least one member of this Legislature about the process we are going through when we pass this type of legislation.

My colleague from St. George mentioned problems about regulation and the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere mentioned certain problems about regulations. The thing that has always struck me, I suppose, ever since the days of first-year law school and subsequently after election to this place is that with the haphazard process we have following legislation through is at best questionable, but at least there is some review and the processes are there. Unfortunately, the process for regulations, which affect far more people and which one can do something about only when somebody runs into a problem with a particular regulation, is far more difficult. It is out there. You have these reams and volumes of regulations, and nobody looks at them.

I can recall being a junior member around this place and one of the great honours that is given to you is that you are named to the regulations committee. I can recall going to the first meeting of the regulations committee and being told at that point what our terms of reference were. I think one of the things we were told is that we had to verify if the regulations came within the act. No, I guess it was not our jurisdiction to verify whether the regulations were within the four corners of the act; it was the other way around.

Mrs. Campbell: That's all you had to do.

Mr. Roy: That's all we had to do. I said, "Are we going to get some experts? Are we going to have the act?" But, no, no, we had no experts to assist us. There were 10 or 12 people seated around there. I think I and possibly my colleague from Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger) were the only ones with any legal experience on the committee. We were told we were going to be on the regulations committee and that we would be looking to see whether all these regulations coming forward were within the ambit or the jurisdiction of the enabling legislation, but without the benefit of experts or otherwise.

It was a real farce; it was a real charade. I said: "I am not sitting on this committee again. I am not going to go through this process." I sat there once and never went back. That was in 1971, I understand the regulations committee no longer exists and that we don't go through this any more.

Mrs. Campbell: We do have a committee that is supposed to look into it, statutory instruments.

Mr. Roy: Yes, but as I understand it there is no more revision of regulations now than there has ever been in the past, so what we are really faced with is a situation where there is no real scrutiny of regulations. The only time there is ever any challenge is when someone, I suppose, is affected by it. If he can afford a lawyer, then you might have someone challenging the regulation.

Having said that about the regulations, that we have no way to really check whether they are valid or not, whether under the enabling statute or the Interpretation Act, here we are having to pass a bill, Bill 182, which gives certain people powers to consolidate and revise these regulations. It just seems to me this is the height of frustration. Here we are in the Legislature giving power to do this with the regulations and for another 10 years we won't know what is happening with the regulations. It is the height of frustration. I don't know how I can best describe it to you, Mr. Speaker. My vocabulary is limited when I want to express my frustration about processes. It just seems to be circuitous. One just goes around in circles. I suspect that 50 years from now we will be doing the same thing.

Are there no other jurisdictions which deal with regulations? Is there not some way to get rid of some of these regulations? Is there not somewhere where there is some policing going on, where someone is scrutinizing these regulations? Surely, Mr. Speaker, if we have any serious thoughts about giving this type of power to revise and consolidate the regulations, we should go a step further and see that the regulations are within the jurisdiction of the statute or of the Interpretation Act.

I suppose it goes well with what has taken place this evening. My God it has been an evening of—and I can see why the Attorney General is not here. That is the exciting part of the work of being parliamentary assistant. Meanwhile the Attorney General is either at the Albany Club or looking for another disaster or another headline.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say the debate has been far-reaching.

I don't know how much was going to the heart of the bill.

I would indicate it is the intent to bring regulations into the computer system.

I don't think the remarks made in relation to the control over regulations were quite fair. It is not a one-sided view; I can understand the concern of the members opposite. It is not only difficult for them as members of the Legislature to keep control of the regulations passed, but I must admit as a back-bencher on the government side it is an equally difficult task to keep control of what regulations are passed.

Mrs. Campbell: Then let's do something about it.

Mr. Sterling: I think we should perhaps do something about it. The problem is the answer. I don't want to shove off the debate totally. The standing statutory instrument committee has reported before the House and perhaps that is the better forum to discuss this on a preliminary basis. Perhaps then it could be referred to the procedural affairs committee which, I believe, will be going up to Ottawa some time in the new year to look into other areas of their legislative process.

Mrs. Campbell: I thought the Morrow committee did that years ago. How long does it take?

Mr. Sterling: At any rate, in reference to the omnibus section of the Interpretation Act, section 22, brought forward by the member for Riverdale, I think it is important to note that omnibus regulation section only covers and I quote, "regulations for the due enforcement and carrying into effect of any act of the Legislature." That particular section has not been used to any great extent.

The statutory instruments committee was specifically set up to try to control. They have their own counsel to look into the authority for making these regulations. Every member of this House—perhaps it was done before he or she was here—gave authority to the government to make regulations in certain areas. It was the wish of the Legislative Assembly to give the government that power.

If that is not the case, if the wish of this Legislative Assembly is to change that procedure then that should be done. I have difficulty trying to replace that system with something else. It is like a lot of things in law; they are not perfect, but maybe they are the best we can come up with. I don't know.

Those are my closing remarks on this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 177, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: There are no amendments on the Clerk's table with regard to this but I see the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere has risen.

On section 1:

Mr. Warner: It is evident to all of us through the discussion which took place that the bill's very loose language needs to be tightened up.

I am uneasy with the fact the government has decided to remove the minimum. The present legislation reads, "no fewer than five." The government wishes to remove that minimum and it may be their intention eventually to scuttle the legislation. I believe the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act is an important one; I don't like to think it will be scuttled.

I am very concerned that the government may be moving in that direction. I don't know why. I read the same report the parliamentary assistant read, noting there had been an increase in the compensation paid out and the number of cases heard. The government appeared to be making noises in the direction of actually increasing both the number of people compensated and the dollar amounts awarded. That is why I am alarmed by the removal of the minimum and by what appears to be a potential scuttling of the legislation.

We also heard the parliamentary assistant mention there had been an increase of approximately 25 per cent in the amount, yet there wasn't a coinciding increase in the number of people who would sit on the board. It makes sense to increase the number. I believe we should retain the minimum of five. I also believe we should increase the present maximum of seven. Perhaps we could start with what number the parliamentary assistant proposes to put in its place.

Mr. Sterling: Let me assure the member opposite that it is not the intention of this government to dismantle the board; that is the furthest thing from our minds.

As I indicated on the debate in second reading, we see a need to appoint five or six more at this time. The problem, as I mentioned to the Legislature at that time, is that it's difficult to know the maximum number we might need in the future, in accordance with the growth of these types of claims and hearings. It doesn't seem to have stabilized at this time. If the Legislature wishes to put a minimum on this, I don't think I have any objection at all.

Mr. Warner: I'm encouraged by that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Warner moves that section 1 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"Subsection 1 of section 3 of the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971, being chapter 51, is amended by striking out 'seven' in the fifth line and inserting in lieu thereof '13.'"

Mr. Warner: If I could speak to that, what that does is retain the minimum of five, as is presently outlined in the act, and instead of seven it allows the number of 13. That means that the government can respond, as it has said it will, to the perceived need in northern Ontario and eastern Ontario.

I must also say I wrestled with the question of regionalizing. Since it is my understanding that we have no formal definition of regions in Ontario, it was very difficult to come up with a conceptualizing of the regions. All I can do is to try and deeply impress upon the government that it should make every effort to have the various regions of Ontario represented.

I would remind the parliamentary assistant that there is a difference between north-eastern and northwestern Ontario. Each of those regions should be represented, as well as eastern Ontario and central and western Ontario, as they attempt to make up the composition.

The amendment allows that instead of seven, you can now add an additional—up to 13—

Mr. Rotenberg: How many is seven from 13? Do you know?

Mr. Warner: Do you want me to do that right off? Quick, like that?

Mr. Rotenberg: You couldn't do it.

Mr. Warner: You give me the answer.

Mr. Rotenberg: You figure it out. I know it will take a little time. You can't add, I know that, so we'll give you time.

Mrs. Campbell: Really, you're obnoxious.

Mr. Warner: I don't know what caused the sudden outburst from the back row. It's nice to see I have aroused the honourable member from slumber.

Mr. Rotenberg: You take seven from 13 and you didn't know the answer.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment accomplishes all the principles the government outlined. What it does is put some guidelines on the very general and vague principles which were stated earlier by the parliamentary assistant.

Mrs. Campbell: I understand the purport of the amendment and I have great sympathy with it. I would like to understand, however, if it is not important that we also establish the chairmanship. Who is going to be presiding with these numbers? My understanding is that the chairman has been presiding in a great many of the cases which are of particular concern to me. I would like to understand what the honourable member would have to suggest with reference to the chairmanship, if they are going to 13 and assigning them, in essence, to the northeast and the northwest.

I have great sympathy with the amendment, but I would like clarification from somebody about who is going to guide the ship.

Mr. Warner: It's always a great question as to who's guiding the ship. In my amendment I was very strictly addressing the two-fold problem, one, of not removing the minimum, as the government was doing; and two, of almost doubling the number of members which would be allowed.

I would assume that would still come under the chairmanship of the present chairman. If that poses a practical problem in terms of work load, I'm assuming that role can be delegated to other members. I don't think there is anything in the present act that would preclude a permanent appointment of a person other than the present chairman to conduct the regular business of that committee. I could be wrong in that, but that's my reading of the legislation.

What my amendment does is simply meet the interests, as expressed by the parliamentary assistant, of reaching out to the northern and eastern portions of Ontario.

As I mentioned, since we lack a regional definition in any of our legislation in Ontario, I could not put regions into the amendment, but I will have to trust that the government will have sufficient good sense to appoint people from northeastern, northwestern and eastern Ontario to serve part-time on this board hearing the cases put before it. I know that does not answer all of the questions posed by the member for St. George, but I hope I have answered sufficient of her queries to gain her support for the amendment.

Mrs. Campbell: The reason I raised it is because while we're addressing the amendment to section 1 of the bill, there is a reference in section 3(1) of the act to the appointment of a chairman and one or more of those persons as vice-chairman.

When I expressed this before, my concern was that it seems we ought to be very sure that if a chairman is to be appointed out of these additional numbers for the northwest and northeast, that chairman would be someone who has some experience with the board because of the sophisticated quality of decisions in cases where children have been molested or abused. It was for that reason I raised the issue.

I don't think the parliamentary assistant understood what I was saying. He mentioned something about new people. I am concerned that we do have the people in place in the north, the northeast and northwest, but that the quality should be the same across the province and that whoever became a vice-chairman in those areas, for example, would be experienced enough to be able to handle that kind of case or, in the alternative, that person would have a period of being in Toronto where so much of it takes place in order to understand the ramifications of the problem. That was what I was addressing myself to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the parliamentary assistant have any further comment?

Mr. Sterling: Although we perceive a need to appoint five or six new members, I wonder if the amendment is wise, because these board members are paid on a per-diem basis; I don't know whether they will require eight, 14 or whatever, next year.

Mrs. Campbell: Then you come back to us and report.

Mr. Sterling: If that is a true desire, that's fine and dandy. I was thinking that when we start to look at the areas, northeast, northwest and eastern Ontario, a board is comprised of two individuals from each. If the board chooses to—and I think they should—appoint two francophones, so they can hear cases in French, or French-speaking people, then I am already to eight in terms of regional representation plus that other special need. That is the only reason I complain about the number 13. It may be necessary, because of the increased case load in Toronto itself, to appoint two more here.

I would suggest an amendment. Instead of "such members as are," as is now outlined in section 1 of the bill, place "such number of members, no fewer than five, as are." I don't know if that meets with the approval of the other members or not.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, at this point, I take it, we just have the one amendment in front of us.

I was operating, both on the basis of the information provided by the government and a certain generosity of spirit. I was told the number of claimants had increased by approximately 25 per cent. I inflated that number to almost double. Instead of seven, it was made 13.

If you have in mind that it should be some other number, that is fine. That is why I asked you first before I placed the amendment.

I tell you quite frankly, I am not prepared to live with the vagueness of simply removing the minimum and the maximum. I think there should be the protection that there will be no fewer than five people. If there is some perceived need you can identify in some way, such that you wish to increase the number from 13 to make it 15 or 17 or 85, then fine, come back and tell us that, but I prefer not to live with the vagueness which you have presented us with today.

That is why I have suggested, first, that we retain the five which was in the original legislation, and secondly, that we increase it from seven to 13, which is almost double. I think it is a reasonable amendment.

I fully appreciate—and perhaps I appreciate a bit better now the member for St. George has spoken the second time—exactly what she is saying. I would hope if this board was sitting in northern Ontario the chairman for that sitting would be someone from northern Ontario. If, for example, it were dealing with a matter which involved native people, I would hope there was a native person sitting on that board, or a franco-phone, particularly if they were in north-eastern Ontario, whether it was Timmins or Hearst, or Kapuskasing.

I tell you as plainly as I am able to do, I want some definition. Since I fished around and could not get that definition from the government, I have placed an amendment which provides that definition. No fewer than five, no more than 13.

If the government wishes to amend that in some way, fine, do so, but for now, I think the amendment which I have placed is perfectly reasonable and workable and I see no reason to prolong the debate. You should simply accept it.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to be unfair to the parliamentary assistant but does he have the information for us as to how the government, in its great wisdom, arrived at the number seven in the first place? What reason did they have—if he knows, because he may not have been aware of it at the time?

Mr. Sterling: We are only advised by the board of their work load and of the problem of convening a panel. If it is the wish that 13 be the number, that is fine. The only thing is I don't know whether that will provide enough flexibility when they expand their operations or try to represent all areas. I don't know if you can predict that kind of thing, because those kinds of needs may crop up in the future. That is why we were trying to leave it open ended on the high end. But if there is no support for my suggestion, we will accept the other amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion in regard to this proposed amendment? If not, I will put the proposal.

All those in favour of Mr. Warner's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Warner: As I take it, Mr. Chairman, we are back to the status quo. We still do not have a minimum number.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I have placed the amendment and I was just going to place the section. Do you wish to still speak to the section?

Mr. Warner: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I have lost my amendment but I will continue the battle because I am fearful this government will scuttle a good piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the government made a great fuss a few years ago about the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, a good piece of legislation designed to assist people. Now they introduce an amendment which could, in effect, render that act meaningless if you do not have a board.

I have attempted to put some substance to it by making sure there will be a minimum number of people. The government does not know what a minimum should be and they don't know what a maximum should be. I attempted to put the numbers five and 13 in place. The government doesn't like that. What numbers would you suggest? If you don't like five, tell me what number is the minimum. If you don't like 13, tell me what number is the maximum. I will not be content until we get a minimum guarantee in this legislation and some idea as to what the maximum will be. I await the parliamentary assistant's response.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, prior to the parliamentary assistant's response, I wonder if we could at least have clarification. Did I understand correctly that the parliamentary assistant was prepared to accept the retention of the minimum of five? Was that his position? I think it's important that we know that.

Mr. Sterling: Yes. It certainly is my intention to retain a minimum of five. I am quite willing to put an amendment to this section to the House to ensure that that is enshrined in the legislation.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I can't accept the willingness to put an amendment. If we have an amendment I can put it, but if nobody puts it, then we can't very well deal with it.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman can I do it verbally, or must I give it to you in writing?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It should be in writing, but I am sure the House will be glad to give you a moment or two to put it in writing.

Mrs. Campbell: Give him time to put it in writing.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that section 1 of the bill be amended by striking out, "such members as are," and in lieu thereof, such number of members, not fewer than five, as are.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, we are back to this half a loaf is better than none routine. We have the minimum number but the government has not satisfied my question about the maximum. They apparently have absolutely no idea how many people will be required.

I am pleased to see that there is the minimum guarantee. That is helpful and perhaps means that, contrary to the fears I expressed earlier, this act will not be scuttled. The maximum being unlimited brings back the suspicion I announced earlier and which was never answered as to how many people were going to be appointed and how much money they were going to get. How much of a little boondoggle is this going to be to those defeated Tories out there—of which there are many?

The parliamentary assistant chose not to answer that earlier and I suppose he won't answer it again, but that is one of the fears that I have—not having any lid on this.

I am certainly pleased to see that we at least have the minimum in there. I support the amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

POWERS OF ATTORNEY ACT

Consideration of Bill 179, the Powers of Attorney Act, 1979.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I did have an opportunity to have a brief word with the legislative counsel, who I think is trying to catch the parliamentary assistant's eye, on what is obviously an important but extremely technical point. That is the upper case letters in the form in the specific clause in respect to which the act is being amended.

It seems quite clear to me that all we are doing is leaving the act open to misinterpretation, because the purpose of the act is to provide that a power of attorney may be granted which would extend into a period of time when the donor of the power was a person who had become legally incapable of acting. That is the major part of the bill. If we put in a form which has all of its words in that particular provision in upper case we have left it open that unless those words are in upper case, in whatever form is used, the power would not be effected.

I say it is a technical point. I happen to think it is a valid legal objection which could be raised against the form. All I want to do is to amend the bill to provide that wording or that lettering is dropped from upper case to lower case. It surely shouldn't be very difficult, but I'm anxious to do so.

If it can be accomplished, if the parliamentary assistant is prepared to accept that, there's no problem. If not, then I will have to devise some way of moving that amendment, presumably by deleting it and reinserting it in lower case.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I think the only reason it was put in upper case is to draw attention to it when the form is read.

I have no objection and I believe this can be changed. I am instructed by legislative counsel it can be changed by my agreement to instruct them to change the capitals to lower case in future printings. I put it on the legislative record that I instruct them to do so.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are you hereby instructing them?

Mr. Sterling: That is what I am doing, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does that satisfy the member for Riverdale?

Mr. Renwick: I take it when the bill comes out of the committee, before it is called for third reading it will be reprinted with that provision in lower case so the bill as passed by this assembly will have it in lower case.

Mr. Sterling: That is the understanding.

Sections 1 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Sterling: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I wasn't going to move this amendment unless this bill did go into committee because it is of such a minor nature.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that clause (b) of section 8 of the bill be amended by striking out "committee" in the third and fourth lines and inserting in lieu thereof "person having the powers of a committee."

Mr. Sterling: The reason for this amendment is that under section 39 of the Mental Incompetency Act the appointment is of a person and not of a committee. It is a very technical legal point and I am advised by counsel this would be a clearer definition of what that section in the Mental Incompetency Act does.

Motion agreed to.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 9 to 13, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 179, as amended, reported.

ARCHITECTS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 176, An Act to amend the Architects Act.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my concern is to understand the origin of the bill. I understand that it came from the Ontario Association of Architects. Again, I ask the parliamentary assistant, would he specify the exact nature of the operation which would require that a corporation be used to provide these architectural services outside Ontario? That is the first point.

The second point is that he referred to a corporation being used for the purpose of providing services to the Middle East, which at this juncture in history causes me a little bit of concern.

The third point is should we not be changing "Ontario" to "Canada" in this bill, so we do not open the door for the provision of services within Canada by architects through the medium of a corporation?

It is that kind of thing I would like to discuss with the parliamentary assistant. Perhaps he would respond and I could see whether or not the answers lead to other questions.

Mr. Sterling: As I indicated before, evidently the type of contract some of the offshore countries desire is a contract which is all-inclusive; it includes all services. Under the present Architects Act an Ontario architect is forbidden to provide his services through that particular corporation.

As the architects are traditionally the owners' agents in our building industry, they are interested in providing design and building services to offshore countries. Those offshore countries have expressed a desire to deal with a limited corporation, rather than individuals. That is their desire. That is the reason the architects have asked us to bring this piece of legislation forward.

We say a project "situate outside Ontario" because we really don't have any jurisdiction to control the architectural profession outside of our province. I am not sure of all of the legislation in other provincial jurisdictions, but there may be other provincial jurisdictions that have incorporating legislation for their architectural professions.

Those are basically the answers I would give to the member at this time.

Mr. Renwick: We are being asked in section 1 of the bill to amend section 5 of the Architects Act by adding a new subsection to it. Section 5(2) of the Architects Act as now in force states "That no corporation shall be granted membership in the association or be licensed to practise architecture in Ontario."

There are two prohibitions. "No corporation shall be granted membership in the association"—that is the association of architects—"or be licensed to practise architecture in Ontario."

Subsection 3 states "Subsection 2 does not prevent a member of the association from offering or providing architectural services to a corporation in order to enable the corporation to provide architectural services in respect of a work or project situate outside Ontario."

By that are we saying the corporation will be granted membership in the association? Presumably, no. Are we saying the corporation will be licensed to practise architecture in Ontario? I assume no. I say to myself, "Why do we need subsection 3?" because subsection 3 which we are being asked to introduce into the bill, "does not prevent a member of the association from offering or providing architectural services to a corporation in order to enable the corporation to provide architectural services in respect of a work or project situate outside Ontario."

All I am saying is that corporation, whatever it is and for what reason it may be, will not be practising in Ontario and is certainly not going to be a member in Ontario.

The parliamentary assistant is now nodding his head and saying, "Yes, the corporation will be practising architecture in Ontario.”

Mr. Sterling: No. Basically, the actual work may be done in Ontario. The member may be working for a corporation which is doing work outside of the jurisdiction. That is why it is necessary. Under the present legislation an architect is not permitted to work for a corporation which is providing architectural services.

Mr. Renwick: Where is that prohibition under the act? It is not in the act.

Mr. Sterling: Where is the prohibition in the act? I would also like to indicate, if the work is done outside of Ontario, the architect, of course, would be subject to laws of that other jurisdiction. As a matter of interest I know architects are permitted to practise under a corporate structure in Alberta.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, if there is going to be more discussion on this bill, perhaps the committee should rise and report.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I gather it is the wish of the committee that we should not proceed this evening with Bill 176.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells the committee reported two bills with amendments and progress on another.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER AND RESPONSE TO PETITIONS

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answer to question 333 standing on the Notice Paper. I also wish to table the response to petitions presented to the Legislature, sessional papers 261 to 264. (See appendix, page 5180.)

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 5179)

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE
PAPER AND RESPONSE TO PETITIONSPOLICE ACTIVITY IN LABOUR DISPUTES

333. Mr. Mackenzie: Would the Solicitor General inform the House as to the number and rank of OPP officers, and the number and rank of municipal police officers, and the daily costs for each group, who have been assigned to the picket line, or held in reserve near the site, on each day since the strikes started at (a) Radio Shack, Barrie; (b) Boise Cascade, Fort Frances, Kenora; (c) Butcher Engineering, Brampton; (d) Canadian Gypsum, Hagersville? (Tabled October 30, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: (a) Radio Shack, Barrie:

The Barrie Police Department has assigned one inspector, one sergeant and four constables for part of each day at a daily cost of $159.85.

The Ontario Provincial Police have been involved on three occasions: August 27, one corporal and five constables were deployed for half an hour; October 1, 10 constables were deployed for one and a half hours. An additional seven constables and one corporal were deployed for three quarters of an hour; October 29, two staff sergeants, seven corporals and 47 constables were deployed for one and a half hours.

The total cost of these operations was limited to regular salaries:

August 27 .....	$ 30.63
October 1 .....	226.00
October 29 .....	861.68
	$1,118.31

(b) Boise Cascade, Fort Frances, Kenora:

The Fort Frances Police Department has assigned one chief of police, one deputy chief, four sergeants and 14 constables for part of each day at a daily cost of $669.

The Kenora Police Department has assigned three sergeants and eight constables for part of each day at a daily cost of $335.

The OPP has deployed the following senior personnel commensurate with requirements: one staff superintendent as co-ordinator, one inspector at Fort Frances and one sergeant at Kenora and Fort Frances. On a ratio of one corporal to 11 constables, the following deployment has been used at the scene or held in reserve:

	Out of District Personnel	District Personnel	Total
Dec. 1/78	96	45	141
Mar. 22/79 reduced to	72	32	104
Apr. 20/79 reduced to	12	32	44
June 15/79 reduced to	6	15	21
Nov. 2/79 reduced to	0	0	0

The average cost per day including salaries is $10,587; the average cost per day excluding salaries is $7,066.

(c) Butcher Engineering, Brampton:

For part of each day there was spot supervision by one sergeant and two constables of the Peel Regional Police at a daily cost of $81.

(d) Canadian Gypsum, Hagersville:

The OPP has attended at the plant entrance since September 11. From September 11 to October 15 the plant was operating one shift daily, 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. On October 16 the plant began a 24-hour, three-shift program. An average of eight OPP officers are present at 7 a.m., 3 p.m. and 11 p.m. These members include one staff superintendent, one inspector and one non-commissioned officer; the remainder are constables.

The average cost per day including salaries is $1,088; the average cost per day excluding salaries is $556.

HEALTH SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The Ministry of Health acknowledges receipt of petitions 261 to 264 which were presented to the Legislature on November 20, 1979.

The matters raised in the petitions are under review.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House today that last Friday at the meeting of the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee I made a statement concerning provincial transfers to municipalities and the use of new assessment equalization factors for 1980.

As members are aware, our efforts to develop a formula for the next several years' transfers have not resulted in anything definite as yet. However, I can tell members that the draft formula we have been considering did serve as a guide in setting the global transfer package in 1980.

Total transfers to municipalities and their agencies in 1980 will be $1,997,000,000, up $194 million over current funding levels. I should emphasize that the $194 million includes $22 million for modifying the impact of the new equalization factors and, of course, significant funds for capital purposes; thus not all of the $194 million increase will be available to municipalities for operating programs.

Mr. Speaker, before indicating our ministry's unconditional grant package for 1980, I would like to mention a change we are making that will improve several grant programs.

A problem that has been brought to our attention is that of sudden population declines. A relatively minor loss in population can cause a dramatic decrease in a municipality's resource equalization grant and other entitlements without a corresponding decrease in municipal costs. For this reason we are moving to a new method of determining municipal grants population. Next year, a municipality will be able to use the greater of either of the following: (1) 1980 grants population calculation as before; (2) the average of the 1978, 1979 and 1980 grants population.

This change will assist the municipalities subject to sudden population losses without penalizing those which are gaining in population. It will apply not only to my ministry's general per capita, police per capita, density and resource equalization grants, but also to those grants of other ministries which are based on population.

Unconditional transfers from the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs will rise to $563 million from $510 million this year.

Details of our main grant programs for 1980 are as follows:

We are introducing two long-term changes in the resource equalization grants. Farm and residential assessment will now be weighted at 85 per cent for purposes of calculating the grant. As a result, the REG will more accurately reflect local capacities to raise revenues through property taxation. Most county and regional costs are currently shared among municipalities on the basis of weighted equalized assessment. It seems only reasonable that provincial grants designed to equalize revenues among municipalities should be calculated on the same basis. As you probably know, the Ministry of Education will also be weighting residential and farm assessment at 85 per cent for grant and apportionment purposes in 1980. District welfare administration board, and homes for the aged boards will also begin doing their apportionments on the basis of weighted equalized assessment in 1980.

Next year, a lower-tier municipality will no longer be required to apply a portion of its current year's resource equalization grant against its regional or county requisition. Instead, the province will pay this portion directly to the region or county for the credit of the lower-tier municipality. The region or county will in turn be required to reduce by this amount the regional or county requisition of the lower-tier municipality qualifying for the grant. The change will give clear recognition to the province's support of upper tier expenditures without adversely affecting any municipality.

Starting in 1980, the one-year lag between when an REG is paid and when it is converted into equalized assessment for apportionment purposes will be discontinued. The 1980 REGs will be reflected in the 1980 apportionment. This means all municipalities in the county or region will benefit immediately from the higher grants to be paid next year.

The new 1980 standard for the resource equalization grant will be $21,200 per capita on the basis of the new equalization factors and $11,050 on the basis of the old equalization factors. The comparable standard for 1979 was $20,700 per capita using the new factors, rather than the $10,800 per capita using the old factors.

The total 1980 resource equalization grant payments will be about $144 million, up from $115 million in 1979.

General support grants: There will be no change for 1980 in the method of calculating this grant. It will continue to provide an amount equal to six per cent of the previous year's net general dollar levies to all municipalities. This grant will amount to approximately $166 million in 1980.

Special support grants for northern Ontario: Northern Ontario municipalities will continue to receive grants equal to 18 per cent of the previous year's net general dollar levy. This will represent about $46 million in grants in 1980.

Per capita grants: Other than the improved method for calculating grants populations, no change is being made in the schedules for these grants. The government has carefully considered municipal views on the rate structure of the general per capita and police per capita grants. However, we have decided to make no change but will continue to consider the suggestions being put forward.

The general per capita grant this year will total about $77 million. The police per capita grant will be about $94 million and the density grant will remain at about $6 million in 1980.

Further to my announcement last October, let me now give the members some further details on the government's plan to modify the effects of the new assessment equalization factors in the municipal sector in 1980. As members know, last July the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) published new equalization factors in the Ontario Gazette. They replaced those which had been used since 1970. These new factors reflect the changes in property values over the past decade. However, they do not represent a change in our taxation policy. Therefore, if they were used without limit there would be large, and in some cases unacceptable, shifts in the burden of property taxation among municipalities in 1980.

Let me first deal with our grants program. We have decided to limit the potential tax shifts within the resource equalization grant in two ways.

First, for the purpose of calculating the resource equalization grant, a municipality's equalized assessment will not be allowed to increase or decrease by more than 10 per cent relative to the change for the province as a whole, due to the new equalization factors.

Second, no municipality will receive less grant in 1980 than it would have received had the old factors remained in use. The calculation for the guarantee will be based on the same unweighted assessment standard as last year, adjusted for natural assessment growth.

As I mentioned in October, there will be a $10 per capita ceiling on the amount of increase of the REG that is paid to or on behalf of a lower-tier municipality over what is received in 1979.

In the apportionment area, the potential tax shifts to the sharing of county and regional costs will also be limited in two ways.

First, a municipality's equalized assessment for municipal apportionment purposes will not be allowed to increase or decrease by more than five per cent relative to its county or region as a whole due to the new equalization factors.

Second, in those instances where a municipality's share of an upper-tier gross levy would go up more than five per cent as a result of the new factors, even after the modifications I have outlined, the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs will provide a grant to cover the amount over five per cent.

Of course, a municipality's requisition may well go up more than five per cent over last year if the county or region is spending more or if there have been relative changes in local assessment.

Counties currently have the option, under section 507(7) of the Municipal Act, to apportion on a basis other than equalized assessment, subject of course to OMB appeal. Any of the regions which wish to be given the opportunity to do the same thing and to have this flexibility will have that opportunity starting in 1980. Both features of the apportionment plan will apply to conservation authorities and to northern social service boards. The Ministry of Education has also announced a similar program for school boards.

Merged area apportionments will continue to be calculated on the same basis as in the past. Today I will be introducing into the House amendments to the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975 to implement the 1980 resource equalization grant and apportionment changes that I have just outlined.

I wish to emphasize that these actions that are being taken to modify the tax shifts caused by the new equalization factors are for 1980 only. We are faced with a long-term problem requiring a long-term solution; thus the changes for 1980 which I have just described should not be interpreted as a first step towards that solution. We recognize that in 1981 and future years we cannot allow major increases of burden, for instance, to fall upon rural municipalities as a result of changing equalization factors. Since new factors will again be produced next July, we must have a solution ready by that time.

We are going to make the very best use of municipal expertise as we work our way towards a solution over the next few months. We will have an announcement next July for 1981 and after at the time when the new equalization factors are again provided.

As part of our overall program, the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs is holding a series of technical meetings throughout the province. The first ones were held yesterday in order to assure that everyone is fully aware of the implications of the program for their municipality.

The schedule for the workshops is as follows: yesterday they were held in Chatham and Ottawa; today they are being held in London and Smiths Falls; on December 7 in Brantford and Belleville; on December 10 Thunder Bay; December 11 Sault Ste. Marie; December 12 Etobicoke and Barrie; December 13 Cambridge and Peterborough; December 14 Sudbury and Owen Sound; December 17 North Bay; and on December 18 Timmins.

All the local members of the House living in the areas in which those meetings are being held will be or have been informed of those meetings and are welcome to attend.

During the overall environment of restraint, Mr. Speaker, the province has again demonstrated a strong financial commitment to the support of local governments. We are transferring a considerable sum of money, representing a sizeable increase over 1979, and we are delivering on our twin commitment on the equalization factor issue, that twin commitment being that no municipality or school board will receive less grant in 1980 as a result of the new equalization factors and we have taken steps to cushion municipalities against burdensome changes in apportionment.

Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that with this information, and the information which many of my colleagues who also transfer funds to local governments will provide, the municipalities in Ontario will be able to move forward in the preparation of their estimates for 1980.

GONCOURT PRIZE

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, for the first time in its history the Goncourt prize, that is the highest award for French literature, has been presented to someone outside of France.

Antonine Maillet, a well-known Acadian writer, is the first non-French citizen to receive this honour. This, in fact, means that the Acadian language is a Canadian reality which now has international recognition. It is a great event, not only for Acadia but for the whole of Canada. Pélagie la Charette is the story of the return of Acadians from Louisiana to their homeland, a Canadian book by a Canadian author with a very special background and culture, an Acadian. We in Ontario are happy today to congratulate Antonine Maillet for the honour she has brought to Canada.

Maillet has many readers in this province and a great number of theatre goers in Toronto have had the pleasure of seeing her play, La Sagouine, performed in English by the talented Acadian actress Viola Leger.

Those who cannot read French can only hope for an early translation of her work so that they may share, along with those who have awarded her the prize, the pleasure of reading Pélagie la Charette.

Je félicite et remercie aujourd'hui l'écrivain, la femme, l'acadienne, la canadienne qui, par son oeuvre, a su tailler au Canada une place importante dans la littérature contemporaine.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all the members of this Legislature will wish to join with me in extending to Antonine Maillet our congratulations for this outstanding achievement.

Mr. Cassidy: J'aimerais simplement me joindre au commentaire qui vient d'être fait par le ministre en félicitant Antonine Maillet pour l'honneur qu'elle a fait au Canada en gagnant le prix Goncourt à Paris et j'espère que le gouvernement va reconnaître les droits des Franco-Ontariens dans cette province dans le même esprit que Monsieur le Ministre vient de féliciter Madame Maillet pour son honneur.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of all honourable members the presence of a very distinguished guest in the Speaker's gallery in the person of the Honourable Tom Chambers, Minister of Housing and Public Works for the province of Alberta. Would you please welcome him?

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy: Has the minister received the same information as the Prime Minister of Canada that there may in fact be oil supply shortages experienced in Canada this winter? Could the minister tell us if Ontario is expected to be involved in the shortages and in what areas of the province there might be a shortfall of oil supplies?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think the simple answer to that question is no, I have not received information similar to that received by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the Prime Minister of Canada apparently does not know how severe the shortages might be, how long they will last or where the impact would be, which follows a good tradition in that area, does the province have any supplementary provincial contingency plan to deal with shortages of oil in areas of Ontario, and will the minister tell the House what it is?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As the honourable member knows, there is emergency allocation legislation in place which is under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada. If it is necessary, or deemed necessary, to recognize matters of shortage, there is a process under that particular allocation for that particular act to be put in place. It is my understanding from some news reports which I have read that the Prime Minister of Canada has indicated he will soon have in place the membership at the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, with which board lies the responsibility of starting the process under that legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Minister of Energy say why it is he has kept on telling this Legislature that the situation, as it regards heating oil supplies in Ontario this winter will be tight but manageable, when we now have the Prime Minister of Canada making statements to the contrary, and when at the same time we also have the National Energy Board uttering very severe warnings about what the supply situation will be in this province this winter?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think it is fair to remind the honourable member who has just raised the question that the Minister of Energy has responded honestly to the questions directed to him concerning supply, based on the best information available to him at the time the questions were directed to him.

The honourable member goes on to point out some information with respect to the National Energy Board and I should point out to him, as I pointed out to the honourable member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) on Tuesday when she questioned me, that I have not yet officially received from the National Energy Board the results of their evaluation of the November 10 accumulation of data. The honourable member suggests she has shared with me some information that was provided to her last Friday that will be part of that release, but at the same time I pointed out to her I had a Telex from the secretary of the National Energy Board saying there were likely to be some changes to that information and that I would be receiving a media release with the update in so far as that information was concerned. I have now been advised I can expect to receive that next Tuesday.

Mr. Sargent: In view of the fact that last night the federal government was talking about rationing and the minister has no set plans for anything here in Ontario, does he plan to have rationing in Ontario? Is he set up for that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The decision with respect to allocation of crude oil, the wholesale distribution with respect to petroleum products and what might happen retail, lies with the federal government under their legislation. All of these matters would be addressed if, in the opinion of those who have the responsibility, it is necessary to invoke that legislation.

Ms. Gigantes: Has the minister, since Tuesday when I provided him with the information I received on Friday, checked with the energy board to find out if these figures will be revised, or is there a simple delay at the energy board in releasing them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is my understanding there are some changes. I will be receiving the official documentation in connection with the November 10 accumulation of data, I was told, next Tuesday.

Mr. Peterson: Back in 1976 I believe, this government, with the support of this Legislature, gave itself the power to allocate and/or ration natural gas should that become necessary. The minister has that power and it is deemed an emergency at this time. What are his plans to participate in that type of a program for crude oil should that become necessary?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would hardly have to remind the honourable member that Ontario is a part of Canada; if there are some problems with respect to the distribution and/or the availability of crude oil and petroleum it should be done on a national basis. We have been consulted by the federal ministry with respect to the development of the program and the plans under the federal legislation; that is where the responsibility is, and should lie.

Mr. Breithaupt: Final supplementary: If the minister is correct in reminding us that Ontario is, in fact, a part of Canada, can he advise us also if there have been any consultations directly with his ministry or between him and the federal Minister of Energy, with respect to this immediate situation?

Hon. Mr. Welch: If I've understood the question, I have not talked to the federal minister since this announcement yesterday by the Prime Minister of Canada. If that's the question, the answer is no.

Mr. Speaker: We'll allow one more supplementary as we got out of sequence there. The member for Carleton East.

Ms. Gigantes: I'd like to ask the minister if he still feels the same sense of confidence in co-operation with the NEB these days.

Mr. Braugh: That's the National Energy Board.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would thank the member for Oshawa for spelling it out for me. I appreciate that.

I have no reason to question the information we are provided by the National Energy Board.

WINTARIO

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation with respect to the recent press comments concerning the possible financial difficulties in which the Wintario lottery program might find itself.

Would the minister explain if Wintario is not facing bankruptcy, as his press release of December 5 says, how a senior policy adviser in the ministry has been quoted as saying that Wintario's coffers could be empty by the end of the current fiscal year if funding were to continue at its present level? If that is the case, does the ministry plan to impose a freeze on non-capital funding, just as it did on capital funding a year ago?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'm very pleased to be able to reply to that question, because I do wish to set straight a press story that appeared yesterday in some newspapers throughout Ontario.

I would like to assure this House that Wintario is not bankrupt. It is not even anywhere close to bankruptcy as was reported yesterday. In order to substantiate that observation, I could quote all kinds of statistics but for the purposes of brevity here, I will refer only to four key statistics.

We started this fiscal year with a balance of $59 million unspent in Wintario. Realistically, we are anticipating an income of $47 million. In other words, we will have a sum total of $106 million. This year we are planning to spend $67 million and we are planning to end the year with a balance of $39 million. That will be plenty to carry us for our non-capital program. No doubt next year our capital program will once again reopen.

There is absolutely no truth in the supposition that Wintario is on the brink of bankruptcy. I hope everyone in this House will convey that fact to the many people across this province who are now engaged in various stages of projects.

Perhaps I'll wait for a supplementary, as we can engage in this quite a bit.

Mr. Breithaupt: If that same policy adviser who was quoted earlier had commented, as he did, that Wintario revenues have dropped more than 40 per cent since 1976 and that this is a pattern in lottery development which could have been predicted, then why has the ministry had to make a major review of the entire financing structure of the lottery if so many of these things could have been predicted?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I reported to this House many months ago, the reason we undertook a review of the capital program in the first instance was not because we were running out of funds. The reason we reviewed the capital program was to adjust our priorities, because we felt some of the needs had been met and others were still outstanding. It was not because we were trying to avoid bankruptcy, as has been suggested.

In terms of phasing out the Wintario program, I would remind members that in 1978-79 Wintario's proceeds were $46 million; in 1979-80, namely this year, we are anticipating $47 million; and in 1980-81 we are anticipating not less but more, we are anticipating $50 million because of the weekly draws which will be selling 12 million tickets a month rather than nine million.

If some people over there want to interpret that as a nosedive, I don't understand the word nosedive. There is a plateau that has been reached, and we are in very good shape.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize another honourable member for a supplementary, it just occurred to me that the initial question and its seven supplementaries, dealing with energy and directed to the Minister of Energy, took less than eight minutes. That is something all ministers might try to emulate.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to my dear good friend Reuben.

Mr. Speaker: The questioners might also do likewise.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to explain, when he tries to justify—

Mr. Grande: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of order, the member for Oakwood?

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I always understood that at least in the supplementaries we do rotate.

Mr. Speaker: That's right.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognized the member for Ottawa East because he was the only person standing.

Mr. Grande: I protest.

Mr. Speaker: He was. The member for Ottawa East. It is the person who catches the eye of the Speaker.

Mr. Roy: If the minister does not understand a nosedive, despite having spent some time as Minister of Energy and knowing what happened there, how does he explain the loss of revenue from $76 million in 1976 to $47 million this year? What kind of genius is he to generate that kind of increase in sales? What is he doing to stimulate the sales of Wintario? Since the minister says Wintario is not going bankrupt, where is it going when it keeps spending more than it is taking in?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the member for Ottawa East has taken a few minutes off from his busy law practice in Ottawa to come in here to raise a question. I am very pleased about that. I know he read last night's Ottawa Citizen as well as I did.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an answer?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I should point out while it is correct that way back in 1976 Wintario did generate a revenue of $76 million, lotteries, as anybody will attest who knows anything about the field, like all other kinds of products that have to be marketed have their day and then decline and plateau off.

Wintario has been the most durable lottery in the world. It has maintained a solid, persistent level over the last three years, and as I indicated a moment ago we anticipate an increase with the introduction of the weekly draw.

What honourable members have also conveniently forgotten is that Wintario is not the only lottery, from time to time other lotteries are introduced. We have introduced Lottario, which is now generating some $20 million a year. It is like the Ford Motor Company: you don't keep introducing the same model year after year, you keep making some changes and introducing new models; it is a success story.

I want to assure members who would like to bring out the crying towels, including the member for Ottawa East, that all is well in Wintario and we're going to go to even greater heights.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, one of the comments the minister made in his reply to the original question was that the commitments the ministry has made were not running ahead of the money Wintario generates. If that is correct, why is it we hear from the Ministry of Culture and Recreation, from the minister's own people, that the statement he made is false?

If what the minister is saying is correct, would he right now lift the freeze he imposed on the capital grants last November?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I would reject the statement that somebody in my ministry has indicated my statement about commitments is false. I would like to have the member for Oakwood substantiate that; and when he does, I will be able to respond more specifically to his question.

On the second part of his question, as to when we are going to reactivate the capital program, I will reassure this House, as I have in the past, that when we have determined the right priorities and what the new criteria should be we will once again start on our capital program.

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy regarding what we have been learning or not learning about the oil supply situation in Ontario this winter. Does the situation not now justify the government of the province of Ontario pressing with every means at its disposal on the federal government to go ahead and to invoke the first stage of the emergency energy allocation bill, in order to ensure the people of this province will have an adequate supply, or at least a fair distribution of short supplies, of heating oil over the coming winter?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, since my appointment as Minister of Energy, and in all my correspondence on the general subject of supply with the federal minister, I have urged on him two matters: First of all, the establishment of the membership of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board; and also to put in place the technical advisory committee, which brings together representatives of the industry who can provide some type of advisory support.

I would simply indicate I have made that request on a very persistent and regular basis; I leave it with the government of Canada to exercise their responsibilities in the general area of emergency allocations, once they deem it necessary so to do.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: We're beginning to despair if any advice from the Conservative government of this province will ever have any impact on the Conservative government of Canada, based on the minister's reply and other things we've had in the area of energy. Will the government now demand that the National Energy Board be ordered by the federal government to make available to the Legislature of this province and to the people of Ontario all the information with regard to oil supplies, and the outlook, in terms of forecasts of refinery production and of consumer demand, so that this Legislature as a whole, and the people of the province as a whole, can judge whether or not we're in for the serious shortages which now appear to be imminent?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the spirit of the question of the honourable member, who reminds us that in order to have some credibility in this matter it is absolutely incumbent that the people of this province, and this country, have information upon which they can come to some conclusions and act accordingly. We would not want to be contributing in any way to panic buying or to creating the very problem about which we are expressing some concern.

Having said that, I have instructed my officials that when they meet next Wednesday, December 12, with officials of the National Energy Board they have that particular matter of information sharing on their agenda. At that meeting we are going to receive an update with respect to those figures about which I was replying to earlier questions from the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt).

Mr. J. Reed: Yesterday, in estimates, when we were discussing the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, the government indicated it would take seven days to set up that board. In a news report yesterday, there was apparently some confusion over the basic rules of the game. It was suggested that it would take 60 days to put the allocation board to work and to have its work become effective. I wonder if the minister would be good enough to clarify the function of the allocation board? How soon from the time of implementation can that allocation board function?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think what the member is making reference to was the general presentation as to what would flow once the International Energy Agency triggered the shortfall; that was on the assumption that the Energy Supplies Allocation Board would be in place.

As I recall the presentation yesterday, there would be a period of seven days before that board could invoke or take the necessary steps with respect to stage one, which was the allocation of crude oil supplies. That was related, as I think the member will recall, to the steaming time, or the time between the ports in Venezuela and this country. That's how the seven days period was developed.

There was another period of time following the actual allocation of crude oil supply when there would be some type of allocation at the wholesale level as between companies. Finally, there were the retail implications.

The first period of time was the seven days that would elapse between the declaration, or the recognition of the emergency, and the first allocation of crude oil supply.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Since, according to the minister, he has been urging the federal government by letter and request that they should set up the infrastructure so that emergency allocations could go ahead; I would like to ask him how many times he has written to the federal Minister of Energy and how many replies he has had?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think that's a reasonable question. The answer is I've written frequently. I have also spoken to him frequently over the telephone.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does he say, "Bob who?"

Hon. Mr. Welch: I always identify myself on the telephone; no mysterious calls. I have some indication from him, apparently confirmed by a press release yesterday from the Prime Minister, that the membership of that board will be announced some time next week.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Since the Prime Minister of Canada indicated yesterday that there would be potential for difficulties in that part of Canada east of the Borden line, which derives its petroleum resources offshore, has the Minister of Energy undertaken any particular study to ascertain the condition with respect to supply to that part of eastern Ontario, at or east of the Borden line?

Hon. Mr. Welch: At the meeting of the provincial Ministers of Energy in Calgary a couple of months ago that was on the agenda. Indeed, as a followup of that meeting, at the staff level, we set up a task force to go into the whole question of methods of distribution and/or storage in the event of it being necessary to get Canadian oil into that part of the country.

The task force has had one meeting. Another one which was to be held early next week has been postponed until after the meeting with the National Energy Board. So consideration is being given by all the provinces to that particular question of distribution of our own oil in the eastern part of this country if it is deemed necessary.

RADIO SHACK

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Labour respecting the Radio Shack case and the decision that was announced yesterday by the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

Since the labour relations board has completely vindicated the union on every charge it laid against Radio Shack in that particular case, but since the labour relations board was unable to award a first contract because it lacked that power under the act, will the government now undertake to change the law so the labour relations board can order a first contract when workers face an employer as blatantly anti-union as Radio Shack?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, may I say first that beneath the introductory remarks I assume the member is also saying that the judicial process, as it exists today in our labour relations climate, allowed that sort of decision to be made, so there is a remedy for any evils, perceived or otherwise, in the industrial community.

Now that decision, as the member knows, may or may not be subject to appeal, and my role in that particular situation is to facilitate the parties in the negotiation of a contract, so I have no other comments on that particular decision.

As to the second part of the member's question, which had to do with first-contract compulsory arbitration, that is a matter the government doesn't have any immediate plans to deal with.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since justice delayed is justice denied, will the minister not give us more information about the question of first-contract arbitration?

It is now not just the trade unions, the Ontario Federation of Labour or the New Democratic Party, but the minister's own labour relations board which is involved. In a very carefully considered decision, a landmark decision which is about the toughest award against a company in the history of labour relations in all of Canada, the labour relations board in effect says specifically that it has tried to elaborate the statute to give ongoing life and meaning to the Legislature's intent. However, there comes a point where the legislation ends and the board can go no further. Is it the government's intention to continue to hobble the Ontario Labour Relations Board in dealing with a case like this, where a company has so deliberately set out to violate the right of organized workers to have a contract in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Again, Mr. Speaker, I share the member's praise for the independence, the quality and the confidence of that board in reaching independent decisions. I can only repeat that with regard to first contract arbitrations the government has no immediate plans.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister of Labour would agree that in 90 per cent of the cases at least the problem of the first contract is with union security and its denial by the companies or corporations involved. Would he not agree that once the OLRB has approved the vote of over 55 per cent of the people when they want to join a union, it should then be in legislation as part of their rights; and it should be secure legislation? Does he not agree we should have legislation that provides at least a minimum of union security by law?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as I have said before in this House on many occasions, the issue of union security is one under consideration. The Premier (Mr. Davis) has indicated that as well. I can give no commitment as to the policy on it.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, the decision of the board, as good as it is, came almost a year after the intimidation; a year after the company was able to intimidate those employees we are getting a good decision, when it may very well be too late. Surely there should be some justice for workers in the province.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I can only say I feel that decision reiterates the fact there is justice for all parties in the industrial work places.

BABY DEATHS

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware of a two-year study conducted by the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and the University Teaching Hospitals Association into baby deaths and children born with handicaps? Is he aware the study shows that of the 35,000 children born in Metro every year, many of the 450 deaths at birth in Metro could be saved and many of the severe handicaps about 140 children or so are born with could be avoided through better hospital facilities and better education? If so, is he prepared to provide the $537,500 requested in that study so a natal program could be undertaken in Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it is a perinatal program, not a natal program; and yes, I am aware of it. I have had several meetings this fall with representatives of the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and the University Teaching Hospitals Association.

The honourable member would not likely be aware I have had, for a number of years, a minister's advisory committee on reproductive care and that they have only just recently produced a report in addition to the one which he mentioned, on the whole question of reproductive care in the province, not just in Metropolitan Toronto. That report has been put into very broad circulation among health-care providers—doctors, hospital administrations and so forth—asking for their comments by mid-February.

I would anticipate and hope that in the first quarter of 1980 we could make some definitive statements of policy with respect to these two documents. I am told there may even be a third; the obstetrics section of the Ontario Medical Association may themselves be working on a paper. Obviously, this is a subject of considerable interest to all of us.

I would also point out it notes in that paper great progress has been made in this province in the last 10 years, although it undoubtedly points out there is room for further improvement in the future.

PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Isaacs: I have a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs arising from his statement today concerning municipal finance, a statement which is a repeat of information he has given to everybody else before he gave it to the House.

Why has the minister now announced such a complex system designed to modify the impact of the new equalization factors that were announced last July, when he could have announced a solution to the long-term problems he admits exist? When he announced today that new factors will again be published next July, is he telling us the only thing he will announce next July is new factors, or will he begin to deal with the very serious problems of property taxes, market-value assessment and grants to municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The announcement I made today was the first opportunity I had to indicate to the House what we had indicated to the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee last week. I think it is fitting and proper it be done in the context of the introduction of a bill, an Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, which puts into effect modifications in the use of the new equalization factors, modifications that allow for their use for grant and apportionment purposes this year.

However, these modifications are not just being announced at this time and were not announced as a new policy last Friday to the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee. These are the same modifications that were announced to this House during my estimates, I think on October 12. All these events follow logically. The House is now being asked to approve a plan which I think the municipalities and people in this province agree is a reasonable plan for the year 1980 for the use of the equalization factors.

In so far as next year is concerned, as I am sure my friend is aware, now that we have unfrozen the factors the Assessment Act requires my colleague, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maecck), to publish new factors next July. When he publishes those new factors next July the policies and the programs will have been looked at by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), the Minister of Revenue, the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), and others. It will be announced at the time the new factors are published in July how those factors will be used for grant and apportionment purposes for the year 1981 and beyond. It all fits together very clearly. I am sure my friend can understand how this process is working.

Mr. Isaacs: I think the minister is answering yes to my question, but I want to ask a supplementary. Does the minister's announcement today mean that after deducting the modifying of the impact of the new equalization factors, and after deducting the significant funds for capital purposes, the increase in grants for municipal operating purposes for 1980 will only be of the order of seven per cent or less, instead of the nine or 10 per cent increase in costs faced by municipal government? That means property taxpayers across this province will have to pay an even greater percentage of total municipal operating costs from their property taxes.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think my friend should wait to see what happens when municipal budgets are struck. As I indicated in the close of my statement, given the fact we are all in a period of restraint around here, a significant increase in money is being transferred to the municipalities by this province. When they figure out their detailed budgets, I think the municipalities will find the property taxpayers of this province are being assisted to a significant degree.

SNOWMOBILE TRAILS

Mr. G. E. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Is it true the Ministry of Natural Resources will be reducing its budget for snowmobile trail grooming and maintenance this year by 10 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, the figure for this year is $500,000, as it was last year. That is the whole trails program. About $100,000 goes into cross-country skiing and the remainder goes into snowmobiling trails. Since there has been no increase in the figure from the year before and there have been some increases in grooming costs and more applications, there is concern on the part of some of the associations that our share is not as high as it should be. On the other hand, I think it is also correct to say that more of the money is now required for maintenance and very little for capital equipment, since the capital equipment, I think, had been purchased in previous years.

Mr. G. E. Smith: Supplementary: Perhaps the minister is not aware that in our area, Simcoe county, approximately 70 miles is dealt with from the Orillia area and in consultation with the ministry staff an additional 20-mile link has been constructed from the Huronia district to the Haliburton district.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware?

Mr. G. E. Smith: If the minister is aware of this, would he not agree that it would seem feasible that the total budget for the Huronia district—which is now I believe $57,000, of which $13,000 goes to the Orillia snowmobile club—should be increased?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Much as I would like to say yes, I think I have to say I will look into it.

UNION GAS RATE APPLICATION

Mr. Peterson: To Reuben Baetz's successor, the Minister of Energy: I want to ask the minister about the recent application for a rate increase from Union Gas—from his friend, his kissing cousin, Darcy McKeough from Chatham—which is now before the Ontario Energy Board. I am not talking about the automatic one pegged to the price of oil, I am talking about the extra 42 cents per 1,000 cubic feet the company is asking for before the Ontario Energy Board.

Will the minister take it upon himself to do something—and I don't want the answer that it's the jurisdiction of the Ontario Energy Board and he can't do anything—and not allow this absolutely outrageous increase in the price of natural gas for the consumers of Ontario? What is he going to do when it is under his jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am sure the honourable member wouldn't expect me to indicate that I would in any way interfere with a matter that presently stands before the Ontario Energy Board.

Mr. Peterson: I very much expect that the minister will do something to interfere, particularly in view of the fact that—

Mr. Speaker: Question, question.

Mr. Peterson: Does the minister agree with the fact that the increase is going to come out of the skin of the consumer and the small businessman, with virtually nothing coming out of the large business consumers? Does he agree with the philosophy espoused by his friends at Union Gas, that the small consumers should pay and subsidize big business in terms of gas prices?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, it would be far more fitting if the honourable member, rather than grandstanding in the Ontario Legislature, would appear before the Ontario Energy Board and make that case there, if he really is sincere about this.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is a lot of gas around here of another variety.

TRAINING OF POLICE OFFICERS

Mr. Lupusella: I have a question of the Solicitor General. As a result of the involvement of the two police officers in the Bruce Lorenz investigation, is the minister prepared to review all the manuals used at the Ontario Police College to determine whether or not the methods and the practices taught to police officers are efficient and are within the existing law?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lupusella: In the light of the fact that in the past few months the role of the police officers has been the cause of widespread public concern in relation to techniques they use to implement the law, and considering that the Ontario Police College is the source of the training process to which they are bound, is the minister prepared to form a task force to review the whole operation of the Ontario Police College in order to ensure that the police officers are well trained to face their challenging role in modern society?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, in my view our police officers are very well trained to face the many very difficult challenges of modern society. Obviously, we continuously review the courses that are given at the Ontario Police College, because we are aware of the fact that these challenges grow, and also vary, from year to year and decade to decade.

As an illustration of that, I announced a week or 10 days ago the formation of a task force, headed by Dr. Reva Gerstein, to review police education in the province in so far as it relates to dealing with the many minority groups and cultural traditions that are such an important part of our province.

HYDRO URANIUM CONTRACTS

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy. It concerns the contract, the purchase and sales agreement, between Ontario Hydro and Denison Mines Limited for supply of uranium. I would like to ask the minister if he is aware that the Premier (Mr. Davis) urged the select committee to rush through a contract with Denison for $7 billion worth of uranium at a world price of $40 to $50 a pound, when he knew there was plenty available at the minehead for $1 a pound, and when a committee of this House didn't approve of it the Premier signed the contract anyway. I ask the minister, in view of the serious financial mess this province is in now, will he tell this House why he will not take steps to renegotiate this scandalous contract, in the same way as Westinghouse did in the United States to the extent of many billions of dollars? If they can do it, why can't the minister do it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think it's quite unfair of the honourable member to suggest that the Premier of this province rushed that contract through the select committee. I think the timetable will indicate that the select committee—and indeed the chairman of that select committee might want to attest to this—that the contract was sent to the select committee, but I don't know that any timetable was imposed upon the committee for a detailed consideration of the contract. As far as I am concerned the time that was allocated was reasonable, and indeed the committee found some difficulty in coming to a unanimous decision with respect to the contract. The honourable member knows that. The government, following that public review, acted in what it felt was the public interest and indeed authorized the contract.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: We have a series of payments starting at $200 million a year. Will the minister tell the House why the Premier or the government gave Denison $368 million in front money when any other firm having a $7 billion contract would take that to the bank and do their own discount financing? I want to know how much of that $368 million the government has given them to date in front money?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that particular part of the question as notice and provide the member with the actual details. I don't carry that detail with me, and I will be very glad to get that detail for him.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Where is the information that the minister promised us two weeks ago in his energy estimates concerning a review of the uranium contract?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am glad the honourable member has raised that. The honourable member raised that again yesterday in estimates committee, and I was reminded of the fact that the information had still not been provided. When I followed up I was told that it was in the finishing stages of preparation. I will see that it gets to the honourable member as soon as I have it.

Mr. J. Reed: Would the minister not agree, when he's considering the problem, that the advice the government got on this matter was wrong, that the judgement used by the government was wrong; and at least in this case will he acknowledge that the opposition was right?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think, Mr. Speaker, the answer to all questions would be no.

Mr. MacDonald: Would the minister agree that if the Liberals hadn't flip-flopped and had stuck to their original position of bringing Denison under public ownership, along with the NDP, we could have avoided any ripoff that is involved in the contract?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The present Minister of Energy always has a certain amount of respect for the consistency of the official opposition in flip-flopping.

SEATON DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Duksza: I have a question for the Minister of Housing regarding the development of the Pickering project, now called Seaton. How can the Minister of Housing justify the irrational development of Seaton, when it is clear the project will destroy 38,700 acres of prime agricultural land and undermine industrial and financial viability of both Metro Toronto and Whitby-Oshawa? In view of this very serious concern, will the minister tell us why his government continues to be committed to the development of this white elephant of Seaton? Will he, at the same time, tell us why the government refuses to scale down the development of the York-Durham sewer systems, which will only give further impetus to urban sprawl east of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the member from the third party should raise the question again at this time since we went through it in estimates, which was only a matter of a week or two ago.

I indicated clearly at that time we were proceeding with Seaton and were now meeting with the Durham regional council in regard to the official plan, and indeed the subdivision agreements that will be necessary to get on with the development of Seaton, the new community, by the year 1982.

I indicated clearly there were some 6,800 acres involved; that some of them were allocated for residential development and others for industrial and commercial purposes; and that it was not our intention as a government to implement the entire project at one time, that it would be some time after the turn of the century before we will see Seaton as a complete community of roughly 50,000 to 70,000 people.

I indicated clearly we would be tapping into the big sewers we had allowed the region of Durham to construct under the Ontario Home Assistance Program, that we were going to try to use the capacity of that system into which the taxpayers of this province have put a great deal of money to open up lands in advance of need. One of the great cries we have heard from the opposition parties and a great number of other people is that government has not pre-invested money to open up lands in advance of need and as a result we had some part and parcel in contributing to the high inflationary factor being experienced in the price of land.

Obviously we are going to hook into that sewer system. We hope Seaton will get under way if—and I caption my remarks—if and when the region of Durham makes the necessary official plan amendments and also approves the subdivision agreements to allow for that construction.

Mr. Duksza: Supplementary: Is the minister telling us he disagrees with what the TTC land-use team had to say with regard to the government's Go east, North Pickering and York-Durham policies? Let me quote to him from the land-use background study on transit in the 1980s: "Pursuit of existing regional and provincial policies are a waste of economic resources, a waste of tax dollars and the ways in which the policies are effected destroys the financial and economic viability of Metro Toronto."

Secondly, is the minister aware that Mayor James Potticary, of Oshawa, has already said the further development in the Seaton area will destroy the industrial viability of the Oshawa-Whitby area and they do not need any further housing east of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The mayor of Oshawa will have his opportunity to speak at the regional council when the plan comes up for adoption. I am not going to get into any argument with him here today. He has his opinion, he has expressed it on more than one occasion and I will allow his position to stand.

There will be other members of that regional council who, in their wisdom or otherwise, will either accept or reject the proposal of our ministry, through the Ontario Land Corporation, for the development of Seaton. As far as it relates to the city of Toronto, not everything in this province—let's get it very clear—starts and stops with this metropolitan area of Toronto. There are other parts of this province that are going to continue to develop and have an opportunity for some new economic input.

Regardless of what the city of Toronto or Metropolitan Toronto thinks, the government's policy has been to go east of Metro Toronto to create some new economic opportunities. As the member knows, the Ministry of Revenue and the liquor warehousing agency have been moved into that area to give some impetus to the Seaton program.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Roy: Ottawa East. What did I do to you that you should insult me?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are here so seldom even the Speaker forgets who you are.

Mr. Roy: What's got you so annoyed?

ILLEGAL ACTS BY POLICE

Mr. Roy: I have a question for the Attorney General, the Solicitor General and the chief law officer of the crown. Is the minister going to make a statement at some time about his views and policy on the rule of law in this province?

One hears of police officers in a recent trial making statements about breaking the law or of the end justifying the means; and also of some crown attorneys testifying under oath they would apparently advise police officers it is okay to break the law in certain circumstances. Further, the apparent policy of his ministry is evidenced by a crown attorney who asked for a jail sentence in some circumstances involving a union leader breaking the law in an offence punishable by two years, while in the case of two police officers found guilty of breaking the law in an offence punishable by two years another crown attorney asked for an absolute discharge. Does the minister believe in a rule of law and is he going to correct that situation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I've made it clear on a number of occasions, both inside and outside this House, that no individual is above the law, a police officer or otherwise. Any police officer who breaks the law will be subject to prosecution just like any other citizen. I want to repeat that again.

I'm not sure the statements that form part of the question posed by the member for Ottawa East relate to an accurate interpretation of what was said. I've ordered a transcript of the relevant evidence which I expect to have sometime today. I will be reviewing the matter and making a further statement to the House on it.

For the purpose of my friend's question at this time, I want to make it quite clear if any individual or crown attorney has suggested that police officers are above the law or can break the law—and I'm not suggesting that was said—then that is clearly wrong.

Mr. Roy: By way of supplementary, would the minister as Solicitor General, be making the same statement if the press report of the views of senior police officers is accurate, namely, that they said there are circumstances which justify the police breaking the law?

Secondly, I'd like to ask the Attorney General, when we're talking about the law being respected by the public and there being a perception that the law be evenly applied, how does he justify the differential in these circumstances, that is the approach taken by the crown in a case involving a senior labour official, while on the same day and at the same time, in a case involving guilt on the part of two police officers, the crown asked for an absolute discharge?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I've already indicated I will be reviewing the transcript and making a more complete statement, both as Attorney General and as Solicitor General, in relation to the matter. I'd also caution the member for Ottawa East to the effect that these cases are under appeal, both in relation to the sentence that was handed down this morning for the contempt of court and the matter relating to police officers.

Mr. Speaker: The Attorney General has suggested these matters may be sub judice. Since he has taken the specific question and the supplementary as notice, perhaps you could wait until the honourable member reports back to the Legislature.

Mrs. Campbell: On a point of order, could I not place my question so it could be determined whether it was—

Mr. Speaker: So long as it does not offend the sub judice rule.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Was it the Solicitor General who instructed counsel in the Barrie case, and the Attorney General who instructed counsel in the injunction case? Could we know who instructed in each of those cases? I don't think that offends any sub judice rule.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I must admit up to about a moment or two ago I thought the caucus of the Liberal Party was in a very happy mood. I didn't know whether it was because of the holiday season or the absence of their irascible leader. Be that as it may, I will attempt to answer the rather irascible question from the member for St. George.

Obviously, given the circumstances of the illegal strike, as the member for St. George knows I was excused from estimates yesterday morning to confer with counsel in relation to the matter that is before the Supreme Court. I was not involved in instructing counsel with respect to the Barrie matter.

BELL CANADA RATES

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

The minister will be aware that last Thursday the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission ordered Bell Telephone to reduce its rates on two-party lines as a means of lowering costs to low-income earners, and he will recall that the CRTC made that order just two days after he refused in this House to make application for reduction in Bell rates and gave approval for the first steps by Bell to bring in a system which will further penalize the senior citizens, the shut-ins and low-income groups. Now Bell is proposing to meet with the CRTC to re-examine its proposal with respect to the special charges for local calls. Will the minister make representation to the commission that it is his view Bell should not proceed with that proposal?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few minutes to decipher what that was all about, because most of it I didn't hear. I think I had best take that question as notice and read it in Hansard; then maybe I can understand it.

TEACHER-BOARD NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education.

In view of the continuing deterioration in the work to rule problem in North York, and more particularly the involvement today of some students in this campaign, I think in part showing their anger and frustration, will the minister reconsider her earlier position, which I respected, not to take a role, and have a comment in the next few days about this situation?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be reiterated that I suggested in the House the other day I was not prepared to legislate in the Brant county situation at that time, nor am I at this point, because I do believe that is a mechanism for a cop-out on the part of both parties to the negotiations. The best solution to any of these problems is a negotiated settlement.

The situation at the present time is such that I have been informed that two proposals have been made and are being discussed today by the Education Relations Commission. I anticipate we will be hearing of their deliberations in the not too distant future.

REPORTS

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

ESTIMATES BRIEFING MATERIAL

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the following report:

Your committee has considered the timing of delivery to the critics of estimates briefing material. The committee is of the view that briefing material should be given to the critics as soon as it is ready, but no later than two weeks before the beginning of the ministry's estimates.

Most problems relating to delivery of briefing material seem to be adequately resolved through the office of the government House leader. The committee, therefore, sees no need for an amendment to the standing order in this matter.

Your committee has also considered the practice of members making statements to the House concerning events or persons from their constituencies. The committee recommends that members wishing to make such a statement should inform Mr. Speaker beforehand, so that he may decide whether it is appropriate for a statement to be made.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' RESOLUTIONS

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee has reviewed the practice of amending private members' resolutions.

Private members' opportunities for presenting their views to the House for debate are very limited. In the committee's view, it is undesirable for amendments to a private member's resolution to shift the entire focus of the debate away from the original idea proposed by the mover of the resolution.

The committee, therefore, recommends that a new section be added to standing order 64, to read: No amendment may be made to a motion under this standing order.

Mr. Breaugh: As Mr. Speaker may recall, there has been some debate about this and practices of the House. We hope this would clarify the situation.

On motion by Mr. Breaugh, the debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee has considered the matter of referring private members' public bills to committee, and recommends as follows:

That a new section be added to standing order 64, to read: Notwithstanding standing order 56(c), private members' public bills given second reading shall stand referred to the committee of the whole House, unless referred to a standing or select committee by a majority of the House.

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, this deals with a matter that has been of concern to some of the members about the purpose, the intent and the mechanism used to block the processing of private members' bills.

On motion by Mr. Breugh, the debate was adjourned.

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Villeneuve from the standing resources development committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill, with certain amendments: Bill 24, an Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Agreed?

So ordered.

Ordered for third reading.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I think we would prefer that the bill go to committee of the whole House.

Mr. Speaker: I put the question, and it carried.

Mr. S. Smith: I heard a "no."

Mr. Speaker: I didn't hear any "no."

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Huron-Bruce said "no."

Mr. Speaker: After it was carried.

Mr. Martel: I don't know what the haste is. If we're talking about Bill 24, it was agreed at the House leaders' meeting that that would be called Tuesday next.

I don't know what kind of nonsense is going on over there. My friend the House leader knows that agreement was reached at noon today. I'm surprised we have to listen so intently to agreements which have been made.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, on that point, I think it was agreed that Bill 24 would be called, either in its committee of the whole House stage, if that was the wish of the House, or for third reading, next Tuesday. I had assumed, as the report came in, that this House had decided the bill could proceed to third reading next Tuesday.

Mr. Martel: The government House leader knows full well that it was to be announced tonight at six o'clock if that bill were going to go to committee of the whole House or be given third reading, and that would be called next Tuesday. The government can't play that sort of game. I ask that it withdraw that effort to get it passed quickly.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That's exactly what I said. The bill would be called for committee of the whole House or be given third reading. I had assumed it was so when I heard Mr. Speaker put the question shall the bill proceed to third reading. I didn't hear any other questions or any objections in this House.

I want to make it very clear that at all meetings it was always the position of our party that the bill had had full and thorough debate in committee. We were ready to go to third reading. However, if my friends wish it to go to committee of the whole House it's okay with me.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: This is a routine matter; those are routine questions that are put by the chair under every circumstance of this kind. If you're going to make your little agreements behind the scenes without the knowledge of the chair, I want to tell you that you put the chair in a very invidious position. We're just doing our job around here; unless we have unanimous consent to revert so that you can choose a different course of action the decision stands. It's as simple as that.

Mr. Martel: I understand Mr. Speaker's predicament; I sympathize with the position he's in. What offends me, though, is the fact that the government House leader and representatives from the Liberal Party and our party met, as we usually do, on Thursday and drafted the order of business for next week. The order of business for Bill 24 was that it would be called next Tuesday afternoon. That's why I wasn't concerned about it. I would ask that the government House leader get his people to back off, as they say they're not going to give unanimous consent, so we can get the Speaker out of the position that we have got him in; so that he can call for unanimous consent to go back and remove that bit of nonsense.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'd like to speak to the point of order. The other night in the House the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) had accepted an amendment from the NDP in regard to one of his bills which was voted down in the House. Then he got up and said it was intended we should pass it, and would we mind reverting by unanimous consent to do so.

We on this side went along in the spirit of co-operation to do what the majority of the House wanted. I would ask my friend across the way to accept this in the same spirit of co-operation and allow this bill to go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think the issue at stake here is as you have put it. You have been called upon, and we must uphold your decisions and your guidance to this House.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Just don't expect any further co-operation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Wait a minute; listen to the whole argument.

I want the Speaker's ruling and the Speaker's control of this House to be supported by all members of this House. The Speaker is called upon to put certain questions to this House at particular times. When the report from the chairman of the committee was made the Speaker placed the question: Shall the bill be now read for a third time. I quite sympathize with Mr. Speaker. He cannot, and should not, be a party to the discussions we carry on in order to make this House work smoothly. Those discussions of course must be carried on, and we must have a degree of co-operation and confidence.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, my recollection of those discussions is that we did agree we would call Bill 24 next Tuesday, and that it might be called for committee of the whole House or it might be given third reading. I recall very clearly the point of view being put forward by at least one of the other parties that perhaps there was no need for committee of the whole House and that any further debate on that bill could continue on third reading. My recollection of those meetings was that we would all go back and find out whether in fact it needed to go to committee of the whole House or if third reading would be all right.

Mr. Speaker, the bill will be called for third reading next Tuesday. I have to assume, as you have to assume when you put that question, that the question had been decided by the other parties and they had assumed that they were going to go. That is the only assumption I can go on.

Mr. Martel: Oh, come on.

Mr. Conway: Eric Winkler revisited.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

The motion for adoption before the House was the reporting of Bill 24 from a committee. I put the question; the motion was received and adopted. I then put the question: "Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?" There were no audible objections and so I declared the motion carried. Since then there has been some indication that some members would prefer to have it go to the committee of the whole House.

Now, is there unanimous consent to reconsider and have it sent to the committee of the whole House?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I do not hear unanimous consent. The bill will be ordered for third reading.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I just want to make it clear that I, as House leader, have no objection to it going to committee of the whole House.

Mr. Cassidy: But you can't make agreements stick.

Mr. Bolan: We will have them here until the end of January.

Mr. MacDonald: Ayatollah.

Mr. Eaton: You wouldn't even give the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) 10 minutes the other night.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Having put the position, which I thought was quite clear, I just want it clearly understood by all members of the House that the government has no objection to the bill going to committee of the whole House next Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker: For the third time, do we have unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I heard a no. It stands as ordered for third reading.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaunt from the standing social development committee reported the following resolutions:

That supply in the following amounts and to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980:

Ministry administration program, $5,884,000; university support program, $886,510,-

000; college and adult education support program, $446,682,000; student affairs program, $90,898,000; and

That supply in the following supplementary amount and to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980:

College and adult education support program, $8,023,400.

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. McCaffrey from the standing general government committee reported the following resolution:

That supply in the following amounts and to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Energy be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980:

Ministry administration program, $1,484,000; conventional energy program, $2,263,000; renewable energy program, $2,590,000; energy conservation program, $7,187,000; regulatory affairs program, $1,331,000; energy supply program, $550,000.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that, notwithstanding any order of the House, the standing resources development committee may meet tonight and that the House may meet to debate a matter in the resources policy field.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Renwick: A point of order, Mr. Speaker: My point of order is a question. In the event there is an emergency debate this afternoon under standing order 34, when would it be in order to move that the standing administration of justice committee not sit this afternoon?

Mr. Speaker: Right now.

Mr. Renwick: I would therefore move that in the event there is an emergency debate this afternoon under rule 34 of this House, that the standing administration of justice committee do not sit this afternoon.

Mr. Breithaupt: In speaking to that, Mr. Speaker, could we inquire, since apparently this matter to be debated deals with energy matters, why it would be that the standing administration of justice committee could not get on with its separate work?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable, the government House leader is responsible for ordering the business of the House.

Hon. Mr. Wells: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would submit this motion is out of order.

It is the responsibility of the government House leader to move the motions concerning the business of the House.

Mr. Renwick: Nonsense, it's in order.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would submit this was not agreed to, and that notwithstanding—

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: Say that again?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think you get a little excited. We are getting towards the end of the session.

Mr. Martel: With reason, near the end of the session or no.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I submit to members, if there is to be fault on the last little altercation it rests on all of us.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: There is no motion before the House so therefore there can be no debate.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I did move.

Mr. Speaker: You don't have the right to move it, with all due respect. You don't have the right to make the motion. It may have had merit, but that is the responsibility of someone else.

Mr. Renwick: With all due respect—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, under what rule of the House do I not have the authority to make that motion?

Mr. Speaker: Because the ordering of the business of the House is the responsibility of the government House leader. Do you want to challenge it? Order.

Mr. Cassidy: They can't do it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a different point of order to raise, regarding the same matter. I would ask your interpretation, then, of rule 34, which says if the House determines by its vote to set aside the normal business of the House to discuss a matter of urgent importance. What is setting aside the business of the House? Surely setting aside the business of the House is not only the Legislature but its committees as well.

Mr. Speaker: No; that logic is really convoluted.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ONTARIO UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 194, An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants, Act, 1975.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF PEEL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 195, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

SARNIA PORTABLE EQUIPMENT RENTALS LIMITED ACT

Mr. Blundy moved first reading of Bill Pr31, An Act to revive Sarnia Portable Equipment Rentals Limited.

Motion agreed to.

CROWN EMPLOYEES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Mackenzie moved first reading of Bill 196, An Act to amend the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to clarify that the Ontario Public Service Labour Relations Tribunal has exclusive jurisdiction to determine units of employees which are appropriate for collective bargaining purposes under the act.

The bill also authorizes the tribunal to make determinations affecting collective bargaining units established by the regulations when the act comes into force. Therefore, this bill will remove the present jurisdiction of the government and transfer it to the Ontario Public Service Labour Relations Tribunal.

PUBLIC HOSPITALS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Breaugh moved first reading of Bill 197, An Act to amend the Public Hospitals Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide for the establishment of a conciliation board to mediate disputes between public hospitals and the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) concerning matters related to the government, management, operation or use of a hospital, or the payment of grants to a hospital. If the conciliation board is unable to affect agreement between the parties it shall report its recommendations to the minister and the public hospital that is a party to the dispute, and the conciliation board's report shall then be made public.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling moved first reading of Bill 198, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, since being elected to this Legislative Assembly I have been called many things, including an MLA and MPP. The purpose of this bill is to have MPP recognized in the statute as the official designation for members of this Legislature. The bill will not only confirm the historical basis of this designation but it will also provide some consistency.

MOTION TO SUSPEND NORMAL BUSINESS

Ms. Gigantes moved that the ordinary business of the House be set aside to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the impending crisis in the availability of energy supplies, particularly home heating oil.

Mr. Speaker: Under standing order number 34, I did receive proper notice of intent to introduce this motion. I will listen to the reasons why the honourable member thinks the ordinary business of the House should be set aside. I will hear her for up to five minutes.

Ms. Gigantes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The matter I propose for discussion is a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration by this assembly. I am seeking to have the regular business of the House put aside so we can have an emergency debate concerning the shortage of heating oil supplies which will affect residents of Ontario this winter.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister confirmed this emergency yesterday when he stated in the federal parliament that figures available through the National Energy Board indicate there will be a heating oil shortage in eastern Canada over the next few months. A portion of these National Energy Board figures would normally have been released to the public last Friday, but the NEB called my office this morning to inform me that even this limited information would not be unveiled to the public until next Tuesday, a full 11 days later than expected. Supplies are no longer tight but manageable.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday I went to the offices of the NEB in Ottawa and was given information about oil inventories and production to the end of October. Because of my longstanding efforts to secure the fullest possible public disclosure of the facts about supplies of oil to Ontario, I succeeded in having the NEB produce these figures for the east and west regions of Canada. Formerly, they had been made available to the public only on a Canada total basis. I should note, however, that only the big oil companies and high government officials are receiving the NEB monthly regional surveys of the five Canadian regions and the associated regional forecast of demand for oil products.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it's the duty of this Legislature to seek and get every ounce of information which will enable us to let the public of Ontario know the full facts of the situation and enable us to provide informed proposals about the most appropriate measures the government of Ontario should be taking.

The current situation is one of apprehensive confusion, compounded by a Telex from which the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) quoted Tuesday, December 4, in this House. The minister received the Telex from the NEB on Tuesday morning and he referred to it in the following words:

"I have a Telex which I have just received before coming into the House which would indicate that I will have an update on that particular matter.

"I am told also that the media release will again stress the obvious need to curb consumption—a point which the honourable member has shared during his question—conservation of our resources, whatever the results of that particular survey are and will properly caution against alarm. That has always been my concern in responding to questions—wanting to share information which the honourable members are entitled to have without creating the problem itself."

Mr. Speaker, I don't think any reasonable person can feel the slightest inhibition today about the fullest possible sharing of information concerning supplies of heating oil for Ontario residents. Not only should we know what is happening with supplies, we should also know the best estimates of demand. We should have a complete and clear picture of how the Ontario government intends to deal with the situation. In other words, exactly what measures it proposes in order to protect Ontario residents as far as humanly possible.

I hope the minister will agree that these reasons constitute sufficient grounds for permitting an emergency debate on this question. Thank you.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the news which the Prime Minister gave the country in terms of the impending oil shortage should have come as no surprise to people who have been following this matter closely. It did not come as any surprise to the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed) who yesterday, before the Prime Minister's announcement, made it very clear that in the view of this Liberal opposition supplies were going to be short and an emergency was just around the corner. We endorse the statement by the member for Carleton East with regard to the need to have the fullest possible information available.

I am particularly concerned when I hear the Minister of Energy continually say all matters concerning allocation—all emergency matters dealing with the shortage—are in the federal realm. Yes, indeed, there is a bill in the federal realm and yes, indeed, there are federal measures to be taken, but I would hate to think that the province of Ontario would give up its own right to decide within the province certain priorities and certain measures which might have to be taken in the event of a shortfall in heating oil, an event which now seems inevitable.

It is interesting that over the last several years we have had a government in Ontario which has consistently refused to deal with the question of supply. They have been willing to stand in front of Mr. Lougheed's hotel room, playing the violin and holding the tin cup and saying: "Remember, Mr. Lougheed, when we were young and vigorous, how we used to help you? Shouldn't you be doing something for us now in our doddering old age?" and things of that kind. But we have heard nothing with regard to supply.

That is quite shocking when you consider that in this province we have wood from which methanol can be made; we have all kinds of brushland that could be used for that purpose. We have garbage—for which we are seeking various sites on agricultural land—which could be utilized for making methanol. We have various crops which could be used for the purpose. We have peat resources.

We have a province blessed with alternatives, in other words: substitutes for oil. But do we have a government that has been interested in any such substitution? Far from it. All they have asked for is to have some type of price break on oil, a reasonable enough request. But what about the plans to substitute for oil?

We have nuclear energy; we are told that might be a great substitute. Sure, there will be some people who will plug in an electric heater; there will be some, but we have far more than enough electricity to handle that. Yet all we have heard are more and more plans, in the billions, for more electrical generation capacity and nothing for the substitution of oil—the product which we really have to worry about and for which we could substitute.

What about natural gas? I was in a small business in Hamilton today. They wanted to convert from oil to natural gas and were willing to buy a new furnace—not just one of those burners that apparently Mr. McKeough has been unable to get a supply of. They were willing to buy a furnace—and he has plenty of those—and they were told: “Don’t even leave us your name. We don’t want to hear about it until the end of January because we are swamped with people wanting to convert and we don’t even want to add you to the list.”

What has this government done to make sure we get a massive switching into natural gas? What has it done to make sure the people and the machines will be available to convert to natural gas, to make sure the communities of Ontario like Madoc and Bancroft—the reasonable-sized communities—would be served by natural gas?

We have been asking for this time and time again and we have had a government that sits on its hands basically, not understanding the problems of the late 1970s and the early 1980s, and uses the phoney solutions that may have worked in the 1940s and 1950s.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Hindsight is great.

Mr. J. Reed: We told you four years ago.

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Mississauga East says he doesn’t remember. Mr. Speaker, do you remember when in 1977 I said there should be a mandatory home-insulation program so we would stop wasting the precious oil resources to heat the air above our houses? The Premier said, “The government has no place in the attics of the nation.” It was very funny; very amusing indeed. He’s always very good with a quip of this kind and that’s just dandy, it may even have won him a few votes, but it has caused terrible problems in Ontario and those chickens are coming home to roost now.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member’s time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House is for setting aside the orders of the day, to use the wording, in order to discuss the impending crisis in the availability of energy supplies, particularly home heating oil.

I know all members of this Legislature want to approach a subject of this importance with a high degree of responsibility. Certainly, we on this side of the House would have no objection in a fairly detailed discussion with respect to this motion. However, I think it’s important to put on record two or three things with respect to the motion itself before final determination is made as to whether or not orders of the day be set aside for the balance of the day to engage in this debate.

We take the position, on the basis of information we are prepared to share, that there is no reason at this time to assume a crisis. We draw attention to the wording of the resolution which has that sweeping phrase, “energy supplies.” The honourable member who proposed that knows that includes petroleum products, natural gas, electricity and coal. To add to what I’ve already said, certainly we’ve had no indication there is this impending crisis with respect to all of our energy supplies. I think it’s important to put this on the record.

Surely the question we are invited to consider by virtue of this motion is one of a tight supply situation with respect to crude oil and petroleum products. We do need some understanding as to what the debate will be if it proceeds.

I want to say to the honourable member who proposed this motion and to those who have spoken in accordance with the rules in order that we might consider whether or not we would carry on for the balance of the afternoon that I want to assure the House that assuming no abnormalities in crude supply or refinery operations or weather conditions occur, I have been assured by the petroleum industry that heating oil supplies in Ontario will be adequate to meet the demand for this current heating season. I think it is important to recognize that.

Some reference has been made to a statement attributed to the Prime Minister of Canada. I would draw the honourable member’s attention to a statement made before the House of Commons natural resources committee today by the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He emphasizes he has not seen the final report to which the honourable member makes reference.

I want to talk about that report in just a moment because I think it’s very important that she understand this. I have no reason to believe that she doesn't honestly feel that she has a report of a situation in this country as of the end of October. We were advised an hour and a half ago the information she was given on Friday in Ottawa represented the situation as of the end of September. In fact, she does not have the information she alleges she has and to which she attaches her news release. Even the federal minister hasn't seen that documentation.

May I now make a correction. The press release I indicated I would have by next Tuesday, to which would be attached some evaluation of the situation from the collection of data as of November 10, is to be made available tomorrow. It is information we obtained as part of the same telephone conversation—when we couldn't understand how the member for Carleton East got access to information which even the federal minister says before the House of Commons he hasn't seen.

Because the federal minister must speak to the question of the so-called impending crisis, we would go back to what the federal minister says when he reports he hasn't seen the final report. He went on to say while the supply/demand situation has tightened in recent weeks, there is no imminent shortage of heating oil. I think the people of Ontario are entitled to have that particular assurance.

As far as politics is concerned, it might be a very interesting exercise to have some doom and gloom predictions. But we don't do the people of this province nor the people of Canada any service by sharing information on which there doesn't seem to be any foundation.

I look forward to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps the opportunity to expand on these remarks if it is your wish that the debate continue.

Mr. Speaker: The question for the chair to decide is whether or not the motion constitutes a matter of urgent public importance.

I have looked at all the criteria set out in standing order 34 and I rule the motion does meet the requirements of that standing order.

However, the question now before the House is shall the debate proceed?

Motion agreed to.

AVAILABILITY OF ENERGY SUPPLIES

Ms. Gigantes: I think I will begin, in the light of the minister's comments just a few minutes ago, with a story for you, Mr.

Speaker. I will tell you how I came by these famous figures which the minister doesn't believe to be of any importance and which he chooses to dismiss, assuring us once again that talk of heating oil shortages in Ontario is merely gloom and doom and that as far as anybody can tell, if imports are maintained, if refineries work perfectly and if all other things are equal in the eyes of God we will have sufficient heating oil to heat the homes and businesses of Ontario this winter.

The story I am going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, begins in June of this year when I learned from a press report of the existence of the National Energy Board survey of supplies, inventories, production runs and forecasts of demand, gathered on a monthly basis by the National Energy Board. I learned of that survey and called the NEB, asking for the material from that survey. I was put off. I turned to the Ministry of Energy for assistance and they sent me material broken down on a regional basis, the kind of material I felt was important for legislators of this province—and all provinces—and the federal government to have available in order to discuss the energy situation in a reasonable manner.

Those figures were for May and I asked then to receive these figures on the regular monthly basis on which they are produced. The NEB gathers them from the oil companies under waiver of the Combines Investigation Act, I might point out. I was told no, these are federal figures and are gathered from the oil companies on the understanding that they will not be made public so competitors will not have this information about forecasts and supplies and so on. I sought in vain to obtain further information after the month of May.

I kept up my quest, continuing through the summer months and through the fall, calling home heating oil distributors around this province and asking them whether they knew if they would have assured sources of supply during the winter. They knew as little as I did and certainly as little as the Minister of Energy was willing to release.

After certain months of harassing, and indeed with some help from officials of the Ministry of Energy in my quest, I finally got officials of the National Energy Board to agree to release to me and to the public figures on a monthly basis broken down by two regions, eastern Canada and western Canada, not five regions and not with forecast demands for five regions.

This is inadequate information and I told the officials at the National Energy Board with whom I discussed the matter it was not the full accounting of information I wished to have and thought the public should have. But I obeyed the request of the director of the oil policy branch of the National Energy Board that I appear in person to receive this material. Evidently it is considered so important and so subject to misinterpretation by dolts like me—stupid, uninformed public persons such as myself—that I had to turn up in person to receive presumably not only the information but a little lecture on how it should be used.

However, when I arrived at the office of the director last Friday, at the time he told me to arrive, I happened by chance to overhear, and could not have avoided overhearing a conversation going on in his inner office. He was discussing with a colleague how they were not able to put out last Friday the press release with the attached figures which they had expected and which they had told people they would be putting out.

Because I had overheard part of this conversation, I suspect the director felt under some obligation to give me something. I would have probably been exceedingly irritable had he not, and I guess he assumed that to be the case.

He gave me figures showing "Review of year to end of October; feed stock receipts; refinery production; imports; exports; inter-regional transfers; pumpable stock"—that means installations with finished and blendable products and the full line of oil products.

I was asked to keep these figures confidential because he said they were reviewing their press release and they would be putting it out this Monday past. I called on Monday and asked if the press release was ready. He said it might be Tuesday, but he expected it would be Monday. It was not ready for release on Monday. I called again on Tuesday, when I had been informed it would be released. On Tuesday they said it wasn't ready to go, but they expected it would be on Thursday. On Wednesday, my office received a telephone call to say it would be Thursday p.m., presumably after the question period. Today, this morning, I had a call from the office of the director informing me the material would be released next Tuesday.

Enough is enough, Mr. Speaker.

In any case, this material was provided to the Minister of Energy. He may or may not have already had it when I gave it to him on Tuesday last. I did not raise the matter in the House because I felt under a strange kind of gentleman's agreement, but I'm a person who is willing to stretch a gentleman's agreement only so far.

We switched information. I gave him these figures; he gave me the Telex message to which I referred earlier. The Telex, in terms of information, is self-contradictory in nature. It does not jibe with the information I was given on the previous Friday by NEB officials. The minister knows very well what these figures are because I personally gave him a copy on Tuesday. It says, "Review of year to end of October."

Hon. Mr. Welch: Does it not say end of September?

Ms. Gigantes: Not end of September.

It indicates very clearly there is a downward trend in our stocks of heating oil compared to last year's. In order to understand what that means for this province, we had to take into account the Prime Minister's statement yesterday there would be heating oil shortages of some kind in the east, whatever the east is supposed to mean. We also have to try to judge whether a downturn in the inventories, such as we see, compared to last year at the same time indicates we are going to head into a fuel oil shortage.

What we are asking for is information. Is it too much to ask in 1979 that the Canadian public and the Ontario public get the fullest of information? Is it not time the Minister of Energy said at least to the provincial government we must be provided with full information and to the fullest extent possible? Is it not time this Minister of Energy undertook those conservation programs which would make sure we would meet the objective of dropping consumption?

We are going to have to conserve. We are going to have to become energy efficient in this province, as sure as sure. If it's not this winter, it's going to be next winter or the winter after that that we'll run out of heating oil.

For years this minister and this government have done nothing to provide financial support, through government initiatives, for people in Ontario—both residents in family situations and businesses—who very much wish to undertake conservation programs. These people have demonstrated, through the Canadian Home Insulation Program, that even with a miserly $350 per family for insulation 114,000 families have undertaken home insulation over the last eight months—from April until now.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Where's your evidence of the impending crisis? That is what the debate is about.

Ms. Gigantes: We know that Ontarians will pick up programs if they're offered programs. We know they will help contribute to conservation and energy efficiency if they get some financial support. It's time now for the system of loans, on an energy payback basis, that this government has refused to bring forward. I think it's time that the Minister of Energy and the government of Ontario took this problem seriously.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Ms. Gigantes: If he wants to scream about hysteria he's whistling in the wind. You ask the Prime Minister what he was talking about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Durham West.

Mr. Ashe: When we have this kind of a motion—

Interjections.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, can you get a little order from the big fellow over there?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Durham West has the floor.

Mr. Ashe: I'm not surprised, Mr. Speaker, at the intent of what we're discussing this afternoon coming from the party and coming from the member it does. They seem to thrive on creating scare tactics as being a means to an end.

We all know the rise and fall of the socialist philosophy in Canada. We've been going through it. We've seen them try the scare tactics relating to the health-care system in Ontario—world renowned as being one of the best in the world. We now see them starting on some other course of action, namely energy.

When I read this notice, as has already been drawn to the attention of the honourable members by the Minister of Energy and Deputy Premier, the wording is just appalling—"impending crisis." There has never been any suggestion that a crisis, if and when it ever came, was around the corner, which this implies.

I will be very interested, too, when the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs reconvenes. When the member for Carleton East brings up the issue of the overabundance of our electrical energy, as do her colleagues from time to time, draw her attention to this item we're debating today: the availability of energy supplies. It's a very poor choice of words but I'm sure we'll be drawing it to the member's attention at the appropriate time.

It is amazing when these kind of tactics are used for political gain, to try to bring the province to a crisis situation. We have lots of evidence of what has happened in other jurisdictions with a similar problem.

Go back and look at the situation in California not that many months ago. The record proves that a good part of their gasoline supply and demand problem was the fact that because of the crisis situation imposed upon them or suggested to them, everyone was trying to drive on the top part of his tank. Pretty well every day of the week that was the difference between being able to cover the supply and demand scenario. People weren't driving traditionally. They drove on three quarters of their tank or seven eighths of their tank of gas; they drove on the top third and the top half. That is exactly what this particular situation is trying to imply.

We have also an indication, Mr. Speaker, of what a little knowledge is and how dangerous it is. I think it has been suggested to the member for Carleton East and she has been cautioned, not only by this government but also by the National Energy Board, that sometimes a little bit of knowledge can be damaging and dangerous. We have one more indication of that today.

For example, it was suggested in the press conference I had the pleasure to attend a little earlier on, that a million cubic centimetres of middle distillates probably was smuggled or slithered across the border. That is really the basis of our problem. If we had that million cubic centimetres here in Canada, we probably wouldn't have a problem.

Mr. Cassidy: What are you talking about, cubic centimetres?

Mr. Ashe: Pardon me, it is not cubic centimetres, it is cubic metres, I apologize. At least I err on the right side.

Really, Mr. Speaker, the number is irrelevant. The situation is the million cubic metres in question was not intended as part of the Canadian supply. It never was and never will be. It is strictly a matter of a refiner on our eastern coast using its refinery capacity to, in effect, be a jobber on behalf of another country. They processed it and it went back out on its natural course. To draw to the attention of the press and those others present that this was possibly our problem I really find very, very difficult to accept.

Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Energy and this government have been putting forth their case regularly to the government of Canada as to our concerns and desire to be involved and up to date on the information available. Speakers following me will put that on the record in due course.

Mr. Haggerty: You are getting no pipeline to Ottawa; you had it when we had Trudeau.

Mr. Ashe: Is that right?

One of the other concerns I have about this suggestion of an impending crisis is that people do have a tendency, if they get overwrought and distraught, to hoard. I use the example of the problem in supply and demand, but beyond that—and the member for Carleton East should be very concerned about this one—there is safety. She has brought up very regularly concerns about safety vis-à-vis the nuclear industry and I have some concerns with this one.

We will put people into the situation where they feel they are going to have to go out and hoard. They won't just hoard supplies of furnace oil, they will try to hoard supplies of gasoline. We know quite often inappropriate containers end up being used and this in itself is a safety hazard. I realize the argument of safety is only appropriate when it is in the case the members opposite are trying to make.

Another thing I find very difficult to understand, Mr. Speaker, is as late or as early as yesterday, depending on how you perceive it, the honourable member—

Mr. S. Smith: What about the Prime Minister's statement?

Mr. Ashe: Did the Prime Minister suggest we go out and hoard in any kind of container possible? He said there might be a shortage in eastern Canada. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, the honourable member should think about what she said yesterday and what she is saying today, in terms of our position as a responsible province, our position as a responsible government, in the supply/demand situation that may come about as a crisis at some point—and I say may—vis-à-vis our responsibilities in the western world.

Yesterday the honourable member would have us believe Ontario, let alone Canada, should put up a Berlin wall around us and not worry about the problems of our friends and neighbours. I would suggest that is really what is now on the other side of the issue here—even in drawing attention to an incorrect figure of that one million cubic metres that didn't slip unobtrusively south of the border. Again, it just depends what kind of an argument you want to make and in what direction you want to go.

I won't get into any new issues. I just want to assure the House, as has already been indicated and I am sure will be indicated from this side many times as the afternoon goes on, we do not have an impending crisis. We do not have a shortage of energy supply.

We may have a shortage of some energy supplies. I know we in this House are all interested in faith and hope. With the faith and hope of the other two parties, I hope we don't get down on our knees and beg for the crisis being looked for by the third party to help draw the attention of the public of Ontario and of Canada to their declining star.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the government is in the barrel and not the oil. To listen to the debate, there has been a note of crisis on the part of the NDP. There has been this persistent failure to acknowledge any kind of move toward the future on the part of the government. It is this kind of thing that is so typical in the way this government behaves on almost every issue of the day.

In this case, more urgently than any other, if we hang around and wait until we can define the word "crisis," however that definition may evolve in the mind of the minister or whatever, then—

Hon. Mr. Welch: This is an emergency debate.

Mr. J. Reed: Of course it is an emergency debate, because there is a time line involved in ensuring supply for the people of this province.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let's talk about it.

Mr. J. Reed: That's exactly what I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Give us the evidence.

Mr. J. Reed: I have to point out to the minister, I am talking about today because today is a day more than yesterday and the day before tomorrow and if we wait until tomorrow whenever that thing arises, we are going to be in deep trouble.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Today is urgent. Let's talk about today's emergency.

Mr. J. Reed: The minister should know it.

Mr. S. Smith: What are you going to do, set up a royal commission like you did on the declining enrolment?

Mr. J. Reed: On October 11 this year the leader of the third party asked a question about the refusal of oil companies to bid on contracts for heating oil in northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Name me a school that hasn't got a contract today. Name me one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There seems to be a considerable amount of repetition and interjection. I will agree it is an emergency debate under discussion here and I wish all members would give the member who has the floor the opportunity to speak.

Hon. Mr. Welch: A point of order: I think it is important for the public of this province to appreciate at this very moment in the Legislature of Ontario we are debating a resolution talking about the impending crisis.

Mr. Wildman: That's not a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is. It speaks to the question of relevancy in the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. What is your point of order?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The impending crisis in the availability of energy supplies. No one is questioning the need for conservation. No one is questioning the need for alternative energy supplies. Let's debate the impending crisis in the availability of energy supplies, particularly home heating oil, today. Facts. Let's have them.

Mr. J. Reed: The advice from the Minister of Energy is well taken. I would like to proceed with the debate on the impending crisis.

The question, I suppose, is what constitutes a crisis in the mind of the Minister of Energy? Is the crisis when the first thousand people run out of heating oil for their homes and can't get it? Is that it? Is that what constitutes a crisis in the mind of the minister? I would like a statement from the minister when he speaks to tell us what it is that constitutes the crisis.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You are supporting the motion.

Mr. J. Reed: Of course we are supporting the motion, because the crisis is impending if the Prime Minister's statement is worth anything. The members over there are the ones who sold him to the people of Canada, for heaven's sake. Now the Prime Minister has made a statement about heating oil shortages and now they are denying any impending crisis.

The first thing they might do is level with the people of Ontario and tell them exactly what is happening. They are big people; they are grown up and they know how to bite the bullet when the bullet has to be bitten. For pity's sake, share the truth with them.

The member for Carleton East talked about the information from the National Energy Board. Certainly it is essential that that information be brought out before the public so the public can see it and understand the reality of it, but I have to tell the minister and the member for Carleton East that information was available and has been available on a continuing basis both from the Ministry of Energy itself and from all of the various people who are concerned with petroleum supplies in this province and it led this member to believe a long, long time ago that we were headed in this direction.

I'll just go back to a couple of press releases. Here is one from October 31, 1979: "New evidence comes in almost daily that oil companies are either reluctant to or refuse to bid on institutional oil contracts this next winter. The only conclusion to be drawn is that the companies cannot guarantee supply and therefore will not bid." That was evidence. There was nothing extravagant about that claim. I am sure the minister had access to that same kind of information.

When the minister stood up on October 11 in this House and said the supply was "tight but manageable," he also knew that every oil company that had talked to him, every person concerned with the distribution of petroleum who had talked to him—if indeed he had been talking to them as regularly as I have—had told him, "Yes, it's tight but manageable, but if there is one breakdown in the delivery system we have a problem."

Hon. Mr. Welch: Maybe there will be a fire. All sorts of things could happen.

Mr. J. Reed: The minister should realize that had there been a fire last year or the year before or the year before that it would not have brought about a supply shortage, but because the domestic supply is declining, because we have all of these other factors coming in, we do have an impending crisis. Let's face it honestly. Let's understand it and let's share all of the information with the people of Ontario so they know exactly where they stand. For heaven's sake, the government to this point has done nothing but try to feed phoney placebos to the people of Ontario. They tell us—and twice this has happened in this House when I have asked questions—"Oh, don't be an alarmist. You don't want to raise an alarm." It's fine to lead people over the cliff and say, "It's all right. We don't have to be concerned about this," but the very least this ministry could do is share the real facts with the people.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Would you recognize it? You haven't shared one since you started to speak in this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. J. Reed: I want the minister to look back at his own Ontario Energy Review, look at the graphs there and tell us there is no impending crisis. I want him to look at his own facts, to look at his own statistics and then tell us whether he thinks there is a crisis or whether there isn't. Next February or March when we are dealing with some of these shortages, then he can stand up and tell us how correct he was.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does anyone else wish to speak?

Mr. Laughren: I'm on my feet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Laughren: That hurts, Mr. Speaker, when you don't know I'm on my feet.

We are indeed here, as the Minister of Energy interjected a couple of times, to debate the problem of an imminent shortage of supply—

[4:30]

Hon. Mr. Welch: An impending crisis.

Mr. Laughren:—an impending crisis of a shortage of heating fuel and gasoline. But I would put to the minister that the ramifications go beyond an immediate shortage. It's hard for me to believe that we in this country are debating the supply of gasoline and heating fuel to drive our cars and heat our homes. I find it hard to believe that we are even engaging in this kind of debate in this country because we are a people who cope with the cold climate by heating our homes with fuel oil and cope with the vast distances by driving our cars. I have a very, very strong sense and I don't think the minister has, that we fuel our economy by depending on people to make major commitments to large capital investments in this country based on the assumption there's going to be a supply of things like energy in the years to come.

The Minister of Energy has not seemed to come to grips with the psychological importance of fuel supply to the health of the economy of Ontario in the years to come. As an Ontarian and as a Canadian I have every right, as do all the people, to be very angry with the federal government, both the one now in Ottawa and the one that preceded it, because they have played the role of groveling messenger acting as go-between for the people of Canada and the oil companies. We could hardly be blamed if, as a people, we resorted to that old practice of shooting the messenger who brings bad news.

The Canadian people have acquiesced too much, in my view, as the oil companies led us by the nose through phoney shortages, phoney surpluses and manipulated oil prices. That's what they have done to us and Ontario, Canada's largest oil- and gas-consuming province, has failed in so many ways that I believe history will look back on us and say we were victims who didn't even put up a fight. That's how history will judge us when they talk about energy in the 20th century.

This government has participated in a conspiracy of silence with the federal government over the availability of supply. That's what it has done and that's why we are having this debate this afternoon. The minister's blind allegiance to the federal government is a testimony to his getting into the same kind of trap as the federal government; they are more concerned about their own petty fortunes than they are about the future of supplies of oil and gas in this country. This government sits by benignly and watches the federal government proceed to put the machinery in motion to dismantle the only safeguard we have against price and supply manipulations by the multinational oil companies. The minister sits there and watches it all happen.

This government is willing to sit there, make all the proper noises about protecting Ontario and, at the same time, do nothing to prevent the sale of Petrocan, absolutely nothing. Petrocan should be expanded but the government is sitting by and watching as it is about to be dismantled.

It's fine to have all the rhetoric in place. That's very nice. It makes this government heroes in the eyes of some Ontario citizens. But when it comes time to challenge the federal government about its programs, this government sits by and does absolutely nothing. I don't believe I am a unique Canadian when I say my national integrity is as important to me as my pocketbook. That's how I feel about the dismantling of Petrocan and what it means in the long term to the supply and pricing of oil and gas in this country.

I believe I'm a typical Canadian when I say I don't want to be whipsawed between oil companies more interested in profits and a federal government more interested in revenues. That's all. The provincial government has made all the right noises but has never insisted on anything that would protect the Ontario consumer. They have made the noises but acquiesced when the federal government indicated they were going to proceed anyway.

It's simply outrageous for the Minister of Energy to sit there and say nothing in public while the Prime Minister talks about selling more oil and gas to the US and in the next breath talks about an impending shortage; the possibility of a supply shortage.

The minister should understand this is the industrial heartland of Canada. The spectre of shortages of home heating fuel or of oil and gas will exacerbate a problem already there, namely, the deindustrialization of the Ontario economy. That is something that will be exacerbated even by the psychology of the possibility of the shortage of supply in the years to come.

We in Ontario do not have to sit idly by as our auto industry, for example, goes into a tailspin—not because Canadians are not buying automobiles but because we are producing large automobiles here and are unable to sell them in the American market while we import small automobiles produced in America. There is something wrong with that kind of system. How long is it going to be, even though the sale of big cars is up in Canada this year, before that comes home to roost here and Canadians stop buying the big cars and start buying smaller cars as the Americans have done?

This will mean two things. It will mean, first of all, we will have an even more difficult time producing the big cars here and we will import more of the small cars produced in the United States and elsewhere in the world. That's unacceptable to us. The minister sits there and does absolutely nothing about it. I don't believe we have to take that. We should not have to take that. And it is no small matter of concern.

I am glad the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) is scheduled to speak later. I hope he will talk about that. I hope he will say what it means to the Ontario economy to even have talk of shortages of home heating fuel and gasoline in this province. That is a very serious concern. I wonder if the Minister of Industry and Tourism really understands it, because there is a very direct relationship. We are talking about the health of the Ontario economy, not just in heating homes, but in keeping going the machinery that makes the whole thing go around.

The minister insists he is relying on the figures provided by Ottawa, by the National Energy Board. We know where they get their information. We have seen the information they have given us in the past. To say the least, in years gone by it has been unreliable. I will tell you something, Mr. Speaker. As long as the minister has only the National Energy Board and the major oil companies, foreign controlled and owned, then he has no alternative. That is a pretty sad commentary, isn't it?

If the minister thinks without an expanded Petrocan he is ever going to have a handle on the proper statistics, he is dead wrong. That is one of the major reasons why Petrocan must be retained in the public sector and why it must be expanded, not dismantled. He doesn't even seem to understand that.

He seems to think the National Energy Board will provide him the figures and he will just accept them, even given the fact of where the National Energy Board gets its figures.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, I sat here and heard the Minister of Energy interject a couple of times when my colleague from Carleton East was speaking. He said a couple of times, "We are not here to talk about conservation; we are here to talk about an impending crisis."

Hon. Mr. Welch: I said there was no argument. Speak to the resolution.

Mr. Laughren: That show is the kind of view the Minister of Energy has about the problem. He sees it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We agreed on that.

Mr. Laughren: No, no. The Minister of Energy said, and I roughly quote, there is no imminent danger of a shortage. He said in the current heating season—he uses those phrases—there is no imminent danger of a shortage, as though we were just witnessing a blip on the scope. Not to worry, says the Minister of Energy.

I want to tell him, if he says that, he compounds that attitude with no commitment to energy conservation in this province. When he combines those two, a failure to understand that it is a long-run problem and, secondly, no commitment to conservation, he really does exaggerate the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by saying there is a credibility gap now between the federal government and the Canadian people. And the Minister of Energy in Ontario is adding to that credibility gap.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister of Canada stated in the House of Commons, and I'm quoting, that "there may be," and I underline "may be," "limited shortages this winter in Canada's home heating oil."

I would like to advise the House of our perception of the situation and what steps Ontario has taken, and is taking, with respect to crude oil and petroleum product supplies.

Over the past 10 days or so I have met with almost all the chief executive officers of the major oil companies. In all cases I have been assured that, while supplies are tight and there is no room for complacency, Canada should be able to meet its demand for heating oil this winter.

The only caveats, which are usual—and the member for Halton-Burlington, of course, makes reference to them—are with respect to statements such as that would be conditional on there being no unusual circumstances that would alter the whole situation dealing with any breakdown of refinery operations, or problem with respect to crude oil production and other international situations to which he has made reference. I think it would be a normal list of caveats to add to a situation such as that.

Similarly, my staff have been keeping in day-to-day contact with the petroleum industry, with officials of the National Energy Board in Ottawa and with the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I have no basis for believing, on this information, that the supply situation for fuel oil has deteriorated to the extent implied by the Prime Minister of Canada yesterday. Clearly, I've been assured that the supply of home heating oil in Ontario for this winter is adequate to meet normal demands.

While this is encouraging, I think all members would agree with me that should Atlantic Canada have home heating oil problems this winter, Ontario should do what it can to relieve the burden and share in the solution of that problem.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I believe it's important at this time, as members have emphasized, to review with you some of the actions taken by the Ministry of Energy on the question of petroleum products supply since just the beginning of this year.

As has been pointed out, the ministry receives on a monthly basis documentation from the National Energy Board covering the crude oil and petroleum products supply and demand situation on a regional basis for all of Canada. The text is a composite of oil-industry data combined with an analysis by the board. Historically, this information has proven to be a reasonably reliable indicator of events.

During the first quarter of 1979 there was some concern expressed over the petroleum supply situation. Major factors at that time were the Iranian upset and some operational problems among the refiners in Eastern Canada. On May 10, my predecessor, the member for Leeds (Mr. Auld), advised this assembly that prospects for both motor gasoline and home heating oil were good this year. He further indicated that the ministry was monitoring supplies of heating oil for the 1979-80 heating season and that with reasonable care there should be no need for allocation or rationing.

During that time there were numerous occasions when various representatives of the ministry, including myself, contacted the federal government and the petroleum industry to seek clarification of developments and to request that certain actions be taken.

In the interests of time, may I quickly outline only a few of the more significant events? I feel this particular information should be on the record at this time.

On June 20, we requested assurance from the petroleum industry that everything possible was being done to ensure that home heating oil supplies would be adequate for the 1979-80 heating season. At that time we stressed the urgent need for formation of an industry-government committee similar to the technical advisory committee—popularly referred to as TAC—established at the time of the 1973-74 oil supply problem.

On July 20, a month later, recognizing conflicting information at that time—which was available to the public—we asked the NEB to clarify the data being obtained from the industry and again repeated the urgent need for TAC and assurance with regard to home heating oil supplies. On July 27, at the request of Ontario, a federal-provincial staff meeting was held with the NEB to review the latest information.

Ontario tabled the following requests at that meeting: Immediate formation of the technical advisory committee or its equivalent; second, revision of federal crude oil compensation programs—very, very important, particularly at this time; immediate cessation of light and medium crude oil exports; establishment of regular meetings until the supply problem was relieved; and the establishment of a formal communication process to make the public aware of developments.

An assessment of the information at that time led to a conclusion that the supply situation could most accurately be described as tight, but manageable. On August 9 a formal request was made to the federal government to cease all further exports of light and medium crude oil to the United States, or at least have these exports continued on a swap arrangement with an equal volume of comparable quality crude oil being made available to eastern Canada.

On August 24 my ministry advised the National Energy Board it was not convinced of the accuracy of some of the data being provided by way of the board's analysis and again stressed the need for industry-government contact through the technical advisory committee.

On August 29, I advised the federal minister of four main areas of concern we felt must be dealt with before Canada could be considered in a reasonable state of preparedness in the case of a supply emergency. These are the administration of the Energy Supplies

Allocation Board programs; the distribution and availability of heating oils; motor gasoline rationing; and operational readiness in case of an emergency.

On October 3 federal-provincial officials again met with the National Energy Board to receive a revised outlook and to debate any further action that might be required. We continued, as a province, to express concern over the quality and accuracy of the information being provided and restated the request of July 27.

On October 18 we again expressed serious concern to the Honourable Ramon Hnatyshyn with regard to the potential for misunderstanding and undue concern by the public as a result of speculation and misinterpretation of information being made public. As an example I cited two red headlines in the Toronto Star of October 16. One in the two-star edition read, "Winter Outlook Bleak For Heating Oil Supplies." It was followed by the four-star edition two hours later which read, "Oil Firms Confident There Is Enough Heating Oil." So the need for reliable and current information for the public at large was again stressed. Little wonder the public would be somewhat confused with respect to this situation.

On October 23, at the urging of the Minister of Energy for Ontario, the Council of Provincial Energy Ministers at their meeting in Calgary unanimously agreed to an expression of concern and Telexed the federal minister outlining the need for reliable and public petroleum products supply-demand information, revision of the federal crude oil compensation program and the immediate establishment of a group similar to the technical advisory committee. The council also established a task force to examine security of supply for petroleum products to eastern Canada.

On November 1 federal-provincial officials again met with the National Energy Board to discuss the most recent supply-demand information. It was agreed the supply situation could still be described as tight, but manageable. However, it was recognized the overall situation had not improved as was expected.

On November 5 Mr. Hnatyshyn was again advised of Ontario's concern with regard to the availability of reliable public information. In addition, the urgent requirements for some evidence of the federal government's preparedness in the event of an emergency was again stressed.

I report to this House that next Wednesday, December 12, my deputy minister and other senior staff will be meeting with federal officials to review the latest National Energy Board supply report for the period up to November 10, 1979, a copy of which I have not yet had as part of that media release and to which I made some reference in the preliminary remarks prior to the Speaker ruling on this debate.

In addition, I have asked my deputy to propose to the federal minister that the agenda for that meeting also include the need for the immediate establishment of a technical advisory committee composed of representatives of the petroleum industry, the federal government and the provinces, because only in this way do we believe we can get an accurate appreciation of the inventory picture and the supply outlook—

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable minister's time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —and, secondly, changes to the federal government's oil compensation program.

I should be able to give to the House a fairly full report on the motor gasoline and fuel oil supply situation following next week's meeting in Ottawa and I will be pleased to do that.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise to follow one of the most astonishing speeches I have heard in the short time I have been in this House. At the same moment the Minister of Energy was telling us we had no choice but to have confidence in the National Energy Board data, at the same moment he was telling us that he could state confidently everything was tight but manageable, he was also expressing very serious concern about the quality of the National Energy Board's data; he was expressing very serious doubt about whether we could depend on that data; he was expressing the opinion there might not be a sufficient state of readiness in the event of emergency. And he was doing all that privately, while this House was kept completely ignorant of the doubts which he and his ministry had about these particular pieces of information and the memos going back and forth between Toronto and Ottawa at the time.

If there was ever a clear example of the need for open government—and, I would say, in all seriousness, a need for new government which would be genuinely open—this has to be it.

What did he have against the members of the Legislature and the public, especially when he is quick to criticize the Toronto Star and others for giving what he considers faulty information? Why did he not take us into his confidence and tell us that he was concerned about the quality of data being provided by the National Energy Board? Why could he not tell us the doubts he harboured?

Furthermore, he tells us today the oil companies tell him one thing and the Prime Minister of Canada says another and he has no particular reason to believe the Prime Minister of Canada over the oil companies. That's a very interesting statement concerning the credibility of the Prime Minister of Canada.

It makes one wonder how much research the minister's leader did into the credibility of the present Premier when he went up and down Ontario inviting Ontarians to elect that man as Prime Minister. He did it without even knowing the energy policy of the man who is now Prime Minister of Canada. It makes one wonder why, after he did find out what the energy policy was and after he did find out how damaging it was to Ontario and after he did begin to harbour doubts about the federal policy concerning possible shortages, he still had the true blue Toryism in his veins to stand up at the same fund-raising dinner as the Prime Minister of Canada and introduce him as the person, presumably, still worthy of the support of Ontarians. He should go up and down this province to make sure that every federal Conservative elected from Ontario will be defeated next time, because Ontario still counts for something in Confederation.

Let's come back to this. Here we have a situation where the minister does not believe the National Energy Board's figures and yet continues to spout them here in the House as something about which we should all be confident. The secrecy of this government, which I have repeatedly pointed out, surely has reached some new record level in this regard.

Look at what's happened since the election of Mr. Clark, Mr. Speaker. Petrocan was making arrangements with Mexico which might well have supplied the extra oil we needed. But instead of giving the proposal the government's blessing, they had to spend all their time trying to convince the government they had a right to exist, trying to convince themselves and others of the possible impact of some of the hare-brained schemes put forward by the federal leader of the Conservative Party, the man we must unfortunately tolerate for a little while longer as Prime Minister of the country.

It's all very well for the oil companies to tell us everything is tight, but manageable; to calm down, everything is fine. But they're out there on the stock market. There are reports of the oil companies buying oil on the stock market at prices as high as $50 a barrel.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Not for Canada.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister says not for Canada. I hope the minister will walk into this House with proof tomorrow that it's not for Canada, because that's not what the reports indicate.

Let me make it clear, furthermore, the tight but manageable statement was made before the cutoff of supplies from Iran. Furthermore, the minister knows we're in agreement with the United States whereby we have to make up certain shortfalls, if necessary, just as they would have to make it up should we have been boycotted in some way. He knows very well all these things have happened since the statement "tight, but manageable." Now he says there's no impending crisis today.

It's like declining enrolment. Until the schools were empty they couldn't bother to foresee that for every kid born and for every year that passed, the chances were the kid would get a year older. They couldn't figure that out until the schools were empty. Then they set up a royal commission to tell us we had declining enrolment. They can't play those games now. It won't be good enough to set up a royal commission when people are without heating oil. They know they've done nothing. Their federal government has been stupid and they've been complacent.

Today there are greenhouse operators in Ontario not more than several feet from natural gaslines and they can't get that natural gas because of the stupidity of the technical monopoly setup whereby you can't gain access unless you're in a particular territory or within a particular boundary. What has the government done to gain access to natural gas for the small communities? What have they done to make sure they wouldn't be swamped with requests and they would have the manpower—given the unemployment we have, heaven knows we have enough people—and the furnaces and the burners to get people on to natural gas since we have enough of that apparently? We have so much they're going to export the cheapest natural gas and leave us with the expensive stuff down the road, I suspect.

What has the government done to substitute for oil, apart from standing around telling Hydro to put ads on television saying, "Isn't it great we have electricity when we might not have oil?" We know electricity is only partially substitutable, and the minister should know that. That's not going to solve our problem. What about a fuel-alcohol industry for Ontario? What about using the resources of this province properly?

Instead of that we've had a government fatigued from 36 years in office, now led by an incompetent federal leader and a complacent provincial leader, facing the technical and difficult problems of the 1980s with the shopworn attitudes of the 1950s and 1960s. Sure, the Premier and the Minister of Energy like to give the public the view that everything is fine, everything is under control, that there's no need for any concern about any problem, it's all allegedly under control. A steady hand at the wheel is the impression the Premier likes to give. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, it's steady because rigor mortis has set in, and the ship is heading for icebergs.

When we should have been encouraging Petrocan to arrange a deal with Mexico and a sure supply, we were busy threatening Petrocan's very existence. When we should have been producing fuel alcohol we were busy pooh-pooing those notions and putting billions more into electricity when we already had more than enough electricity for the foreseeable future, no matter if people plugged in their heaters, as the Globe and Mail is fond of saying.

We know perfectly well that when we should have been converting to natural gas, expanding natural gas lines into various communities and across various boundaries within our province, we were sitting on our hands paying extra for natural gas so more could be found in Alberta. Now we're going to let Alberta export the natural gas found as a consequence for our paying for it when that money should be used to expand the natural gas access into every part of Ontario where even remotely feasible.

What we're left with now, Mr. Speaker, is a situation where suddenly supply has become a matter of some interest to the minister. Suddenly he is ready to admit to us he has no confidence in the figures from the federal scene. Suddenly he is prepared to say, in the middle of a debate at five o'clock today, that his Prime Minister is not to be believed when his Prime Minister's view is in conflict with the minister's friends in the oil companies. Why didn't he have that view of the Prime Minister when he sold him to the people of Ontario?

I will tell him this: The time is coming when the people of Ontario will send a message to Joe Clark as to how we like being treated this way, as to how we like having the Alberta tail wag the Canadian dog, as to how we like to be given information which is not accurate and up to date, as to how we like to be left at the mercy of these oil companies when we should have been in a position where we would have access to cheap natural gas. We will send a message to Joe Clark. The only message he will understand is not one that will be whispered in his ear by his friend the Premier at their next fundraising dinner; it will be when Conservatives are defeated throughout the length and breadth of Ontario and replaced by Liberals and then he might start to listen to the province of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there are two absolutely incredible aspects to this debate. We have had the Minister of Energy get up in his place in this House and say that the Prime Minister of the country, his kissing cousin, Joe Clark, made a speech in the House in which he was wrong. He came to the wrong conclusion. Indeed, he came to the wrong conclusion, so our minister concludes, on the basis of information from sources he now confesses he has doubted all along the way.

What sort of posturing is this? How can the minister get up and say the Prime Minister is absolutely wrong and then quote sources about which he himself is doubtful? It is absolutely ludicrous. I thought this minister was one of the more astute, the more politically sophisticated, but he has a capacity to be suckered to an extent that I wouldn't have believed of virtually any member in the cabinet. He now believes the information which he doubts and, on the basis of that, he gets up in his place in this House and says the Prime Minister is wrong. That is one incredible thing. The other one is even more incredible.

This minister doesn't know what the situation is. That is the problem. He has constantly told us down through the months, and particularly down through the last few weeks, that on the best information he has been able to get from the oil companies, who have conned and misled the public when it served their purpose all down through the years, and on the basis of information from the National Energy Board, which—there has been plenty of experience—has been inadequate and often wrong, there is nothing to be worrying about. He browbeats his Prime Minister.

Is this Minister of Energy in effect saying that Joe Clark is an alarmist? After all his caution to us about being alarmist because we face the realities and the facts is he, in effect, saying that Joe Clark is an alarmist? The minister had better have a good night's sleep. He is not informed. The fact is he doesn't have the information. What makes it even more incredible is where he got any information he has. He got it from the member for Carleton East. She went over to him last Tuesday and asked for a copy of a Telex he had and the minister said, "I'll give you this Telex if you give me the information you got from the NEB."

Imagine the Minister of Energy from the province of Ontario, representing one-third of this nation, asking for basic information from the member for Carleton East, who went up there and dug it out. If she hadn't dug it out, he wouldn't have it even now.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of principle, the honourable member came across the floor to me and wanted to see the Telex I had, in which a reference was made to a media release to which would be attached NEB information as of the end of October. I told her I did not have that information. I disclosed to the House earlier today that the information which she thought was to the end of October was really to the end of September. It was not end of October information at all.

It is very unfair for the member for York South to suggest what he is suggesting. The honourable member did not have the information she said she had as referred to in the press release. No wonder I was surprised that she had information referred to in the press release. I would agree with the member for York South if that was how I would get the information. That was not the information that she had.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, on that point: I can't let it pass without asking the minister to read from the information which I gave him. What does it say at the top of that page?

Hon. Mr. Welch: "The National Energy Board has confirmed to me this afternoon that it gave Evelyn Gigantes September, not October, data."

Ms. Gigantes: What does it say?

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. May I read to you here, "Review of year to end of October"? If the minister is getting up and telling us he has been informed the NEB is not only incapable of getting the information, but is incompetent and types wrongly, okay. But that is the information on which he is reporting to this House and saying there is no impending crisis. He can't have it both ways.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I haven't got the end of October.

Mr. Renwick: Do you mean you are sitting there and you have nothing since the end of September to talk about?

Mr. Cassidy: And you are saying we are okay? That's irresponsible.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The report is monthly and you know that.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is doubtful about what the NEB has done, but the minister has either been unwilling or unable to get the information he should have and which the people in this province are entitled to. He hasn't been doing his job.

The member for Carleton East went up and got information which the minister should have had and wouldn't have had if she hadn't delivered it to him there. So don't blame—

Hon. Mr. Welch: The October information is late.

Mr. MacDonald: I can understand why he is getting excited at this point. He is so totally vulnerable he is beginning to look a little bit silly.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is absolute nonsense. I like objective and fair comment and a man of the member's experience should know better than to be contributing this drivel to the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: What is objective and fair comment?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member should know that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister was rather cute a few moments ago. He is trying to discredit the information which the honourable member went up and got from the NEB with her own hands.

Hon. Mr. Welch: As a matter of fact—

Mr. MacDonald: Just listen for a moment. Just listen to the argument. He is trying to discredit the information when he knows, because he has been told and he can't deny that it isn't totally correct, that the NEB has delayed releasing this information for 11 days. It has passed five deadlines and the information Joe Clark gave in the House yesterday to indicate there was an impending crisis was the basis of a release which was going to be given out today. They postponed it once again until next Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is that a fact?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it is a fact. That is a fact.

Mr. Gigantes: Now the minister tells us it will be out tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I guess when it arrives.

Mr. MacDonald: It is going to be next Tuesday now.

You see, Mr. Speaker, the situation is this. The National Energy Board doesn't know exactly what the situation is. The minister has sat there and done nothing in terms of getting after the federal authority which he hopes—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I gave the member a whole list of things we have done.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister gave me a whole list but he has done nothing effective in terms of getting the facts. If the National Energy Board can't get him the facts, then he shouldn't be so reliant on his kissing cousins in the oil companies as well as on his kissing cousins politically. He shouldn't accept the information. Let him establish his own agency if he can't trust anybody else's agency.

Let me deal specifically with the point on which the honourable minister has intervened a number of times. He says there is no impending crisis. He dismisses his Prime Minister in Ottawa. He says there is no impending crisis. Let's speak to it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That's right.

Mr. MacDonald: He says, for example, that we have a surplus of electrical energy. True, we have. Everybody knows it. He says we have plenty of coal in this country. True. Alberta is totally underlaid with coal, but we have no cars to bring the coal down here. We have no program to mine it to meet our needs. So it isn't here.

He says we have plenty of natural gas. True, but our pipelines are totally filled in meeting the requirements that are already commissioned. In other words, we may have plenty of electricity, we may have plenty of coal, we may have plenty of natural gas, but they can't be transferred to take the place of oil except to a very minor degree. Therefore, we have an impending crisis because very close to 50 per cent of the energy requirements of Ontario, at present, are for oil. It can't be replaced from these other sources which are not available.

That's why there is a crisis, Mr. Speaker. Let the minister open his eyes, get his head out of the sand. If I may make another analogy, he should not lead the people of the province up to the cliff so they have to fall over the cliff into a crisis before they realize it exists. That is the minister's problem and he himself has confessed the validity of our querying all of the information he doesn't have but is willing to accept periodically and then when we don't accept it, he cries that we are alarmists.

Mr. Speaker, we join Joe Clark as an alarmist to say to this minister and the people of this province and the people of this country that we are facing an impending crisis. We are facing an impending crisis and that's why we needed this debate this afternoon to underline it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it is nice to see that the speeches for the opposition parties haven't changed in three years. That's too much, even though the situation with respect to a variety of aspects of energy policy has continued to advance. I thought I might spend some time today reminding the House of the leadership role this province has taken over the years with respect to the development of a natural gas and oil pipeline system in the country, going back to the days of Mr. Frost.

I thought I might take the time of the House today to talk about the leadership role this government and this province has taken in the development in this country of a nuclear industry which I still firmly believe will be one of the strongest assets of this country in the next 25 to 50 years.

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy intervened a few moments ago and said the point of the debate on the resolution this afternoon is an impending crisis. I suggest all of this historical background is irrelevant and out of order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect to my honourable and long-serving colleague the member for York South, I think it is quite relevant inasmuch as this government has consistently adopted a leadership role in this country in the development of energy systems and resources from one end of the country to the other.

I thought I might take some time to talk about Syncrude and the role this province played in making sure the Syncrude project carried on and the technology was not put on the shelf for decades. I thought I might talk about the Sarnia-to-Montreal pipeline and the supportive role this province and this government took with that. But instead, I thought I would talk about a subject completely glossed over by the members opposite today. It is one which, when they talk about an impending crisis, when they talk about energy supplies of the future, is as important to the future of this country as any of the activities of my colleague, the member for Lincoln, with respect to ensuring supply and that has to do with the question of conservation.

I had the honour to occupy the chair of Minister of Energy for two years. When I was minister this was an area to which I devoted a great deal of attention and about which I was very proud. It discourages me no little bit, notwithstanding the collective efforts of both federal and provincial governments of both stripes, Liberal and Conservative—and NDP in certain provinces—to find out from officials of the Ministry of Energy that last year we returned to about a four per cent increase in the use of gasoline as opposed to around a two per cent figure the year before, which is of course a more desirable figure.

It is particularly discouraging not only in the light of all of the information transmitted to people but also in the light of the fact that more and more of the vehicles on the roads today are meeting the standards established by the previous federal government for 1980 and subsequently for 1985. I would remind members again, we completely supported and urged on them.

Mr. Speaker, it is even more discouraging when one looks at the increase in gasoline usage in the west, which I am now told is now running at something like eight or nine per cent. Clearly we have not yet broken our fascination with the motor car and perhaps even more will have to be done in terms of the revision of standards with respect to the production of automobiles.

I think it is worthwhile reminding ourselves though, that we have made advances. I would point with pride to the building code changes which were given effect—what is it now, about four years ago?—when the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) was the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

I am pleased to see that the present minister and his staff are discussing with the producing provinces, particularly Alberta, the prospect of financial incentives to the gas distributors to further expand their networks. I am pleased to hear, too, that the rate of conversion from oil to natural gas in the province is running at three times its historical rate, which is encouraging for the future.

I am pleased to be told that apparently the rate of utilization of fuel oil has been declining. This is due in part to just the simple matter of turning down the thermostat and due also in part to insulation which has been assisted in no small measure by the CHIP program established by the previous federal government—and let's give them their due.

I am also pleased to see how well the energy bus has been used in the province since it was first put on the road in 1974. It's a program which has now been adopted right across the country and, to no one's great surprise who had anything to do with it, we learn that countries such as Japan and other countries in the Middle East have now made application—I guess that is the way to put it—to adapt the energy bus to their countries. Why? Because of examples such as the one of McMaster University, and I think this is one that bears some examination.

In four years, from 1974 to 1977, they invested $152,000 at McMaster University in energy conservation. They have realized a return of $2.25 million on that investment; clearly an example for everyone to follow. They have decreased their use of electricity by 27.8 per cent, their use of steam by 49 per cent, their use of chilled water by 58 per cent—and the list goes on. Apparently, the cumulative savings to the end of 1978 now total in excess of $3.65 million.

Today, sir, we are debating the security of energy supplies and to a much greater extent than has been acknowledged in this debate today. That is going to depend on individual actions, on individual initiatives, with the support of government which has been the case over the last five years, actions which will emulate in spirit the commitment of McMaster University.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Energy has taken the view that if we are to be credible to the public—both business and the municipalities—we, too, must show by example what can be done. So to assist industries to identify the potential savings possible through careful energy management, the ministry, with the co-operation of Mohawk College, did develop the energy bus. That has clearly shown itself to be of great value to a great many industries.

It has been estimated that the typical municipality of 70,000 people would spend on average about $1 million a year, or about 10 per cent of the municipality's property tax revenue. The estimates of the Ministry of Energy officials—and I think these are reliable estimates—are that fully $100,000, or 10 per cent of that million dollar a year expenditure on energy, could be saved.

It's interesting to note that last year the ministry initiated a program in Toronto which they called the downtown energy conservation program. Twenty nine corporations which own, occupy or manage 45 buildings in the downtown area of Toronto were brought together by the ministry and Ontario Hydro to see what could be done to reduce their energy consumption. The first results, Mr. Speaker, are nothing less than spectacular. Seventeen companies, representing 26 buildings, have shown an annual drop in energy consumption of approximately 22 per cent. That 22 per cent, the honourable member will be interested to know, represents a yearly saving of $2.5 million, enough to heat 7,500 homes for a year.

It interests me even more to find out that in 1978 the peak load demand on Toronto Hydro actually dropped for the first time in 67 years, barring the 25-cycle changeover which took place in the late 1940s and 1950s and a change in the boundaries of the service area.

With all of the concern being expressed on all sides, I think it behooves us to remind ourselves and to remind our constituents in all of our actions of what we, ourselves, can do to help ourselves. That as much as anything this government has done and will do with respect to energy supplies and distribution systems, will be a major factor in the security of this province in the future.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and a contribution to a debate which I perceive to be the most important part of the present energy debate. The security of supply is the matter about which my constituents in rural, small-town, eastern Ontario are most concerned.

I want to speak today as a member from a far-eastern Ontario constituency, where we do have a rather special situation vis-à-vis those of the rest of the province who reside in the central and southwestern part of the province. In communities like Pembroke and Deep River and Cobden and Renfrew we are much more dependent upon Montreal refineries and, as a result of that, offshore petroleum resources.

I have this afternoon contacted a number of the fuel oil distributors in my constituency of Renfrew North and I have been told by some, not all, that yes, there is a clear indication from some of their suppliers in Montreal that it will be a very difficult winter and they have been encouraged not to take on very much additional new contract work and very little guarantee can be offered to them, given the precarious situation of the Iranian and Venezuelan supply line. That is extremely important.

I rose this afternoon on a supplementary question to inquire of the Minister of Energy as to exactly what he had done to initiate special measures to protect the far-eastern part of this province against the special jeopardy in which it finds itself. He mumbled about a task force that had met once to consider possible alternatives, should those eastern supply lines be cut.

That is not good enough. I want to hear from this Minister of Energy, if not today, certainly tomorrow or at the very earliest opportunity, what special initiatives, what special contingencies he has in place to make petroleum products available to those people whose dependence on the Montreal refinery, and therefore the offshore resources, is much more jeopardized than others.

I want to say something else about rural eastern Ontario, where we do not have the kinds of options for substitution others in this province have. My friend from Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) brought to my attention a matter I think is particularly germane to this afternoon. We are told by the minister, his deputy and the Premier and lots of others, "We have all this marvellous electricity which is certainly available."

As my friend from Ottawa East reminded me, this summer we had an indication from the Porter commission that the national capital region in particular, but the eastern Ontario region in general, is in a very serious situation with respect to the next few years in so far as transmission of the available electrical capacity is concerned. We have it, but for many in eastern Ontario the immediate future with respect to brownouts and interrupted supply is very dicey. I must say it is typical and not altogether surprising that the far-eastern region finds itself again so disadvantaged by a government which continues to express much less than the kind of interest to which I believe the people of that region are entitled.

Mr. Speaker, in communities like Pembroke we have the option of a natural gas alternative. I am one of those currently considering substituting my petroleum source for home heating with natural gas. I have seen nothing from this government about the kinds of options, the sort of decision-making process I should undertake in that connection.

As a member of the energy committee these past few months, if that's the condition I find myself in, what must be the attitude and position of the—

Ms. Gigantes: The hydro committee.

Mr. Conway: The hydro committee, my friend from Carleton East reminds me. How must the other consumers in eastern Ontario, who are considering these kind of options, find themselves?

My leader is absolutely correct when he suggests there has been a striking want of leadership from this government of this vital matter of public policy. Yes, we have heard and applaud the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Taylor), when he says 800,000 rural hydro consumers are being ripped off by the provincial utility. I agree with my friend from North Port. I agree with him wholeheartedly. Who better than he to know of the condition of the provincial utility?

It is said by the honourable members opposite, "We have this marvellous excess capacity in the provincial utility and why not tell your good folks in places like Renfrew North to convert?" To begin with, Hydro has told us we had better go easy for the next few years in the eastern region because our present transmission facilities are stretched to their absolute limit and brown-outs may be the order of the day in the next few years.

I bring a journal that I know honourable members read religiously, the Cobden Sun, which has on the front page of its November 21 edition a story which is important to put on the public record here. The municipal utility in the little rural village of Beachburg is imposing a 20 per cent increase in the hydro rates. That, they are told by Hydro, is only just the beginning.

I want to ask the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) and others across the way, what specific kind of incentives are they prepared to offer people in eastern Ontario faced with few or no alternatives? In so far as hydro is concerned they either are not guaranteed a security of supply because of the wretched planning on the transmission policy, or they're faced with these kinds of incredible prohibitive increases which make the hydro resource very, very unattractive.

What has the minister done about making natural gas more available? What has he done about making the forest industries of that part of the province more attractive in terms of fuel utilization to people like my parents, who are a good example, living in the small rural community of Barry's Bay, the homestead of my good friend from Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski)? They are forced with this present situation to consider their options, believing the right honourable member for Yellowhead, when he says yesterday that, "Yes, eastern Canadians might very well anticipate a shortage over the course of the next few months, at least on a partial basis."

There they sit in rural eastern Ontario with no natural gas any closer than Pembroke, 55 miles away and with really only two options: return to the earlier days of wood burning or go to a hydro-electric alternative. But this government has done nothing about undertaking a measure of education with respect to that population who are very, very concerned about the condition in which they find themselves.

The member for Brock (Mr. Welch) stands here today and talks about what this government has done. I, like the member for York South, had the pleasure of being at a press conference he called two months ago to announce the second part of the Davis-Welch Ontario energy self-sufficiency program. I watched that distinguished 16-year veteran push forward this trumped-up document of $30 billion of public expenditure that was going to solve the problems and heard him announce that in terms of this government's commitment, there was next to nothing.

Today we have in the Toronto Star an announcement from Jim Hawkes, MP for Calgary West. "Next week's federal budget will contain subsidies to help Canadians switch to alternative sources." That is more than I've heard from the member for Brock. It's a heck of a lot more than I've heard from my friend from Brampton.

I just remind honourable members of a film made about 15 months ago by the NFB on the honourable Premier. Do you remember that session when they were preparing the 1978 budget, Mr. Speaker? I remember it well because I, along with the members for Brock and Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) had to review the thing. I can well remember the Premier sitting back in his chair when the question of energy initiatives was being talked about and he very casually, very laughingly, said that his mother or his wife had suggested it might not be a bad idea to introduce a little tax incentive for storm doors and windows. Ha, ha, ha.

That was in 1978. That's the complacency, that's the abdication of responsibility which honourable members opposite in the treasury bench have shown. This is the position in which they have placed this province as a result of their inaction.

I say in conclusion that I found it very interesting to hear the member for Brock and the Minister of Energy say this afternoon when he worked out the chronology from August through October and November that, yes, he had doubts on various dates. On August 24 he wasn't convinced, as he said, by the National Energy Board data; on October 3, he left the impression he had expressed a grave concern in a memo to the NEB. Finally he stood up in this House as late as October 12 to tell honourable members, "I am satisfied on the basis of the information I have that we are in a satisfactory position."

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time is up. Do we have another speaker?

Mr. Conway: I think there is a contradiction and an indictment in all of that from which the minister is not easily going to escape.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it should be very clear that it is the responsibility of this government and the Ministry of Energy to intercede on behalf of the people in Ontario who need home heating oil. They can't just pass the buck, saying it's up to the multinational oil companies or the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or anybody else. It's the responsibility of this government to have accurate information and it doesn't have it, to convey that information to the public and it has not done that, to put programs of conservation into place across this province to make sure we use less energy and use it more efficiently and it has not done that, and to intercede to get the establishment of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board's first phase of allocation if we need it and it hasn't done that.

The minister got up and had the barefaced effrontery to tell this House he didn't see why this debate was required at all. If he felt that way, he should have opposed the debate and had his party oppose the debate. Obviously they are on thin ice, because they agreed to the debate in the end.

If you just read tonight's paper: Imperial Oil Limited is "plagued with worldwide supply troubles stemming from the Iranian situation" and the Venezuelan situation and Imperial Oil is worried here in Canada; Gulf Canada is waging "a constant battle," it tells the Toronto Star, in order to maintain supplies for the Montreal East refinery and the refinery in Point Tupper, Nova Scotia; Shell Canada expects to face major shortages in 1981 at its Montreal refinery because its contracts with Venezuela are running out. In addition to what the Prime Minister of Canada had to say in Parliament yesterday, there are so many signs of impending crisis that I find it unbelievable that the Minister of Energy of this province can blinker himself and say there is no problem.

The member for Carleton East, our Energy critic—and give her credit—has told of the difficulties she faced in getting information from the National Energy Board. If a member of this Legislature and one as determined as that member, a person who happens to divide her time between Ottawa and Toronto, has that difficulty getting information, and if it arrives eventually with a mistyped heading and is inaccurate information to boot, then what on earth are the heating consumers of this province to do? What kind of information are they to get? What about small businesses or anybody else?

The ministry doesn't have that information. It relies on the federal government and the National Energy Board and I say that's irresponsible. Perhaps the ministry has the information and won't give it out to the public of this province; that's irresponsible too. In fact, the minister's activity from beginning to end has been totally irresponsible, because he and the government have been trying to pretend there is no problem and that pretense has gone on right up until today.

Back in July I held a press conference and said that if we got through this winter it would be a matter of luck, the way we were going. Nothing has changed since then. In the Legislature we have repeatedly asked the minister what is going on and these are the answers we have had.

On October 11, the minister said the situation would be "tight, but manageable." This in the face of school boards not getting their regular suppliers to bid any more.

On October 12, the minister said, "We are in a satisfactory position as far as the current season is concerned."

On October 15, the minister said, "The situation in usual circumstances will be manageable."

On November 5, in reply to another question, the minister said, "Certainly I have seen nothing nor have I received any indication from any other source that would change the assessment which I have shared with the House earlier."

On November 8, the minister said, quite simply: "There is sufficient oil for the winter of 1979-80 available from Canadian supplies, foreign imports and some drawdown of inventory. The prospect for the winter remains tight, but manageable."

On November 30, the minister spoke of his meetings with the oil companies, and said, "They certainly plan to honour all contracts which they have currently with individuals and with companies."

The day before yesterday, in the Legislature, in response to the member for Carleton East, the minister said: "We have responded on the basis of the information which has been made available to us . . . I have always wanted to share information." He indicated once again everything was going to be all right.

In that case, why can't this minister explain to us the fact that the net exports of middle distillates have gone up by one million cubic metres in the first 10 months of this year, by five million barrels, by about 180 million gallons? Surely if that oil had been kept in this country, as the minister now says he was telling the government, we wouldn't have shortages in our stock creating an impending crisis in heating oil this very winter.

Why is it a member, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Energy, can get up and say, "That's just an offset deal," when in fact our foreign feedstock imports into this country are also down by 2.3 million cubic metres over the course of the first nine or 10 months of this year?

Why did it take this particular debate to smoke out the Minister of Energy, who suddenly reveals himself as a defender of the consumers of Ontario and itemizes for us a long list of representations made to the federal government over the period of the last six to eight months?

I don't believe it, Mr. Speaker. What I heard the Minister of Energy say was the parliamentary assistant opposed the energy allocation bill and said it should not be enacted, it was intolerable legislation. I didn't hear this ministry saying publicly they wanted that technical committee to be created. I didn't hear this ministry saying publicly they wanted that information to be available to the public. I heard that ministry covering up, while the National Energy Board and the federal government were busily cooking the books to keep the real picture away from the people of this province and the people of this country. That's what was happening.

We're not getting explanations. The minister has gone to the length of disowning the Prime Minister of Canada, a man of his own party, and saying Joe Clark doesn't know what he is talking about. We have evidence that has happened in the past. But this time around, the minister says as well, he does not have confidence in the information he is getting from the National Energy Board. What is the real picture? We don't know.

In the absence of knowledge and bearing in mind it will take approximately 60 days for the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to actually put its plans into effect in order to ensure an effective, fair and equitable program of allocation is in place, it seems to me there may well be an almost indisputable case for the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to move into its first stage and start allocating oil to the refineries.

I would point out to the Minister of Energy that in eastern Canada over the first 10 months of this year the demand for oil and oil products has gone up by only 1.6 per cent, whereas in western Canada it has gone up over the same period of time by 7.9 per cent. The people in eastern Canada, including Ontario, are being responsible in their use of energy and in its conservation, but I suspect that's not the case in western Canada.

I don't want to see a situation where people in this province or in the Atlantic provinces are made to suffer and freeze over the course of this winter because of irresponsible use of petroleum resources in western Canada. The way to ensure that doesn't happen is to have an equitable allocation so petroleum resources are shared equitably, and if there are shortages the hardships are shared equitably as well. This minister is not prepared to say that; he simply says the assurances are fine and there is no problem.

What's happening now in Ottawa is that Mr. Hnatyshyn and the government realize the Prime Minister boomed. The program of public relations flim-flammy to persuade the public there is no problem goes on. Mr. Hnatyshyn now says he hasn't seen any particular problems, even though he admits the supply/demand situation has tightened in recent weeks. They are distancing themselves from the Prime Minister of Canada up in Ottawa, and the minister responsible to energy consumers in this province has also been joining in that particular program.

Let me read what the telegram said: "A media release will again stress obvious need to curb consumption and will properly caution against alarm." For God's sake, Mr. Speaker, if we're going to have a problem in this area perhaps it's time for some alarm; perhaps it's time for some action; perhaps it's time for this government to say, not privately behind closed doors but publicly, that the allocation board has to go into operation, that we have to have an assurance that these supplies will be dealt with equitably. Perhaps it's time as well for this government to stop making public relations pronouncements about the need for conservation—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: —pronouncements which are not backed by action.

We've talked about action. We've talked about spending $200 million from Hydro's budget for conservation rather than the $16 million which is all this government is prepared to spend. We want to see action from this government. We want to see public pressure in Ottawa, and above all we want the accurate information so the people of this province—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —and the Legislature can judge what's going on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, we're dealing in an area today which puts a very special onus on legislators, people in the private sector, people in the academic world, economists—everyone—to be properly concerned about the energy crisis and to express their concern, but to be realistic, honest, straightforward, direct and objective about the crisis.

Mr. Martel: Those are all Joe Clark's qualities.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Quite right. We're here today simply because of some remarks made yesterday by the Prime Minister of Canada which caused the energy critic for the NDP to decide suddenly, today, it was necessary to have an emergency debate.

Mr. Martel: That's what the Prime Minister said last night, don't turn it around.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the third party went overtime on his remarks and now his party is interjecting at every turn.

Mr. McClellan: Poor baby.

Mr. Martel: Would you take a soother?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Every member has a right to speak and a right to be heard.

Mr. Martel: I want to hear what is said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, the member doesn't want to hear what I'm saying. What the members have been proving in the last couple of hours, and are proving as I speak now, is that they are more interested in trying to show the public that there is an oil crisis, that there is an energy crisis, than in spending one shred of one minute this afternoon talking about the things they might recommend this government do in the event there is an oil and energy crisis.

Mr. Martel: You weren't around to hear it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was here listening to it. The third party did not spend one minute talking about what they would recommend be done in the next couple of weeks in the event there is a crisis. They are sitting and hoping a crisis does develop so they can try and throw the blame on one provincial government in this country. This is a matter of some serious concern.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard nothing which would constitute a point of privilege or a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The fact is the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) spoke earlier about the need to understand the psychology of security of supply. This is exactly what concerns me about the debate this afternoon. As we saw earlier this year, the moment there was a problem, the moment there was a—

Mr. Roy: Can I get a copy of your speech?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member can read it in court on Monday morning.

Earlier this year in California there was a situation in which there was a perceived, or perhaps real, energy crisis. What happened because of the reaction there impacted on our tourist industry in Ontario.

How? It caused thousands of people in California to rush out and respond to the talk and the psychology of a shortage by transferring massive amounts of gasoline from the oil pumps and the gasoline pumps into the tanks in their cars. That created a situation which totally distorted the real energy supply problem and the realities of the allocation of gasoline in that state, and literally throughout the United States.

What happened as a result of that was that in the few months following it was difficult, if not impossible, to get the message back out across the United States that the energy crisis had, for that period of time, disappeared.

Our tourist industry in this province was affected right into September, at least up to August of this year, though by then the situation was improving. Most of the gasoline lineups, most of the allocation situations in the United States, had passed. Gasoline was available by August, but none the less we found a situation where US tourism to Canada was down four and a half per cent, and to our province down by 2.2 per cent.

By September, partly on account of our gasoline hotline I might add, tourism had recovered. Interestingly, tourism from the United States recovered only two per cent nationally but six per cent for this province in September of this year. In October it again improved six per cent.

The point is that energy scares such as have been going on this afternoon in the face of the information given by the Minister of Energy, have long and far-reaching impact. For the member for Nickel Belt to express concern about the psychology of security of supply and then to have his party—though his party doesn't have a tourism critic—spend all afternoon today trying to raise the spectre of an energy crisis for the industries and the tourists we try to attract to this part of the province is irresponsible. In that context their continuing cry about a real energy crisis is irresponsible. It is an attempt to move a very sensitive item into the political arena and to do so in the context and riding on the back of our tourist industry, as one example.

Let us not fool ourselves. Studies in the United States have confirmed that the appearance and image of anticipated shortages have dramatic impact.

Studies in the United States have proved anticipated shortages of fuel decrease vacation travel. Studies show if gasoline is rationed there will be a tendency for potential travellers to use their allocation for work-associated travel rather than leisure travel.

I say to the opposition, it shows if people are uncertain about the availability of gasoline they will be more inclined to take fewer trips, select destinations closer to home and stay longer at those destinations. I say to the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) his party has been front and centre all afternoon in trying to raise the spectre of an energy crisis, yet there he was a week or so ago in my estimates saying we are going to be in serious trouble if there isn't some rational thinking going on in terms of the whole availability of energy situation.

That's precisely the point, and we have to be objective. I say to his colleagues if they were as calm and as reasoned today as the member for Victoria-Haliburton was last week, then they wouldn't have undone all the good he has been trying to do, and he has been doing over the last few weeks in bringing a rational view to the impact on the tourist industry of this afternoon's discussion. I find it interesting to hear the opposition. The opposition wants to raise the spectre of an oil crisis.

Mr. Martel: What about Joe Clark? Tell us about Joe Clark.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am going to tell you about Joe.

Mr. Martel: Tell us about the dummy who made the statement last night in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why didn't you say it before your leader left the House?

The entire point of this is that the opposition wants to suddenly suggest, as I heard the leader of the third party say, that the federal government should have appointed the members to the allocation board. They weren't saying it six months ago, but because Joe Clarke said last night there may be a problem, today the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) has decided we had better appoint the members to the allocation board.

Meanwhile, over the last series of months, our Ministers of Energy have been the only ones in this country who have consistently been seeking the information from the federal government, they have been the only Ministers of Energy who have been meeting with the oil companies to ascertain the realities of the situation. Our Ministers of Energy did not sit back, as did the third party in particular, and wait for the sermon from the mount last night in Ottawa to decide suddenly that we had to spend all day today raising the spectre of shortages to our American tourists and to those industries which the member for Nickel Belt today decides he wants to attract to this province by showing concern about the psychology of security of supply.

I want to say that unless the opposition wants, or is able to stand up and suggest this government has let the public down in some sense and that we could now do something to—

Mr. Conway: Build some transmission lines into the national capital.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was here listening; the honourable member didn't have one suggestion. Frankly I expected his leader, who spent all of his time in partisan remarks, to suggest we—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, in the last five minutes I am confident we will hear the next speaker for the opposition give us some constructive suggestions about what will happen if their fondest wishes of an oil strike come true. They will tell us how, in the context of our national responsibility, Ontario can respond. They haven't to date.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to take part in this debate. However, I am afraid I am going to disappoint the last speaker in dreaming up a false crisis. I just don't know how members opposite can say there is no crisis when they read the newspapers and realize what is happening in one part of this world.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which edition are you reading?

Mr. McGuigan: All the papers. When one reads that 600 million people have upset the balance of power in this world and have the Middle East, where so much of our present oil sources are, on the verge of revolution and possibly a third world war—thank goodness we have a reasonable man at the head of government in the United States who has been able to avert this.

Interjection.

Mr. McGuigan: Yes, I am a supporter of Carter. I don't see how you can say there is no crisis. If that is the case, how is it the federal minister told this government to stop its energy advertising program in the United States? The minister curtailed Industry and Tourism advertising last summer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That shows how responsible we were.

Mr. McGuigan: But he didn't mention it in his speech, did he?

It's in the record; members can read it. The federal minister told the Ontario minister to stop the advertising.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We acted responsibly. That is a good example of how we worried about oil supplies.

Mr. McGuigan: So there is no crisis?

I am not going to spend my time arguing with the minister. I want to speak on behalf of those people in the farming industry in southwestern Ontario who are absolutely dependent on liquid fuel. They can't plug their tractors into hydro outlets, nor can they hook up a long hose to a natural gas line to power their vehicles.

When this crunch comes, and we have every indication that it will, if there is any sort of a supply problem this winter the person who will lose will be the farmer next spring when he goes for his diesel supplies, because diesel and home heating oil supplies are interchangeable. When we hit that spring plowing period we have to have those supplies there.

It is also to the benefit of every consumer in Canada and those abroad whom we supply with so much of our food. Just to give members an example of how dependent we are on liquid fuel, back in 1940 it took about five calories of fossil fuel to produce a calorie of food on the dinner table. Today, because of our advanced mechanization and our move to greater advanced farming systems, it now takes nine calories of fossil fuel to produce one calorie of food on the table.

That is how dependent we are today on fossil fuel. If there are any problems next spring it's going to show up in that area. I just wish to emphasize that point. I am sure the minister understands what I am talking about.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. You are denying your own colleague the right to be heard.

Mr. McGuigan: There is a great deal this government can do for us by encouraging the consumption of locally produced foods. This Ministry of Agriculture and Food has not done the job of producing proper information on nutrition and the use of our own foods in the fresh form, rather than in the highly processed form which is so energy consumptive.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has about a half a minute.

Mr. McGuigan: There are many things that can be done. One of the areas is in the preservation of prime farm land. Yield from number 1 land is taken at a 100 units, number 2 land is 80 units, and if we take number 3 land it's down to 64 units; yet, we have the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson) failing to back up his own food guidelines which call for the preservation of farm land. I am not arguing we should be having an absolute law that says one can't use farm lands in a flexible manner, I am in favour of the guidelines.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired. The time allocated to this debate has elapsed.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Motion for adoption of parts three and four of the final report of the standing resources development committee on acidic precipitation, abatement of emissions from the International Nickel Company operations at Sudbury, pollution control in the pulp and paper industry and pollution abatement at the Reed Paper mill in Dryden.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, may I advise the House of an agreement which the House leaders would propose for the conduct of the debate this evening? If it is agreeable to the House, sir, I would ask that this be made an order of the House for this evening.

The time between the start of the debate and 10:15 is to be divided equally between the three parties in the House. The clerk shall keep a record of the time used, and at the conclusion of each party's time the Speaker will no longer recognize members from that caucus.

At 10:15 the debate will end and the question will be put.

May I ask if there is unanimous consent for this arrangement?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief remarks about what the committee found out as a result of the study of the Reed situation in Dryden and about the pulp and paper industry in general. I think it was a real learning experience for the members of the committee who were able to make the trip to Dryden. I know it was for me. I noticed when we came back that the committee members had a different type of feeling for the one-industry towns in northern Ontario than had been shown before we went to inspect the situation in Dryden. So I think the trip to Dryden for the committee members was really a very important part of that study.

We learned a few interesting facts in looking at the pulp and paper industry across the province. Apparently there are 31 pulp and paper mills discharging waste directly into Ontario waters. That's a pretty large number.

Yet if we look a little further down the line, we find Ontario pulp and paper companies have spent $202 million in pollution abatement and related modernization efforts in the last 10 years. That's a fair bit of cash in anybody's language.

We also found that abatement and modernization do not always require repeat investments. In other words, we often find that by modernizing a paper mill we have solved the pollution problem. This is good to hear, because many of our paper mills are outdated; if we bring them up to date, we are going to get rid of the pollution causing the problems throughout the province today.

It is interesting to note that in 1978 a report from the Ministry of Natural Resources stated about half of the pollution abatement investment yielded modernization and productivity and, as a result, environmental benefits. This proves what I was saying. It also goes on to say that in the next five years there is going to be a requirement for $1.2 billion to be spent in that industry to update and modernize it.

The government policy towards the pulp and paper industry, as stated by the Ministry of Environment, is that this industry must treat the environment so its operations no longer cause damage, nuisance or loss of amenities to the neighbouring communities.

The Environmental Protection Act states clearly that no person shall deposit any contaminant into a natural environment that causes or is likely to cause impairment of that environment. The Ontario Water Resources Act states that any person who deposits any material in any place that may impair the quality of the water is guilty of an offence. Unfortunately, this law and policy has proven difficult to enforce in respect of the pulp and paper industry because of the fear of economic repercussions if the companies choose to close down their operations rather than put in the required pollution abatement controls. So it has been a little difficult to enforce this particular part of the Environmental Protection Act.

This latter problem was addressed by the new assistance program announced by the Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. F. S. Miller). The new grant program is known sometimes as the Miller plan or the Employment Development Fund. Over the next five years, this financial assistance to the pulp and paper industry will be pretty extensive. The money is to modernize and for pollution abatement methods that will improve the viability and quality of life in northern Ontario communities.

I would just like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Ontario government, of which I am very proud to be a member. This is a program that was needed. It is a good program, and if it is properly applied I think it will really help solve our pollution problems throughout Ontario and continue to keep people employed in areas. One-industry towns like Dryden would be ghost towns if that industry were closed down.

At this time I would like to make reference to a dialogue in the House on Friday, November 30. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) said—I'm quoting from Hansard:

"In Espanola, on Wednesday of this week, I officially presented E. B. Eddy Company with a cheque for $16,667,000, drawn from the Employment Development Fund allocation as an incentive towards the company's expenditures of $225 million on its facilities at Espanola and Ottawa over the next five years."

Hansard goes on to record that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) said, "As an award for their excellent performance."

The minister replied: "Maybe the Leader of the Opposition wouldn't have helped the company. We thought Espanola was good enough to save; he did not. I'm glad the Leader of the Opposition got it on the record that he wouldn't have helped the company."

"Mr. S. Smith: Absolutely right. Their record doesn't deserve it, and you know it."

I am glad we live in a country where we have the right to think and say what we want to say and think what we want to think. Certainly the Leader of the Opposition had the right to say what he thought about E. B. Eddy and all the good people of Espanola or the town of Espanola. But I think, in all fairness, he should have had some knowledge of the situation of which he spoke.

In the eight years that I have represented the great riding of Algoma-Manitoulin, I worked very closely with the company and the town officials to make sure Espanola didn't become another one of those ghost towns we know so much about in northern Ontario. Apparently this possibility doesn't cause the Leader of the Opposition any concern.

I would point out that E. B. Eddy is and has been a good citizen of this province and of the town of Espanola. I would point out that the plant in Espanola is a very old plant; it was run into the ground by two previous owners. Since E. B. Eddy acquired that plant, it has done a good job, not only of controlling today's pollution, but also of cleaning up the mess left by the former owners of the plant. It has really gone down the road a long way in cleaning up the mess left by the former owners.

I strongly disagree with the Leader of the Opposition. I think E. B. Eddy has been able to show, in no uncertain terms, that it does qualify for the Employment Development Fund grant it received on November 28. As a result of that grant and the $200 million being put up by the company, the good people of Espanola can now be assured and have the peace of mind that their jobs are secure for a good many years to come and that the town can and will continue to grow.

I just don't understand why the Leader of the Opposition wished to put a smear against the company and the town on the official record. I really can't understand that, Mr. Speaker, but that's his privilege and I just want to clear the record.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments with respect to this report. I want to tell you, sir, I'm not going to be dealing with Reed, because I think that part of the report is really redundant. After all, Reed now has been sold to Great Lakes, and we have an entirely different situation up at Dryden. I don't want to spend any time discussing that particular matter, because I don't think the situations described in the report now apply.

I'm going to deal in general terms with the pulp and paper industry as such and once again set out the government's lack of success in controlling pollution in terms of its total pollution abatement programs as they relate to the pulp and paper industry over the years. Since about 1965 the government has had almost a total failure in many respects with regard to controlling pollution in the pulp and paper industry.

Pollution abatement objectives relating to the pulp and paper industry were set by the province in 1965. The objectives, which were to protect potable water supplies, recreational uses, aquatic life and aesthetics, were to be met in 1969. In 1976, the authors of a major Ministry of the Environment study on the pulp and paper pollution abatement program reported that only six of the 31 mills had reduced their pollutant discharges sufficiently to meet the objective for the maximum suspended solids, and only three complied with the objective concerning biological oxygen demand.

Between 1970 and 1978, for the industry as a whole, suspended solid discharges were reduced by 64 per cent and BOD by 38 per cent. By comparison, United States mills in the Great Lakes basin reduced their suspended solid discharges by 82 per cent and BOD by 84 per cent between 1967 and 1977. In comparative terms, our record during that particular period was not so good.

Six Ontario mills now discharge higher BOD levels than they did in 1970: Abitibi in Fort William and Sturgeon Falls, American Can in Marathon, Kimberly-Clark at Terrace Bay, Boise Cascade in Fort Frances, and what was Reed Paper in Dryden.

Three mills were discharging more suspended solids in 1978 than in 1970: Canadian International Paper in Hawkesbury, Kimberly-Clark in Terrace Bay, and Boise Cascade in Fort Frances. Despite some improvements, five mills still emit more than 45 tons per day of BOD into their watercourses.

Over the years, the Ministry of the Environment has failed badly in terms of abating pollution in the pulp and paper industry generally. It seems to me that in many respects the Ministry of the Environment, particularly from 1970 on, could be called, as it applies to the pulp and paper industry, the Ministry of Pollution, because it hasn't had any great success in cleaning up pollution in that industry.

When one comes to the matter of enforcement and the ministry's success with regard to prosecutions, perhaps this points up why the ministry hasn't had the kind of success in abating pollution in the pulp and paper industry which one would expect over the course of about 18 years.

In the last five years, the ministry has won four convictions on pollution offences by the pulp and paper industry. Canadian International Paper Company was convicted in November 1974 and fined $2,000. The Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company Limited was convicted and fined $2,000 in 1974. American Can of Canada Limited, which interestingly enough was charged under federal legislation—there has been more success under federal legislation—was convicted on a number of counts in April 1977 and fined $64,000. Reed Paper Limited was convicted on a number of counts and fined $5,000 in 1977.

The ministry has had some difficulty with its prosecutions. Over the years the ministry has tended to look at prosecutions as a last resort, not only in the pulp and paper industry but also generally. They would try to negotiate, to work it out, to push, pull and tug to get industry to comply in one fashion or another. When everything else failed, the ministry would take them to court. For that reason, the ministry has had limited success in this respect. For some reason or other, they feel a little squeamish about taking companies to court, and they haven't met with any great success in this area.

There are a number of things the ministry can do with respect to cleaning up this industry. I acknowledge that my friend for Algoma-Manitoulin made a point in discussing the Treasurer's Employment Development Fund, how it will apply to the pulp and paper industry and what it will do for that industry in terms of modernization and abatement equipment.

Mr. Eakins: But none for the small industries.

Mr. Gaunt: With none for the small industries, as my friend for Victoria-Haliburton has suggested. That's true. The money is being made available to the larger companies. I suppose one can argue they are the bigger polluters, and that's true. None the less, the program is there; it is available to the pulp and paper companies, and I am sure they will make use of it. I think several companies already have.

One thing concerns me. We have talked about it many times, and I am going to mention it again tonight. A speech with respect to the pulp and paper industry wouldn't be complete without mentioning some serious concerns about the flexible guideline approach the ministry takes in its enforcement policy.

I understand we are going to have a complete statement from the minister some time in the near future concerning that enforcement policy. But it has come under a lot of scrutiny and, in some cases, attack. In many respects, it hasn't served us well in cleaning up the pollution in the pulp and paper and other industries.

The minister has argued in defence of that particular approach that the ministry has to have flexibility or some room to manoeuvre in terms of trying to tailor its approach to the varying circumstances of varying industries across this province. For that reason it needs a flexible guideline approach, rather than coming in with mandatory standards, which the ministry argues would reduce its flexibility in environmental protection efforts.

I'm not so sure that's true. It may have been valid at one time, but I think we have now reached the point of some maturity in terms of setting standards for various industries. We have more knowledge. We have more experience. We have more background to deal with these problems. That being the case, I suggest it's time we took a very serious look at setting mandatory standards in terms of what is allowed as a minimum level of water quality within a river as a whole or within a water body as a whole.

I know the International Joint Commission has expressed a similar view. They have indicated that in their opinion the adoption of ambient water quality standards would be the route to go at this time, because it gives an enforcement body a better handle on cleaning up and dealing with a particular polluter emitting a particular kind of pollutant into a river or water body. The ministry should take a look at that.

I think I'm safe in saying that, in the United States, most of the jurisdictions adopt the ambient water quality standards rather than the guideline approach. I think I'm right in stating that. They've had better success than we've had, particularly in the pulp and paper industry, in cleaning up some of their watercourses.

We're at a point now where we are in a position to adopt this route and go with this method in coping with our environmental pollution problems in so far as the pulp and paper industry and a number of other industries are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Do you think we should riddle our program with exemptions?

Mr. Gaunt: No, I don't think we should riddle our program with exemptions.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: They do.

Mr. Gaunt: They do. Yes, that's true. The minister is correct. There are certain exemptions built into some of their programs in the United States. But one has to look at the overall record of achievement in this industry. We're talking about this industry tonight. We can talk about the others at some other time.

In so far as the pulp and paper industry is concerned, the United States has, on paper, a better record in cleanup than we do.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We're better in others.

Mr. Gaunt: I'll give the minister some credit in that. In some respects Ontario is better. But I don't see why Ontario, the leader in everything, should be satisfied with a mediocre performance. We could move in and do a good job in both aspects of pollution control, not only in air pollution, but also in water pollution. The minister should consider this. I know he has given it some thought. He is a thoughtful chap when he's standing by the chair doing a little drilling. I'm prepared to accept that he thinks these things through in a very deliberate way.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: On a point of privilege or order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Eakins: Did he hit a nerve?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What in the world could be out of order?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: May I put the case? I have given up drilling for twisting. It's wirebending. I want the record to be clear on that.

Mr. Gaunt: I'm glad the minister put that on the record, so we can be assured that his total and full effort is devoted to the cleanup of this province in one way or another.

In concluding, I want to say that the committee has made a number of good recommendations. I know the minister has taken the work of the committee seriously. I know he realizes the committee put a lot of thought, work and deliberation into its hearings and the writing of the report. I hope we can all better ourselves and our positions in terms of pollution abatement in this province because of it.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of the Environment referred the question of pollution control measures imposed on the pulp and paper industry to the resources development committee a year ago, we were not sure whether he was trying to avoid embarrassing questions in the House about the enforcement of control orders on this industry; whether he was planning to throw, to the committee, the hot potato of a new control order on the notorious Reed operation at Dryden and escape his responsibilities for dealing with that long-delayed cleanup; or whether he wanted some advice on policy direction.

At any rate, the committee took the latter as its mandate and did a very thorough study of the control order process. It tried also to find out who was responsible for the very dismal record in reducing pollution from the pulp and paper industry.

As my colleague from Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) has mentioned, in 1965 the government set pollution abatement objectives for the industry, to be attained by 1969. However, a 1976 report of the ministry showed that only three of 31 mills had met the suspended solid standards, and only six had met the biological oxygen demand objectives. Since 1976, some mills have actually increased their loadings.

If we compare 1978 figures with the average figures for the first 10 months of 1979, we find that nine of 31 mills had significantly increased their BOD loadings and six had higher suspended solids in 1979.

The industry remains the largest polluter in the province. Even the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) admitted to the committee that "this industry has, in general, done less than any other major industry in the province to control the pollution it inflicts on the environment."

The recent report of the International Joint Commission entitled Major Municipal and Industrial Point Source Dischargers in the Great Lakes, a report which was issued in July 1979, showed that in 1978 Ontario was way behind the United States in cleaning up industrial pollution.

Almost half of the 96 Ontario industries studied were not in compliance with pollution abatement requirements. On the US side, only 24 per cent of industrial companies studied were not in compliance. Among the plants failing to meet requirements were a considerable number of pulp and paper mills: American Can at Marathon; Great Lakes Paper at Thunder Bay; Abitibi at Sault Ste. Marie, Thorold and Thunder Bay; Eddy Forest Products at Espanola; and Ontario Paper at St. Catharines.

Whose fault is this failure to clean up our lakes? We seem to have had what might be described as a long love affair between the pulp and paper industry and the Ministry of the Environment over the past decade and a half. The principle that the polluter must pay has been largely ignored. The public has paid with the degradation of its environment.

Weak control orders were placed on the mills, or control orders were not enforced. The industry enjoyed immunity from prosecution as long as a control order or program approval for abatement was in place.

The governments of both Ontario and Canada offered a package of both positive and negative abatement incentives for pollution abatement, but the package does not seem to have been effective in making the companies choose abatement investments over other investments.

The resources development committee examined the whole process of setting control orders to see how the standards and deadlines were arrived at. It made a considerable number of recommendations for changing the policies for setting standards and deadlines and for enforcement. Among these proposals were a large number of suggestions for opening up the system to permit public input into the setting of standards and deadlines.

I am glad to say the minister has accepted a few of these proposals. He has been won over to the importance of public input on extensions of control orders. But why limit it to extensions? Why not have public input on all notices of intent, certificates of approval and program proposals?

The Conservative members on the committee dissented from the committee's recommendation that all these instruments should be subject to public input and possible public hearings. Perhaps this is why the minister is only going part way on this recommendation. But if the members on the opposite side vote for the report tonight, they are, in effect, repudiating their dissent.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That doesn't work.

Ms. Bryden: The minister can vote either "yes" or "no." He can't vote "yes, partly" or "no partly."

Mr. Lane: That is all you have been doing all the time in here.

Ms. Bryden: As I have said many times, public input will not be balanced unless there is some public funding to ensure that all points of view are adequately presented.

Once again, there was a Conservative dissent on the recommendation of the committee that there should be some public support or consideration of public funding. In June 1978, I moved a motion in the House calling for public funding on all environmental hearings under any environmental act, and this motion was not voted on because the Conservatives blocked it. Perhaps that is why we are not making any progress in that field.

The company also sought to end what appears to be a rather cosy relationship between the ministry and the companies when they negotiate a control order and the standards and deadlines in the order. The committee suggested there should be independent evaluation of the cost estimates put out and the technological proposals of the companies. The failure of the ministry to do this for Reed Paper left the committee with no means to sort out the conflicting assertions of Reed and the ministry on realizable deadlines.

There are technical experts who have told me the whole abatement approach of the Reed company and of other companies in the province should be questioned. Are they following the best technology for reduction of effluents and reduction of pollutants? These experts have told me it is more sensible to try to reduce the amount of the effluent at source by developing closed-cycle operations rather than trying to remove the suspended solids and other pollutants from a large volume of effluent at the end of the pipe. The ministry should be studying this criticism of the technology in use and hiring independent experts to develop the best technology for pollution abatement.

Perhaps the only way to force the ministry to look at the alternatives is to make it possible for groups to take companies to court on the effects of their effluents on our common environment since, under the present law, the companies are immune from prosecution while they are carrying out what they consider to be the best technology for producing abatement.

I should report, the committee recommended that the immunity clauses in both the Environmental Protection Act and in the Ontario Water Resources Act should be removed so companies could be prosecuted for degrading the environment while a control order was going on. I am sure a judge would not carry out a conviction if they were in a process and appeared to be unable to move any faster. But it is quite conceivable they are not actually carrying that out and are just waiting for the control order deadline to expire. This is a recommendation the committee passed but, again, there was a Conservative dissent on removing that immunity. I don't know how they are going to handle this if they vote for the report tonight, because the committee did recommend the immunity clauses be struck out.

Not only have we seen very little movement on the recommendation for independent evaluation of company claims, but also the ministry has tossed out a very useful tool for evaluating such claims. The ministry had developed a computer program for a rapid comparison of the cost-benefit effectiveness of alternative abatement options for pulp and paper mills but, with the restraint program, that went down the drain—or, should I say, down the river. I suggest this is pound-foolishness. The committee saw that this might be a profit-making operation, since the computer technique possibly could be sold to other provinces and countries which wished to evaluate abatement programs.

The committee noted enforcement had been very weak and fines had been low. It asked for a beefing-up of the law in these areas. It also asked the minister to produce a statement of enforcement policy as part of his presentation to the resources development committee at the opening of the Ministry of the Environment estimates review.

I do not recall such a statement being presented to us this year, and the estimates were up since the committee reported. I am still looking for such a statement; it would be very useful as an indication of whether we do need legislative changes to improve enforcement practices. I am sure members on this side of the House would be very glad to vote for such legislation as soon as it was introduced.

The committee also dealt with the question of financial aid to the pulp and paper industry, which one of my colleagues will be discussing at more length. They did recommend that, if financial aid is given to assist a company with installing pollution control equipment, there must be a return on the investment to the people of Ontario.

We know that the Employment Development Fund, set up this year, has already handed out more than $100 million to the pulp and paper industry. We have yet to see anything that could be called return on investment in the terms of the agreement.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It's not like making coffee. You don't have an instant response to it; it takes more than a day or two.

Ms. Bryden: I agree, but I could see it if the agreements had said there would be a percentage of the shares provided in return for the investment. That is the sort of return that should be considered. When we asked the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) about this, he simply produced some dreamed-up figures on the total potential taxes from potential new employees and from potential new business—it's all very potential.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: A lot of benefits for people working.

Ms. Bryden: I'd like to move on to the question of the Reed mill at Dryden and the abatement control there.

First, I would like to say that I think the minister abused the committee system by asking the committee to make recommendations on the details and dealings in a proposed control order on Reed. As our group in the committee stated, we feel the role of the committee is to discuss and advise on general policy on control orders, but not on individual orders. For one thing, there are far too many orders to refer all of them to a standing committee of the Legislature.

I should also point out that a standing committee, such as the resources development committee, consists of 16 members and does not have research staff, legal counsel or technical staff; nor does it have the time to go into all the details of each control order, or to hold prolonged sittings in the community concerned. It cannot evaluate conflicting claims from the company and from the ministry officials without having staff, experts, time and the opportunity to hear what the various points of view about the issue are in the community.

If the minister thinks that throwing the proposed Reed control order in the lap of the committee is a means of increasing public input—which I and my colleagues have been asking for—he is gravely mistaken as to what constitutes public input.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I promise not to do it again.

Ms. Bryden: Public input to me means hearings by an independent board such as a panel of the Environmental Assessment Board held in the community concerned and open to individual citizens, organized groups, trade unions, companies—anybody who wishes to comment on the proposal. Of course there must be adequate public funding, as I mentioned, for public interest groups so it is not a David-and-Goliath encounter and all viewpoints are adequately represented.

I hope the minister will make it possible for proper public hearings to be held on all proposed control orders in the future, as well as on extensions he is now holding public meetings on. I don't know whether the public meetings could be considered full public hearings, because they are usually sort of a one-evening affair. But we should be considering the possibility of full public hearings on all environmental instruments, including the setting of standards.

As the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) mentioned, events have nullified the work of the committee over the last six months on the Reed control order. It is unfortunate we spent that much time and then the company was sold. However, the sale of the Dryden plant to Great Lakes Forest Products last month has not removed the need for cleaning up the English-Wabigoon river system.

We will be expecting the minister to impose a new control order on Great Lakes Paper with a tight timetable and a deadline we hope will be earlier than the deadline Reed Paper was asking for of 1985. Perhaps this time the minister will ask a panel of the Environmental Assessment Board to hold hearings on the matter in Dryden before he places the order. Then we will be sure, not only that the order is based on the best available technology and information, but also that all parts of the equation are taken into consideration.

There are three essential factors in determining the proper abatement program for any given mill. First, the environmental cleanup and prevention of further degradation; second, the future of the industry, particularly the future of one-industry towns such as Dryden; and third, the necessary economic and social changes needed to ensure the communities and the industry continue as viable operations and produce sufficient revenue to pay for the abatement. Those three factors must all be considered. What the committee was asked to do, in looking only at the control order and the details of it on the Reed mill, meant it was only looking at one third of the problem. That is why we felt we should have an Environmental Assessment Board panel look at all three aspects and work out a plan that would ensure the future of the community of Dryden, the future of the pulp and paper operation in Dryden and the cleanup of the environment.

I note the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) in his statement about the sale of the Reed mill to Great Lakes said it would meet all environmental standards. He didn't specify what that very vague phrase meant; whether it was the same standards being asked of Reed, or better ones. He also said they would spend $40 million on environmental improvement, but again he didn't say over what period.

I think we are still waiting for the answers to these questions on Great Lakes Forest Products. There is another question we would like an answer on and which is also part of the equation, and it is the missing piece in the jigsaw puzzle; namely, how much of the timber limits granted to Reed under the memorandum of understanding have been given to Great Lakes Forest Products? This will affect their ability to carry out environmental improvement and the speed with which they can do it.

The government doesn't seem to have been able to find the answer to that question as to how much of the timber limits were included in the sale. They don't seem to know how much they have given away to Reed in the past and, therefore, they don't know how much has been passed on. This is a piece in the jigsaw puzzle that must be found.

I would like simply to say that the resources development committee produced a number of very valuable recommendations, but we are beginning to wonder whether they will be left on the shelf to gather dust or whether we can expect to see them implemented and how soon.

Mr. T. P. Reid: As usual, Mr. Speaker, it is a little disappointing to speak to a House with less than a quorum, although I will not call for one.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The important ones are here.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister points out that the important ones are here, and he may well be right. But it is probably symptomatic of the importance that the members—and probably the press in particular, but others as well—place upon our deliberations in this House.

I want to speak to this problem for a number of reasons. One is the Reed Paper mill in Dryden is in my political area. Many of the surrounding communities are dormitory towns for the Reed Paper plant. The government, in its wisdom, has decided to build a hydroelectric plant, fuelled by low-sulphur coal in Atikokan, which is also in my riding. I also want to speak on it, because this is probably the most important pollution problem we face, particularly at the moment, and probably for the next five to 10 years.

It is interesting, I recall when I first was elected in 1967 the words "ecology" or "environment" didn't mean anything to anybody in Ontario, including my friend who just spoke and most of us in the Legislature. They weren't terms that meant very much to anybody.

About 1969 it became the focus of political attention, not only in this jurisdiction, but also in others. It became, if I may put it this way, the fad of the day. It was the latest cause that people should be concerned and aroused about, should march in the streets, should wave placards, should write their members of the Ontario Legislature and the federal House of Commons and their municipal representatives, and hold great meetings, in whatever public halls there were, to decry the great problems of pollution and all the bad things to come from this fouling of our environment.

It is interesting that 99 per cent of those people—but not all of them—are no longer with us. They have gone on to other things; they are not demonstrating about the Ayatollah Khomeini, either for or against, or saying we should have three chickens in every pot or whatever the latest fad should be.

Environment and ecology seem to have lost fashion, if I may say that, with the public. It's not that sort of upfront, real thing that people are concerned about today. There are a number of reasons for that. One is that a lot of people fasten on to fads and fashions, they give it their best shot and then go on to the next. I guess it also has something to do with the economic situation. The government has been most successful in this province in convincing people it's a case of either the environment or the economy. In other words, either it's clean air and clean water or it's jobs.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You never heard me say that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: No. I must say, in all due respect to the minister, I would have thought he might have been a little more aggressive in pushing his point.

There are rumours that on occasion the minister has pounded the table and said: "If you don't do this to this company or that company, I'm going to resign. I'm not going to be the minister unless you allow me to run my department and you allow me to be tough with these people."

This is nothing personal about the present minister. He's probably been as aggressive as most of his predecessors, one of whom I remember quite well. The member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr) stood in this place, on one of the most impassioned, highly charged evenings I have seen in this place in 12 years. We were talking about the Dow Chemical pollution of the St. Clair River.

Mr. Gaunt: The polluter must pay, he said.

Mr. T. P. Reid: My friends are stealing my lines as usual, and I hope they get their names in the paper. But I remember that night well when the minister's predecessor got up in a fit of passion. One could say it was due to other influences—and I don't know what they were—but he stood in his place, pounded the table and said, "The polluter will pay." Some of us who were very naive, young and inexperienced in this place said: "My God, we've found our white knight. We've found somebody who is concerned about the environment we live in."

With all due respect, I say to the present minister, we believed him. We believed he was going to go out to Dow Chemical in Sarnia and all the other people who had by this time been warned there were problems with the environment and the ecology in Ontario, and he was going to clean it up and fix it.

I confess my naivety. I'd only been here three or four years. I was a simple country boy from the north, from Rainy River, who didn't understand these kind of things. I appreciate I'm a slow learner, but I learned very quickly after that. I don't think there was a person who didn't hear that speech that night in this Legislature, because in those days, Mr. Speaker—it was before your time; you're just a young man—if somebody was making a speech in this assembly, the place was packed. I must say, I thank my colleagues for staying. They usually leave, just like everybody else.

We believed, because of the passion in the then minister's voice, he was going to do something. Those were the heady days when we thought these problems could be dealt with—maybe in too simplistic a manner, I admit. But we thought those things were going to be fixed up. We found that didn't happen. The government, following the tradition and pattern of 36 years in power, would make the deals under the table. Whether it was separate schools, hospitals or anything you want to care about, including pollution of the environment, the government would deal under the table and make its negotiations and settlements, and the problems would be solved. Nobody would be happy, but everybody would feel something had been done.

We have a problem that I, coming from northern Ontario, feel particularly involved in and concerned about. Before I talk about the specific problem of acid rain as it affects the northern area of the province, I want to set a scenario for members on all sides who have been kind enough to support the building of a hydroelectric plant in Atikokan. I give credit to the government for making that decision, reiterating that decision and going ahead with that 400-megawatt plant which will supply the needed power to northwestern Ontario.

I see my friend from Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden), who spoke to the NDP annual meeting in my riding two or three weeks ago and who doesn't really believe that plant should be built, I remember the former NDP candidate got up in every other place but Atikokan, where the plant and the jobs are needed, and said: "I'm against the building of the plant. I don't think we should have this hydroelectric plant built at Atikokan."

Then the candidate got to Atikokan at the all-candidates meeting and said: "Well, if you people really want the plant, I guess I can't tell you you shouldn't have the plant. If you want to build it, that's fine. I should point out there are certain dangers but, if you want the plant, that's fine with me." That was the same person who had been all over the rest of the riding—and, as you know, Mr. Speaker, my riding is something like 20,000 square miles and the communications are not that great—going from one place to the other, saying, "I'm against it," until he got to the place where it was being built; he then said, "Well, I'm not really against it."

Ms. Bryden: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: When I was in Fort Frances, I did not say the plant should or should not be built, I said there should have been an environmental assessment on it so the public could have decided or could have had their input. A decision could have been made with all the essential public input.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's point is on the record.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I just wanted to see if anybody was listening, other than my colleagues. I am certainly glad to see somebody is.

My problem is, I read that account in the Fort Frances Times. They went from being most extreme Conservative to most extreme NDP. As one can't believe either side, I didn't know exactly where the truth lay. I would say the member who just spoke is right and, if I misrepresented her remarks, I apologize. According to the newspaper account, she did say she thought the environmental assessment should have gone on.

I am not totally averse to that, except I find myself in that box where I am trying to ensure the viability of a community and northwestern Ontario; so I think that plant should be built. If the Conservative government of 36 years had done their planning and carried out their operations, as basically and importantly as they should have, we wouldn't have been in this situation.

I want to spend a few minutes on talking about the plant at Atikokan, because I'm concerned about it. I'm concerned about the fact that northwestern Ontario does not have a secure supply of energy. We have been importing energy through a tie line from Manitoba. That agreement runs out in 1980-81. The Manitobans have preferred to say they are going to export their power to the United States, where presumably they have shorter transmission lines and can make a bigger dollar.

The problem arises—it's touched upon in the report we're dealing with tonight and in other reports in the press—about the fact that when the Atikokan plant is operational, it will cause acid rain that is going to affect the Quetico Provincial Park, which is a large park in my riding and of which we in northwestern Ontario are very proud. If I may take 30 seconds to give you a commercial, it's probably the finest canoeing area in all of Canada. I would say to my friend from Durham East (Mr. Cureatz), who is nodding to me very wisely, it's not a place where he should go without a lot of help. He should not be allowed in the wilderness on his own; he has trouble finding his way here in the morning—even after a couple of years.

The problem arose in regard to acid precipitation and the Atikokan hydro plant and the fact that a lot of American politicians got on the bandwagon and started to raise a lot of hell—if you'll pardon the French, which I'm sure you will; I hope that's not racist—about the fact that the plant in Atikokan was going to cause acid precipitation over the Quetico park but, more important, as far as they were concerned, on the boundary waters canoe area in northern Minnesota, which adjoins Quetico park.

I must say—and I pay tribute to the present Treasurer, who was then the Minister of Natural Resources—

Mr. Hennessy: That's not fair. You can't say that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It's not fair? You can't win in this place, Mr. Speaker. Here I am trying to pay a compliment to the present Treasurer, and the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy) says that's not fair. I don't know what else I could do, other than contribute to his campaign, which I'm not prepared to do.

The Americans got on the bandwagon and were raising all kinds of problems with both Ontario Hydro and members of the Legislature. They wrote directly to the Premier. They went to Ottawa. They went through their federal state department and raised hell as well with the federal government. The fact that this plant was going to cause acid precipitation on the border waters boundary area, which is in northern Minnesota. That area being adjacent to Quetico park in Ontario, they get a lot of enjoyment out of it; they get a lot of people going to that area, because it is beside the best canoeing area in the world which, as I said, is Quetico park.

The hypocrisy of those people is beyond belief. Even the Premier of this province, when he gets up in his place and tries to answer me and others about the question of making public the public opinion polls in the province, does not reach the hypocrisy of those American politicians in complaining about acid rain on the border waters canoe area.

I have statistics here that indicate 70 per cent of any of the acid rain that is infecting this area comes from the power plants in northern Minnesota. Roughly 30 per cent—and I think it's a smaller proportion—comes from Ontario and, in some cases, Manitoba: from a plant in Thunder Bay, perhaps from a plant in Atikokan when it's built, and from two plants producing electricity in Winnipeg.

It's interesting to see the difference I have noted, because I'm very close to Minnesota—fairly close to the border—to me, the difference between our political system and theirs is like the difference between night and day. I've been in this Legislature for 12 years, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker—I'm sure you would agree, and I notice you're sort of nodding—that this government—

Mr. Acting Speaker: I didn't agree with what you're going to say, because I haven't heard what you're going to say. If I was nodding, it was for another reason.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The member for Durham East is nodding, and that bothers me.

This government, in my 12 years in the Legislature has run this province by headlines. They have made statements in this Legislature and have always failed to enforce the tough stances they are going to take on whether it be pollution or violence in hockey. By God, I've never been so impressed as I was when I saw the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) stand in his place and say, "We're going to do away with violence in hockey." My God, that was really impressive.

Mr. Ruston: He said he was going to hire 150 policemen.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Whatever happened to that, we don't know.

Mr. Ruston: Where did all the police go that he was going to hire?

Mr. T. P. Reid: The Attorney General said, "We're going to hire 150 OPP, and we're going to have law and order in this province." I could go all through those kind of things. But the only difference between the Attorney General and the present Minister of the Environment is that the present Minister of the Environment dresses better, because he can do up his jacket and the Attorney General can't. But because the member is not on the front benches of that party, his statements don't get the same kind of recognition that his statements do. But his are not far behind. I remind the minister of the statements his predecessor made about how we were going to sue Dow Chemical and the polluter would pay. That's how the Tories have run this province for the 12 years I've been here. I'm sorry that the press gallery never catches on to that, but I suppose their immediate concern is a headline and they don't care about results.

But to go on, even better than the present Attorney General and the Minister of the Environment, who make all these great statements about what they're going to do, with no action to back it up—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Just tell me one—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh, let's talk. We could talk about Dryden if the minister wants to talk about something. We could talk about Inco. Let's talk about Inco, for instance—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Tell me one—just one.

Mr. T. P. Reid: One? I told the minister about two, but let's talk about Inco for a minute.

I've been here for 12 years. I've heard about environment, pollution and ecology for 10 of those years. I admit, when I first came in, I didn't know any more about it than anyone else. But I'm still waiting for Inco to be cleaned up.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You were going to tell me about it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I haven't heard the minister say anything about the 750,000 tons of emissions that have been going on. I've listened to my friends who live in Sudbury talk about it. I've heard the minister say, "We're going to do this and we're going to do that." I've read the papers the next day and it says, "Harry Parrott, the minister says . . ."

Mr. Warner: He gets tough.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —but I don't see any reduction.

Mr. Warner: He'll get tough when Inco lets him.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I don't see any reduction in the 750 tons of emissions from Inco. Don't divert me. I am trying to help you out here. If the minister would listen, I am trying to help him out, because there are people on the North American continent who make him look like a piker, and they are the American system of government. I stand in my place and say, without fear of equivocation, that they are the experts at ruling by headlines.

Even the member for Durham East realizes what they are doing. If he knows how blatant and obvious it is, then everybody must know how blatant and obvious it is.

These American politicians primarily were writing letters, making speeches in the Minnesota Legislature, and were going to their federal representatives, who were going to the federal House of Commons and complaining about the possibility of acid rain coming from this plant in Atikokan.

The hypocrisy of it is beyond me, Mr. Speaker, and I will tell you why; 70 per cent of the acid rain in this area is coming from—

Mr. Hennessy: Minnesota.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The member for Fort William has said the first intelligent thing he said tonight. It is coming from Minnesota and those electric power plants there. They are producing 70 per cent, or better, of the acid rain in that area, and they have the nerve to write the Premier of the province, to write to me, to write to the Minister of the Environment and say: "We are not going to put up with this. This is completely unsatisfactory. We don't do it."

It is incredible. They have more nerve than the Ontario Conservative government, and I know my colleagues won't believe that. They won't believe that, but that is the case.

It bothers me, Mr. Speaker. I understand my time is running out, is it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: You have about 45 seconds.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I want to refer to page 24 of the report—something referred to by my colleague who spoke before me—and that is the process of reaching an international accord to secure abatement of the emissions contributing to acidic precipitation.

I am concerned about this. I am concerned about it for the very reasons I have put, because our American friends are exactly the same way but more expert than the Ontario Conservative government. They would rather talk about it than do it. They will get a headline in the papers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I will wind up. I say to the Minister of the Environment, if I may in winding up, Mr. Speaker. I have a resolution on the Order Paper. It is imperative that Ontario have a working agreement with the states bordering the province. I realize there is a longer range with the weather system and everything else, but we cannot rely on the federal government to deal with these matters. There should be a working relationship between Ontario and those states bordering along the Ontario border to deal with these kinds of problems.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I didn't get to sit on the committee for very long, but I did sit on the committee for a few days when we were dealing with Reed, Dryden. I would like to pass a few comments on to the minister about some of the feelings I and other members of the committee developed when we were confronted with the kinds of technical presentations the company was making about its proposal and to some degree even the technical nature of looking at your proposals as well. Quite a number of us found it very difficult to effectively determine what exactly was the truth, not in terms of anything other than was the economic tag they hung on their approach to cleaning up the pollution a realistic tag, or could it be improved? We just didn't have the expertise on the committee to do that effectively, to refute easily the position the company was taking on its economic situation. A number of us found that quite difficult and we didn't feel, in terms of the future, in looking at control orders and so on, that the legislative committee was the proper place to do it.

In spite of some of the technical problems and technical hang-ups the members of the committee had, there are a number of good recommendations in the report. I won't read through all the recommendations because I would think the minister has had a very careful look at them already, but I would like to talk about enforcement.

The one thing that comes out fairly clearly in the section on enforcement is toughness. The committee believes enforcement procedures should be strengthened. All the way through these recommendations there is a significant feeling by all the members of the committee—and I understand the government members dissented on a couple of points, but they didn't dissent on this—that there needed to be much, much stronger enforcement of orders by the Ministry of the Environment. I suppose it has been said in this House 10,000 times as well.

The minister responds, "Don't totally hang the past on us. We are going to do it better in the future," but in most cases we haven't seen that, at least in the biggest instances this Legislature has been confronted with over the last three or four years. Reed is obviously one of the most serious among them. We certainly don't want to see the sale of the company win any changes for anybody in the strategy which presently is being taken. We would like to see it completed.

Repeatedly, all through these recommendations there is the feeling shared by everyone on the committee that there has been a real lack of strength in enforcement, that the will just wasn't there. That has to change.

The next area I would like to talk about briefly is the whole question of pollution control and pollution abatement costing jobs. This is a thing that quite often gets hurled at those who are most vocal about cleaning up the environment. The ministry has done some studies in the area. One I have here is entitled, The Pollution Control Equipment Industry in Ontario: Historical Performance and Potential and the Possibility of Import Substitution. There are some significant findings in that report and some potentially good ideas, so I think the minister is well aware that all that can happen when we are dealing with pollution control is not necessarily downward, not necessarily loss of jobs. There is a huge potential in the pollution-abatement equipment industry if it is properly encouraged and fostered in this province. There is a lot of potential there.

One looks at things like the English-Wabigoon river system which has now been closed as a tourist area for a couple of years. When one looks at something like that, one thinks and one understands that there are a lot of other job potentials, both recreational and tourist in nature. The minister knows that is already one of the most important industries in the north. We have had the recent reports on acid rain and so on, which indicate we have to start looking at the real damage to vegetation as a result of all of these kinds of things we have allowed to go on for much too long.

All of those are going to start having a negative effect on jobs, as opposed to the cleanup which is always labelled the bogey man, the job killer. I think we should all clearly understand that's just not an acceptable thing to be saying anymore at all.

The committee recommended a number of things about pollution abatement and employment. I think they are all reasonably useful directions in which to be heading. One recommendation is about a senior economist from the ministry undertaking an explicit study of employment effects of the abatement program on the pulp and paper industry.

We are going to continue to get the bogey men that really aren't acceptable in dealing with pollution-abatement programs, if we don't do the studies, if we don't have the facts. In effect, we don't know what we are talking about. These kinds of recommendations are useful and they will point us in the direction where we can get by the clique words and buzz words that keep putting a stall in the process.

There are a number of things in the whole approach the committee took to the Reed situation that distressed me somewhat, one of which, as I suggested at the outset, was the very fact we didn't have the expertise to determine what was feasible and what wasn't. I think this is reflected in the way the committee has continually reported that the ministry should do a study of this and do a study of that, because we just don't really know the answers. Some of the answers are more obvious than others, but I think it's just about time something was done.

We talked about pollution-abatement programs at Reed in Dryden or at Inco. Whenever we are talking about enforcing cleanup orders, we have to know in a factual way what kind of enforcement we can apply. We haven't effectively known that in the past and as a result we haven't got anywhere in understanding why we haven't accomplished what we set out to accomplish. The only understanding that comes out of it is we didn't do it.

Those are the two major areas I wanted to speak to this evening. I am getting a signal that perhaps I haven't used up as much time as I—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Don't worry about it.

Mr. Charlton: At any rate, there are a number of other things discussed under enforcement—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Adjourn early.

Mr. Charlton: We may well do that yet, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will, if you will.

Mr. Charlton: There were a number of other things mentioned under enforcement in the way of application of fines. Although in at least one or two of the recommendations some of the government members dissented, there were a couple of suggestions that were particularly useful at which the minister should have a careful look.

It is suggested, first of all—I think everybody felt this to the greatest degree—the maximum fine should be increased so we reach a more effective level in terms of dealing a real penalty. The committee also recommended in the same section that we should have a look at minimum fines, so we don't get into the situation of some of the fines being so low, for whatever reason, that others can feel hard done by. We have to have a situation where there is an almost automatic minimum penalty.

It is true the government members dissented on that point, but I think it's something in terms of effective enforcement the minister can seriously consider.

The committee also recommended there was a need for an analysis of the ministry's abilities to prosecute and issue automatic penalties against Kimberly-Clark and Boise Cascade. In some instances, it seems to us particularly reasonable that automatic fines could be the most effective way of dealing with the biggest offenders.

We also have some concerns about the whole question of funding for modernization programs and abatement programs. Not everybody is convinced the modernization and abatement program should be paid for out of a grant structure. It would seem reasonable, and I think it's noticeable that it has been stated several times throughout the report, that we like the concept of polluter pays. We also like the concept that if the public is going to put money in, there should be some kind of return on that money. There are all kinds of options in there and the minister knows well what they are. It could be anything from a loan on up, but there should be a return for the taxpayers of Ontario.

Let's face it, the industry itself—although it is probably true it won't last forever—has made some substantial gains in profits over the last year or year and a half. The modernization, at least theoretically, is going to provide them with additional profits. That's what the modernization is all about, making them competitive again. It seems to us if we are going to put public money into that process, the public should be guaranteed some return on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Liberal Party has used up its time; the New Democratic Party has about four minutes left.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Are we agreed there are no other speakers for the other two parties and we will not have a vote at 10:15?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I don't know whether it's possible to agree there are no other speakers. I think the New Democratic Party has four minutes left and I have recognized you.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I appreciate that and I didn't wish to be recognized until after the last speaker, if it is possible. I would like, if I could, to wind up the debate. Perhaps the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) would like to give her four minutes to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) and then I would conclude.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the member for Beaches-Woodbine has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I know, but that party may wish to give the four minutes to the member. I am only trying to get a ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was agreed before the discussion started that the members would split the time and I don't think it is up to the chair to say which party should go first. It is entirely up to the members and up to the chair to recognize the member who is standing. So if somebody wants to stand, I will recognize them.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the members that it was agreed earlier that each party would have an equal amount of time. The Liberal Party's time has expired.

All right, the honourable member for Oxford.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will assume then, Mr. Speaker, that no other member wishes to speak.

Quite frankly, I don't wish to take 35 minutes and I don't want to prolong the debate for the sheer purpose of prolonging the debate. Since we are not calling for a vote and I understand the other parties also are not calling for a vote, I thought we might be able to make the assumption that we had each had our full opportunity to discuss this important committee report and adjourn the House.

I hear no dissenting comments on that, Mr. Speaker. I think that is a reasonable position to put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That's a suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There are a few comments I would like to make this evening relating, first of all, to the very long discussions we had in our committee, not only on the Reed Paper order but all control orders on acid rain and many other subjects. By and large, those hearings, I think, were well worth the effort. Certainly I thought the members of the committee were making a very conscientious effort on all occasions; no doubt about that. The attendance was excellent and by and large the continuity of the debate was extremely worthwhile, so I would say to the committee I found the assistance they gave me helpful and it was appreciated.

Rather than spend a lot of time on a policy statement which could be a reasonable approach to tonight's debate here in the House I will respond to a few of the suggestions made by the previous speakers. I do that simply because so much time has been spent in committee, perhaps more than has been spent ever before, on matters of the environment. Therefore I had lots of opportunity to make policy statements and quite a few were made during that time.

The first question I would like to address is perhaps to the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), who talked about the fines not being sufficient. I know he has made that case several times and I must say to him I am beginning to accept his position on that more and more.

I think there is something that must come before that, and it is just this simple: There is absolutely no value in the Minister of the Environment asking this Legislature to apply stiffer fines until we have in place an obvious enforcement policy. Why ask for high fines if we are not going to enforce? That seems very logical.

Mr. Speaker, if I could I would suggest to this House, through you, sir, that indeed there has been a real change—perhaps too subtle to appreciate but a very real change—in the enforcement attitudes of this ministry in the last while. I tell you I shied away from enforcement in the early days—and I say days, not even months—of my term of office. I don't think anyone appreciates laying a heavy hand on individuals. It seems easy when you're in opposition to make the suggestion that it's only big companies which need enforcement. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is not only large companies, it is sometimes also a single individual who needs a heavy enforcement policy. So let's not kid ourselves—

Mr. Warner: It's easier to get tough with a single individual.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere would be quiet for just a second and try to get the continuity of this, he might see an emerging pattern that's extremely important in this province.

We do have a large number of enforcements now proceeding through the courts—a large number. That's the way it should be. I discussed this very issue with my deputy today and he tells me the fines being levied of recent days are increasing in their magnitude. He tells me, as well, this trend is one that's easily documented. I'd be glad to do it for this House.

More particularly, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if we are not successful in the lower courts, we are appealing and taking it to the higher courts—and I can document this. That, I think, is getting out very clearly the message that the Ministry of the Environment is determined to enforce those orders they have put into our society. That happens to be absolutely true.

Mr. Warner: Hollow words. Inco is quaking in its boots.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Any time the member wants he can take our control orders and see how they've been enforced. If he'd come to committee he would have had a one-by-one recording of how we are enforcing our control orders and will continue to do so.

I make no bones about it, enforcement is the key and that change is perhaps subtle. I believe it's now less than subtle. It's becoming fairly obvious and will be more and more obvious as times goes on. In response to the member for Beaches-Woodbine, I think she made a case that our amount of total suspended solids have not lessened in the years between 1978 and 1979, nor has the biological oxygen content. That's not quite all that should be said on that subject. They're marginally reduced but, more particularly, production is up.

In other words, the challenge that faces our industry is larger because of the increased production. We would expect therefore, to see a correspondingly larger amount of both of those items I mentioned, but we've seen marginal decreases. Therefore, I think the relative position is a significant decrease in our loading, if we make the comparison between the production and the actual loading going into the environment.

She also suggested we needed a little different approach on the public input, and that it didn't work in the committee. I totally agree with her. At the end of the discussions on Reed Paper I did not think the process had worked well. I think it did bring to the public a good deal more information than they had ever been given before.

The member for Hamilton Mountain suggested it was too technical. Yes, that was one of the flaws we saw in that approach. It's hardly appropriate to put all that technical information in front of a committee not trained, nor with the expertise to make judgements.

On the other hand, it did give our ministry staff a very clear opportunity to display their considerable talents and knowledge of the technical requirements of a ministry as complex as my own. I guess that brought into clear focus that many of the environment issues of today are difficult to deal with simply because they're so complex and yet so frequently emotional. It makes it very difficult to arrive at a balanced judgement.

On that basis, I would be more than ready to agree that the approach taken by referring a control order to a committee of this Legislature is not a successful way of handling it. It was an excellent experiment; I think it was the right thing to do at that particular time. We learned a great deal from that experiment; one of things we learned was not to repeat it.

I say to the member we are coming in with a much better idea on how to deal with control orders in the public forum. I am committed to the concept of dealing with control orders in a public way. In the near future we will put on the record—perhaps not in the House, I hope it will be before the next time we meet in this Legislature in the new session next spring—a formal statement on our abatement policy. As a matter of fact I have already seen the first draft of that policy. I have made a few changes in it, but I think it is close to being ready to be put on the record for all to see.

I think this is a welcome addition to the policy of our ministry. It is something that will, I think, help the members to understand where we are going, what we are doing and the approach we take to control orders; and that will be valuable.

I was pleased the member suggested that the Environmental Assessment Board was a competent body to hear this case. I am not sure we are going to accept her advice to go to an environmental board hearing on control orders in the future, but I was pleased to know she recognized that body was such a fine, independent body we could trust it with making the decisions on the cases we referred to it so frequently.

The member also wanted to talk a little bit about whether Great Lakes Forest Products Limited would have orders similar to those issued to Reed Paper Limited. I am prepared to say to her this evening that we will be arranging for a new control order on that company in the not-too-distant future, I suspect. It is our intention to set up a public meeting in Dryden where the company can put forth its intentions regarding environmental matters.

We will not be dealing with this in committee, as we did with Reed Paper Limited, we will not be doing it before the Environmental Assessment Board, but we will be doing it in public and we will be doing it in the community of Dryden. Indeed, that perhaps is something that is also starting to become very clear, that we think the place to hear these discussions on our control orders is not always here at Queen's Park in Toronto, but in the communities where the residents, the company employees and the company officials have a chance to make a case; in other words where there is a very wide opportunity for the fullest participation in the discussions that could logically centre around a control order. Perhaps before many weeks pass a formal statement of our policy will be put forward.

I shared with the House the pleasure of listening to the member for Rainy River. (Mr. T. P. Reid). He was in extremely fine fettle tonight. I sent him a short note saying that to the best of my knowledge Elmer Sopha would have been very proud of him. He really put on a stellar performance for us, Mr. Speaker. I think he would have been second only to the fine congressman from Minnesota and he as much as said Minnesota has excellent politicians.

I thought the gentlemen who was here at our recent acid rain conference was one of the best delegates one could possibly have. He was engaging, charming and fluently bilingual, if members can imagine that. I am sure the honourable member would have been impressed. There was only one problem with his presentation. He talked about the problem of acid rain better than anyone else I heard at the conference, but the bottom line was he was not able, even with all his brilliance, and he was brilliant, to persuade Congress to increase their activity against acid rain. Indeed, he shared with me his great disappointment that they had cut the budget while, at the same time, we in Ontario had markedly increased our budget to deal with that most important of subjects: acid rain.

Although I don't claim to have his great eloquence; I don't even claim to have the great headlines, as the member for Rainy River suggests—

Mr. Gaunt: You get your share.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I get my share—some good; some bad. What we are doing is taking a very workmanlike approach to dealing with a very complex item.

In conclusion, I seem to hear from so many members that there is no enforcement. Perhaps if I could put on the record tonight only one thing, and I could rest my case with that, it would be the tremendous number of cases that now are in court. As a matter of fact, I would underline that by saying I personally took a new approach, and one that surprised a fair number of people, in that I went into the court personally to try, to the very best of my ability, to make the court realize how serious we are about enforcement.

The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere wouldn't ask me the right questions at the right time. I suspect he would have said, with sarcasm, "What little person did you attack?" It was not a little person. It was the second or third largest paper company in Canada. I went there to say, as forcefully as I could, to the officer of the court, "We are dead serious about enforcing this control order."

Mr. Warner: Did you win?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It so happens the case has not yet been decided. But if we lose—

Mr. Warner: Your track record—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We've done very well in our track record this last year and a half—very well indeed.

Mr. Warner: Tell that to the people in the Sudbury basin.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the member wants to go case by case, I'll be glad to debate it any time. We've lost a few, but we've won many. That's the point. The member does not give us credit for the many times we win, and that disappoints me. I understand the logic of the position the member takes, but some day he is going to have to accept what reality is: We win far more than we lose.

Mr. Warner: That's nonsense, and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is not nonsense. The trouble is, the member keeps making those kinds of interjections about "nonsense." I've heard him say it a million times in this House. He never backs it up with fact. Let him get the record out and show me where I am wrong. The member cannot show me where I am wrong in that regard.

I think there is another part of enforcement. I wish the House were filled or that I had the gift to make this case as well as it should be made. I conclude on this point: Yes, there is an important aspect of enforcement that can only be done in the courts. But there's another important aspect that's worrying me even more.

As we come up with ideas on how to treat the problems of environmental concerns in this province—with ideas that could be put into place; not things we need to go to court on, but facilities, methods and concepts—and as we try to put those in place, we find invariably when we go into a locality, they say one simple thing, "That's a good idea—but not here."

That may take a little too much personal challenge for the member who sneers across the aisle. It might take too much of a challenge for him to bite that one. I don't know where we need more help in this province than for all of us to stand, look at the severity of the problem and realize that, unless slowly but surely we individually take our responsibilities, we'll go down the drain in the truest sense of the word saying, "It's a good idea—but not here."

I was in a riding last night. It was a very difficult meeting. I thought I was putting on a proposal for a much-improved liquid-waste facility. I was really disturbed—I was really sorry—to hear the people of that area say to me, as all other areas say to me, “We would sooner live with untreated waste being dumped we don’t know where than take a treatment facility that we can be sure of in our riding.”

It’s partly because we haven’t put the case well enough. I’ll take my share of that responsibility.

Ms. Gigantes: Because people don’t trust you.

Mr. Warner: With good reason.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That could very well be my fault, but there comes a point in time when the kind of comment just hurled across the House will destroy this province. We will have a silent spring.

I said to that person last night—I said to that crowded room last night—“If you don’t trust me, here’s what I will do. I will put on duty, 24 hours a day, a person who will police, who will test, who will guard what is going on in this facility. Not only that, I will give you, the local people the opportunity to veto that person’s name. If you don’t believe me, if you don’t trust me, you can veto it and we’ll put another person forward until we find a person you can trust.”

Even with the unconditional commitment on my part that we will put on that site a policeman they could trust, they still said to me, “It’s a good idea—but not here.”

Mr. Warner: Where was this, Harry?

Mr. Conway: Where was this?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There is no problem in telling the members where it was and it is happening all over our province. It’s happening in my riding. It’s happening in the members’ ridings.

Mr. Warner: Where was this last night?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The meeting last night was in Harwich township, down near Blenheim. But I’m not picking on those people. That’s not my point at all.

I’m saying to the House it is typical of the approach of the people of this province that we take, understandably so, a very narrow view. But that very narrow view is perhaps going to establish some Love Canals in this province unless the Ministry of the Environment is given the opportunity to put some facilities in place.

It’s not going to be easy to do that. We’ve tried to open up the process as much as we can. We’ll put information services in. We’ll hold open houses in schools. We’ll do whatever the members ask. We’ll give the kind of guarantee we gave last night. But I ask the members of this House to stop saying they can’t trust us. It’s an easy, rhetorical statement, but if we continue to take that irresponsible approach I am very concerned about the welfare of the total province.

We must solve our liquid-waste problems. We must solve our industrial-polluting problems and we must do that by enforcement—yes, of course we must. But after we have demonstrated leadership in enforcement—and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, in a year and four or five months I’ve tried to do that—I think the time has come for all of us in Ontario to bite the bullet a little bit and say there are some things we must do as responsible citizens, as responsible members, as responsible persons so we don’t pass on a heritage that’s so damaged it might not be viable.

I can’t share with you enough of my emotion on how serious these kinds of problems are, Mr. Speaker. I hope before it is too late all of us will understand that if we want to play in the world of the environment the short-term, good political approach, the long term will be the destruction of our society.

As I said to the people of that particular community last night, if I am not permitted to do some of the things we are trying to do, when the day comes, when the silent spring is here, I will not be able to answer. I will leave it on the conscience of those who said, “We can’t trust you, you are being too soft.”

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to throw those things across this House. What worries me so much is short-term, myopic, political judgements may destroy the finest community God gave anyone and that is called the province of Ontario.

I challenge the members of this House to look anew at their individual responsibilities and accept them, because we can’t do it by ourselves within this ministry. We need such things as a change in attitude towards lifestyle that has been, perhaps, a little too lax. All of us have squandered some of our resources. All of us are to blame and I think we could all improve. It is time all of us took a long, hard look at our lifestyles and tried to conserve and tried to stop some of the obvious things that are destroying our environment.

I plead, as hard as it is possible for me to plead, that we take our individual responsibilities to protect our environment far more than we have in the past. If we don't, I don't care how well the ministry functions, there will not be success.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding there are four minutes left. I will hear the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

Mr. Bounsall: Four minutes, Mr. Speaker, is a virtually impossible restriction to put on an ex-university professor, who doesn't get warmed up shy of 50 minutes.

Let me say on a personal basis there is no minister in this House I would rather believe in, who has sincerity, who is one I can trust, than this particular minister occupying that particular portfolio. One point he made in the exchange that occurred while the minister was speaking was he mentioned winning more than losing in the last year and a half, and he asked us to inspect the record.

The minister has the record. Rather than our going through the exercise of putting on the Order Paper a question that asks precisely that, will he table for this House the number of enforcements he has tried to make in the last year and a half; which are successes and which are failures and the status of each one of them? Moreover will he tell us not just what is achieved through the court in the way of fines but what has been achieved in terms of the environment in each of those individual cases of which he has spoken?

What environmental advancement has been made in terms of either the air or their industrial liquid pollutants? Can I ask the minister to do that as a partial restoration of our trust, in our continuing trust?

The minister made allusions in his comments to the way in which this open committee of the Legislature, the standing committee, dealt with the pollution control order as it applied to Reed. May I remind the minister, of the first time my trust in him was severely shaken? At the beginning of those hearings, out of the blue with no warning whatsoever, with no discussion with either of the two opposition parties, with no discussion with anyone—it did not emerge clearly for two days what kind of game the minister was up to—it was disclosed that somehow this committee, with no preparation and no warning, was going to decide what was going to happen at Reed.

That is no way for the minister, to behave, in order to continue to have, or to gain, the trust of members of this House. I might say it was partially that feeling of mistrust and of having been put into a can't-win situation on the part of each member of that committee which caused that committee to be as fractious as it was for so long. If the minister wants our trust, he should not play games with committees of this House as he did last January, because that is what happened right at the beginning of referral to our committee. It really took us a couple of days to find out that is what he was up to, and that certainly did not help the committee to settle down and come to a consensus. I hope the minister has learned from that and does not go through that procedure again.

Secondly, on that committee—it occurred about 10:28 one evening on, I think, the last day of those hearings—I said to the minister and to the committee—I did not put it in a motion—there was no way the committee could come to grips with what should be done with Reed in the absence of that committee being provided with a financial analyst and one who was expert in the technical side of the pulp and paper. If that committee had had that assistance it could have come to grips with the problem and provided an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Bounsall: One last sentence, Mr. Speaker. That is what is going to have to be provided to the citizens in their involvement in any pollution control order if they are going to understand just exactly what is involved. The minister should face that and be prepared to pay for that kind of expert help to the community groups.

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Villeneuve has moved the motion for the adoption of parts 3 and 4 of the final report of the standing resources development committee.

Motion agreed to.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF PEEL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the order for second reading of Bill 158, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, 1973, be withdrawn and the bill be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 149, An Act to amend the Land Titles Act;

Bill 150, An Act to amend the Registry Act;

Bill 159, An Act to amend the Family Law Reform Act, 1978;

Bill 161, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act;

Bill 162, An Act to amend the Child Welfare Act, 1978;

Bill 170, An Act to amend the Education Act, 1974;

Bill 171, An Act to amend the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act;

Bill 175, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act;

Bill 177, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971;

Bill 178, An Act to provide for the Enforcement of Interprovincial Subpoenas;

Bill 179, The Powers of Attorney Act, 1979;

Bill 181, An Act to provide for the Consolidation and Revision of the Statutes;

Bill 182, An Act to provide for the Consolidation and Revision of the Regulations.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 13, I'd like to indicate to the House the business for tomorrow and next week.

Tomorrow, the House will be in committee of supply to consider the estimates of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller).

On Monday, December 10, in the afternoon the House will again, in committee of supply, consider the estimates of the Treasurer. In the evening in committee it will consider Bills 77, 176, 180 and 173, and then, if time permits, there will be second reading and committee stage as required on Bills 1, 174, and 154.

On Tuesday, December 11, in the afternoon the House will consider legislation; third reading of Bill 24 and second reading of Bill 127 until 6 p.m. In the evening we will consider Bills 194 and 195, followed by legislation that was not completed on Monday evening.

On Wednesday, December 12, the justice, general government and resources development committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, December 13, the House will meet in the morning to do the following concurrences, possibly subject to change as the week progresses. As of now, the list is Transportation and Communications, Consumer and Commercial Relations, Community and Social Services, and Education. The regular question period and opening business of the House will be in the afternoon as usual and the House will consider ballot items 11 and 12. In the evening the House will debate the motion for adoption of the first and second readings of the standing statutory instruments committee followed, if time permits, by budget debate.

On Friday, December 14, the House will continue the estimates of the Treasurer in committee of supply.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the interim answers to questions 358 and 365 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 5250.)

The House adjourned at 10:15 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 5249)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

NURSING HOMES

358. Mr. Cooke: Would the Minister of Health table the net and gross profit figures for all nursing homes licensed under the Nursing Home Act in Ontario for the last financial year? Would the minister also table the number of beds and type—for example private, semi-private, ward and extended care—at each of the nursing homes licensed under the Nursing Home Act in Ontario? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our interim response to Order Paper question No. 358 is as follows: My ministry is presently reviewing this question and we anticipate a response will be available by mid-March.

RENT SUPPLEMENTS

365. Mr. Duksza: Would the Minister of Housing please table whatever information has been prepared by his ministry or is otherwise known to his ministry regarding the current cost of rent supplementation subsidies to private landlords in Ontario; what is the range of amounts paid out monthly in series of $50 gradations and what is the number of such payments in each category; and what projections have been made of the increase in the number of rent supplements in private accommodation, the rates of average individual monthly supplements and the total cost of this program for the next five, 10, 20, 30 and 40 years? Additionally, would the minister indicate in which communities there are presently private rent supplemented units and how many are in each community? Furthermore, how many supplemented units are there per building on average in ranges of one to five units, six to 10 units, 11 to 15, 16 to 20, 21 to 25, 26 to 30, 31 to 35, more than 36? What is the average percentage occupancy of these ranges of supplemented units in terms of the total number of units available in the private apartment buildings? (Tabled November 27, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The information requested is extensive and will require some time to compile. The ministry will, therefore, provide a comprehensive response by December 21, 1979, approximately. Trusting this will be satisfactory.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

LIBEL AND SLANDER LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time in the proceedings today I will be introducing two important amendments to our law of libel and slander.

The first amendment modifies the defence of fair comment. This defence permits the expression of an opinion upon a matter of public interest, irrespective of the defamatory nature of the opinion, if the opinion expressed is one which its maker honestly holds and which is based upon proven facts.

The amendment ensures that this defence is available to the media when they publish the opinions of others, for example as in letters-to-the-editor columns or man-on-the-street interviews, without having to be able to prove in court that the author actually held the opinion expressed.

The amendment allows the publisher of an opinion expressed by another person to rely upon the defence of fair comment, if the opinion expressed was one which a person might honestly have held. This amendment arises from the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Cherneskey versus Armadale Publishers and really reflects the minority view of the court in that case.

A similar amendment has been requested by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada and at my request it is being considered by other provincial governments in the interest of uniformity across the country.

The second amendment broadens the definition of "broadcaster" in the Libel and Slander Act to bring cable television operators within the scope of the term. The existing definition does not encompass cable television because cable was virtually unknown when it was enacted. The Libel and Slander Act contains numerous provisions in respect of newspapers and broadcasters which recognize the special role played by the media in a democratic society.

Cable television operators are required by law to provide facilities for community broadcasting. Yet defamatory statements in cable television can produce legal results different from statements made on regular television. The proposed amendment would rectify this anomaly.

These amendments are the result of extensive discussions I have had with the Ontario Press Council, the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters and many individuals in organizations concerned with communications issues. I believe this legislation has the support of all interest groups in this field. However, I want to stress that this legislation is being introduced for one key purpose—to strengthen freedom of speech and to encourage the free discussion of matters of public concern. I believe that the majority decision in the Cherneskey case does constitute an unnecessary and a potentially harmful limitation on those fundamental freedoms. I have no doubt that to stifle the right to communicate is to eviscerate democracy.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to report about the termination of the illegal strike by correctional officers. I wish to report that the correctional institutions across the province are returning to normal following the end of the illegal strike by correctional officers which began on Monday morning at approximately 7 a.m. and ended late Wednesday night.

I wish to pay tribute and to express sincere appreciation on behalf of myself, the Ministry of Correctional Services and the citizens of this province, to the dedicated staff who have manned these institutions throughout this illegal strike. The staff included managerial personnel at the institutions, staff in the bargaining unit who chose to obey the law and not to go out on strike and a variety of managerial staff at all levels, up to and including executive director rank, from our central, regional and area offices.

I wish also to express my appreciation to the regional and main office staff who did an outstanding job in co-ordinating and directing the overall ministry response. In addition, I wish to express thanks to the staff of the Civil Service Commission and my cabinet colleagues for their efforts to resolve this situation.

The people manning the institutions worked long hours under trying conditions, and, in some instances, at unfamiliar tasks, with limited amounts of sleep to ensure that the security of institutions was maintained and the public protected in keeping with the ministry's legal responsibilities. I am proud to report that these staff members met the challenge of this difficult situation with dedication and patience and without complaint. Everyone pitched in to try to maintain operations within institutions on a normal a level as possible.

One has only to look at the record over the period of the nine consecutive shifts which were manned during this illegal strike to realize what a superb team effort was put forward by all involved. Fifty-two correctional institutions across the province continued to run smoothly with no serious problems throughout this period.

A special word should be said about our staff who remained on duty after the illegal strike was launched. I am sure it was a difficult decision, when they knew that feelings were running high and that their actions might bring disapproval from some of their colleagues who took part in the illegal strike. I commend them for their courage and their sense of responsibility for remaining on the job. Now that the strike is over, it is my hope that the officers who walked out will respect the decision of fellow officers who remained at their posts because they felt it was their legal and moral duty to do so.

Although there were no major problems in any of our institutions, disruption of the normal routines and a reduction in regular services were bound to occur. In some instances there were delays or disruptions in preparing inmates for court appearances, visits between inmates and relatives and the preparation and delivery of food services. In this connection, the inmates throughout the province acted in a mature and responsible manner. There were few incidents of inmates attempting to take advantage of the unusual situation which existed and of the fact that some supervisory staff were unfamiliar with some of the institutional routines.

As minister, I have found it necessary on two occasions during the past year to be highly critical of the behaviour of inmates who acted irresponsibly in precipitating and participating in disturbances at two correctional institutions. In both instances, it was a minority of the inmate population who acted irresponsibly and the fact that the majority of them are prepared to conduct themselves in a reasonable manner was confirmed earlier this week when inmates responded to the situation with patience.

I wish to register here a certain sense of disappointment that a large number of the correctional staff chose to participate in an illegal strike. Since coming to this ministry, I have had a great deal of sympathy for the correctional officers' concern over the wide differential between their pay and that of correctional staff in other jurisdictions and of the Ontario Provincial Police officers. Prior to the illegal strike, I expressed my feelings in this regard and my willingness to seek special wage consideration for correctional staff in upcoming negotiations between the government and the Ontario Public Service Employees Union. As honourable members will recall, the government made a formal offer to send the issue of a separate bargaining category for correctional officers to binding arbitration and to give special wage consideration to correctional staff prior to the union taking strike action.

Notwithstanding my disappointment that some of the union members chose illegal action to back demands on this matter, I am pleased that the illegal strike has ended and that correctional staff have returned to their posts. I am especially pleased that the return to normal at institutions seems to be proceeding without rancour between those who maintained the institutions during the past few days and the correctional officers who took part in the illegal strike. It is my sincere hope that the differences and the high emotions of the last few days will be allowed to subside in order that all staff, particularly those in institutions, will restore and build a new sense of teamwork and esprit de corps.

The Ministry of Correctional Services has a responsibility to the public to provide programs of treatment and training for inmates aimed at assisting them to become law-abiding and contributing members of our society. I am urging all staff in the ministry to rise to the challenge of forgetting the differences of the last few days so we can get on with the job of meeting our responsibilities to the public.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I have a statement but, unfortunately, copies have not yet been delivered for distribution to other members of the House as per the rules. I wonder if I might have permission to proceed or we could revert later.

Mr. Speaker: Permission granted? Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: No?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Okay, let's wait. Let's wait.

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Mr. S. Smith: I would have been happy to allow the minister to make his statement at this time but I will ask a question and he may well make his statement by way of reply. I want to ask the minister a series of questions that have to do with oil, gas and the National Energy Board figures.

The first question is really this: How could the minister repeatedly assure the House of his confidence concerning the so-called "tight, but manageable" situation with regard to heating oil based on National Energy Board figures, as he repeatedly did on three or four different occasions in the House, when, at the very same time—on August 24, on October 3 and on November 5—he was in fact expressing very grave concern about the reliability and accuracy of the very figures provided by the National Energy Board?

Was he not, in a sense, providing information which could have been misleading to those who heard it, emphasizing his confidence about the situation when he was privately and secretly telling Ottawa he had grave doubts about the accuracy and reliability of the National Energy Board figures? How can he justify his behaviour in this House, given the fact that he was telling us one thing and telling Ottawa something else?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Leader of the Opposition has raised this question this morning because it does provide me with an opportunity to clarify what I think has been a very unfortunate interpretation of the situation by himself and others who took part in the debate yesterday. Certainly what I wanted to convey and consistently tried to convey is that I was bringing the House up to date in response to questions with respect to the situation as it was at that time. On the assessment of the information I had available, I used the cautious expression that the supply situation was tight, but it was manageable. I don't think one should take any great joy even in that particular evaluation.

As I mentioned yesterday during the course of the debate the information I have to date on the supply of heating oil to Ontario for the coming winter indicates that, barring abnormalities, there should be no shortages. In keeping with the question which has been directed to me by the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to repeat at this time that at no time have I ever said that I trusted any one source of information over another.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Globe lying: "Trusts Oil Firms' Data Over PM's"?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I didn't write the headline.

Mr. MacDonald: It was a fair interpretation of your speech.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I leave to the honourable House leader for the New Democratic Party the assignment to reread the debate of yesterday afternoon over the weekend. I'll stand by my contribution to that debate. I know he'll have to read it because he wasn't here to take part in it. I know the lack of interest he has.

At no time did I say I trusted any one source of information over another. I did indicate there was some conflicting information and I was personally concerned over the potential for confusion which resulted in the mind of the public. At no time have I considered there was anything like an impending crisis in petroleum product supply.

The National Energy Board in particular provides us with figures which are certainly more up to date than the information we used to get from Statistics Canada. I understand there used to be reliance on those figures.

All I was trying to point out was it's the use that's made of that information, how it's fed into the model, the estimates with respect to demand and the ultimate projections that come from that information, about which I was expressing some concern. The members will recall during that exchange I was indicating there would be great advantage in the federal government re-enacting the function of the technical advisory committee so there could be this combination of federal-industry co-operation in evaluating the information as of that time and updating it. Keep in mind we have this information coming out a little later and I'm told there are frequent changes in this market.

In summary, the information I have shared with the House in response to questions has been as a result of my monitoring the information received from the National Energy Board, information I gather from the private petroleum companies and information available from the federal ministry. Making my own assessment with respect to that has prompted me to give the answers I have given. That would be the approach I would continue to take in order to act responsibly in the public interest and to give the public the information to which they are entitled in order to formulate their own conclusions with respect to this very important matter of energy supply.

Mr. Speaker: That answer took four and a half minutes.

Mr. S. Smith: I had a supplementary which had to do with the reliability of the NEB on the matter of natural gas surplus which is used as the basis for export. I notice, however, from the statement which the minister intended to make he has a position, belatedly, which the government wishes to take. If we were to revert to statements now, would I then be able to ask my supplementary after hearing the minister's position or would I have missed my opportunity?

Mr. Speaker: Do we have the consent of the House to revert to statements?

Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy. This time will be deducted from the question period.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

ENERGY EXPORTS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on the decision by the federal cabinet yesterday with respect to the export of additional volumes of natural gas to the United States.

As members know, the federal cabinet has given approval for new gas exports to the United States of 3.75 trillion cubic feet of gas over an eight-year period. The decision to allow the export of this large quantity of natural gas at a time when the oil and gas pricing policy agreement is still not completed between Ottawa and Alberta is most disappointing and disturbing to Ontario. It is the position of this government—

Mr. Cassidy: That's not what you said before.

Hon. Mr. Welch: There's nothing inconsistent in this statement. The record is quite clear. Our representations to the National Energy Board and the policy papers on this are all there for the member to read and he knows it.

Mr. Cassidy: We didn't hear you say that before.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do you want to hear the statement?

Mr. Cassidy: But there wasn't a word before. You keep on saying it—

Hon. Mr. Welch: The reason the member is shouting is because his argument is so weak he thinks volume will compensate for lack of content, that's his problem.

Mr. Martel: Why are you shouting?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am shouting so that the official opposition can hear. They can't hear because of all the noise to their left. I want also the people of Brock riding to hear. I keep on getting comments back home as to whether or not I'm really standing up in the House and I want to make sure they know I'm here so I'm making these sounds.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Where was I? I notice there aren't any comments coming from the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham).

It is the position of this government that natural gas supply and pricing policy cannot and should not be decided in isolation from our total energy policy. We have stated that Canada's natural gas pricing and supply policy should include the following elements:

The price of natural gas should not be tied to the price of crude oil; opportunities should be sought to lower the price of natural gas to consumers and encourage them to convert to natural gas; there should continue to be a single Alberta border price for natural gas, adjusted for transportation.

Canadian consumers should have their long-term, 25-years' requirements of natural gas supply protected by means of an appropriate formula. Canada's natural gas supply forecast should not include frontier natural gas until that gas becomes available for the domestic market and should not be used to justify exports of natural gas from western Canada. There should be greatly increased exploration and development in the arctic and other frontier areas in order to prove the additional reserves which would justify the construction of frontier natural gas transportation facilities in time to meet Canada's future natural gas needs.

Additional natural gas exports to the United States—I think it is very important this be reunderlined—should only be considered when Canada's future energy needs have been assured. Compensation for the consumer, should exports of any surplus natural gas from lower-cost conventional reserves be authorized when that means future domestic requirements will have to be met from higher-cost frontier reserves.

Ms. Gigantes: What does that mean? What gobbledegook is this?

Hon. Mr. Welch: For an honourable member that can't tell the dates with respect to statements she's using, I'll be glad to explain that particular paragraph a little later.

Using September information for October purposes, notwithstanding the intervention of York South and trying to gloss that over, I think it's very interesting; and I understand the member's federal colleagues are even being attracted to use it as well.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege. The minister is suggesting I could not tell the date attached to the material I received from the NEB. Indeed, I could tell the date. The NEB had written "end of October" on it. If the minister has any concerns about who can't tell dates, perhaps he could address them to the NEB.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, what kind of gobbledegook was that?

There should be dedication of at least part of the "export price differential" from any new exports of natural gas to develop Canadian crude oil self-sufficiency.

As members know, including the House leader of the New Democratic Party, Ontario appeared before the National Energy Board on August 7 of this year, on behalf of the consumers of this province. If I may, I should like to quote a few excerpts from our closing argument to the NEB, as follows:

"The selection of a policy on an individual energy source in the absence of a thorough analysis of all alternative energy sources is unlikely to result in the best energy policy.

"In Ontario's view, the question as to whether additional supplies of natural gas should be exported should be determined only after other critical energy issues facing this country have been resolved, specifically the supply of crude oil, its price and the price of natural gas to Canadians. These are some of the matters which influence greatly the appropriateness of a decision to export.

"To approve natural gas exports at this time would be out of phase with these other essential decisions.

"If one could restrict oneself to the narrow question of natural gas surplus alone, Ontario would urge that a conservative approach by the board be taken and would support strict application of the board's three-pronged surplus test. In addition, once the tests have been made Ontario would urge the board to satisfy itself that an export of natural gas at this time is in Canada's national interest. To do so, this would mean that the benefits of the exports must decisively outweigh the disadvantages, which latter obviously would include an appreciation of the acceleration of the time when consumers must depend on higher-priced frontier natural gas. However, Ontario does not consider that natural gas exports can be considered alone. The problem is energy, not a particular form of energy.

"Ontario believes the National Energy Board should defer its decision until such time as there is a national energy policy in place."

In summary, Ontario believes the decision of the federal government to allow additional exports of natural gas at this time to be premature and inappropriate.

Mr. Riddell: If I might be allowed a point of order before my leader asks a supplementary, I thought it was agreed by this House that all members should be given a copy of a ministerial statement, particularly one as important as this.

Some of the responses to the interjections and the minister's digressions take up more time than the reading of the statement itself. Those of us who take these matters seriously and don't particularly go along with the levity that is worked into the statement would then be given an opportunity to read through the statement and frame questions they might wish to ask of the minister.

I wonder if we could have copies of these ministerial statements sent to all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member knows that copies of the statement weren't ready when we called that order. It was only by unanimous consent of the House that we were allowed to revert to statements. It wasn't possible to make copies available to all members. The only time we will allow a statement to be circulated generally is when it can be done before the House begins in the morning or at two o'clock in the afternoon. It creates too much confusion to have copies of five statements put on every desk. There would be chaos.

ENERGY EXPORTS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a supplementary question of the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker. He must surely recall the repeated urgings that came from this side of the House that Ontario take a clear and definite position against the further export of cheap natural gas from Alberta to the United States of America. We have repeatedly asked him to emphasize that position before the National Energy Board made its decision.

The minister kept making reference to the report he gave to the energy board on Ontario's intervention. That report simply stated if the board in its wisdom thought there was a real surplus, then that surplus could be exported, when he knows perfectly well there is no such concept.

The question, therefore, is this: Why has the minister waited until the day after the National Energy Board decision to export further natural gas to stand up suddenly and say Ontario stands resolutely against it? Why didn't he take the opportunity to make that clear at the first ministers' conference? Why didn't he make it clear at the energy board? Why didn't he take every repeated invitation we gave him to put Ontario's position on record, instead of weaseling and waiting until the day afterwards and getting on the bandwagon of what he knows is a political issue? [10:30]

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, it has been obvious to the government for some time that the Leader of the Opposition has indeed been attempting, as best he could, to rush onto centre stage to identify himself with government policy in so far as energy matters are concerned. In other words, what he has been doing is reading very carefully what the government policy is, seeing how popular it is and saying, "Me too; this is our idea."

Anyone who professes to be the leader of a political party in this province, who doesn't understand the system and doesn't recognize that this government made the position on behalf of the people of Ontario prior to a decision—it's all there as a matter of record—yet, who could stand up and test the intelligence of the people of Ontario by suggesting that we waited until the day after to make our position clear is absolutely beyond my understanding.

I think the honourable member should really consider his position politically in this province. We will be glad to send him memoranda from time to time to tell him what we're doing so he can identify himself with it, if he finds that of some advantage.

Mr. Cassidy: If I could attempt to get away from the histrionics of the minister and of the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Leader of the Opposition try to contain himself?

Mr. S. Smith: It's very difficult.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I draw to your attention, and I remind the minister, that on many occasions the government has refused to take issue with the formula under which the National Energy Board has now decided this 3.75 trillion cubic feet of natural gas can be exported to the United States. The minister's posturings don't hold water because Ontario did not challenge that principle of exports of more than 600 million barrels of oil equivalent.

I ask the minister now, in view of the fact that he has gone public with this opposition, is the government prepared to support and to make time in the proceedings of this Legislature for a unanimous motion of this House which would condemn the federal cabinet decision approving the export order and call on the federal government to rescind the export approval that was given yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I really feel under the circumstances that everyone is quite satisfied that the position on behalf of the people of Ontario has been pursued vigorously. We have made our position quite clear before the National Energy Board. The position of this government is well understood and the honourable member knows it. All he wants to do under the circumstances is some posturing to identify himself with the position which is quite clearly understood in the national forum.

Mr. S. Smith: Since the minister's position has always stated clearly—even what he told us today—that he is in favour of only those exports which the National Energy Board believed to be genuinely surplus—that was his position, the Premier (Mr. Davis) repeated it many times when I asked him about this, and we said there should be no such concept of surplus, does the minister remember that?—and he stated that if the NEB said it was surplus, it was okay with him, how could he have stated that, when at the same time he did not believe the NEB's figures and had grave doubts about their capacity to derive statistical analyses in matters of oil and gas? How could he rely on the NEB and then come up a day afterwards and say they were wrong?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition continues to misinterpret the remarks I have made with respect to the information from the National Energy Board. I'll leave it there because I'm sure he finds it convenient to continue to misunderstand my position with respect to that information.

The natural gas policy of this government is clearly set out and says the Canadian consumers should have their long-term requirements of natural gas supply protected by means of a formula. I would remind the honourable member to take a look at the statement. That's the position. It always has been the position—I assume I'm answering the member's question—

Mr. Speaker: You are still answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Under those circumstances, we talk in terms of natural gas exports to the United States under existing contracts continuing to be honoured, but before there is any change we should see the development of a national energy policy of which the question of the export of this resource would be a part.

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm sorry, it's a matter of privilege. Does the leader of the third party mind?

The minister continues to say I have somehow deliberately misinterpreted the statement he made about National Energy Board figures. I would quote from yesterday's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The very fact there is obviously a difference in interpretation or a difference of opinion really doesn't constitute a point of order or a point of privilege. There may be honest differences, but I don't think we should waste the time of the House to reiterate what our particular positions are.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, he imputed motives.

Mr. Speaker: No, he didn't. I listened very carefully and there was no imputation of motive at all. There is an honest difference of opinion and no more than that.

The member for Ottawa Centre with a final supplementary.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister not aware that the surplus the National Energy Board is now allowing to be exported to the United States was created by a change in its test as to what the surplus is and that Ontario on no occasion has challenged the change to a less conservative test which permitted those exports? Does the minister not agree, therefore, that what Ontario has done by its inaction in defending the consumers of this province has been to line up with Joe Clark in selling out Canadian natural gas and selling out to oil companies that want to make a profit in the US?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would remind the leader of the New Democratic Party of a couple of lines in the statement which I was given the opportunity to read to the House today. I said we found the decision "disappointing and disturbing." As well, at the end of the statement I told the House, "Ontario believes the decision of the federal government to allow additional exports of natural gas at this time to be premature and inappropriate."

I would draw the member's attention to the August policy paper of this government when we set out quite clearly our acceptance of the three tests established by the National Energy Board: the current reserves test; the current deliverability test; and the future deliverability test for determining the surplus of natural gas available for export. Having said that, I would remind the member for Ottawa Centre, who, in fairness, would want to take this discussion one step further, we said there should be no decision with respect to the export of new gas until such time as other matters were clearly in place. I think that's a very important matter to have as an addendum to the question which the member just directed to me.

PETRO-CANADA

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Premier. Since no one in the Dominion of Canada but Joe Clark believes we should allow ourselves to be totally dependent on the multinational oil companies for information or for purchases or for exploration or for any manner of supply, will the Premier now permit this House to pass a unanimous resolution, stating clearly every bit of Petrocan should remain in the ownership of the government of Canada with no ifs, ands or buts and with no weasel words about certain aspects being sent off to the private sector? Will he permit a resolution to be passed in this House, saying every bit of Petrocan should be maintained in the ownership of the government of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the Minister of Energy put it so well a few moments ago in noting how intriguing it is that the Leader of the Opposition, after several years of taking different positions on energy, has now totally accepted this government's policy on energy and the representations we've made to the government of Canada.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, come off it!

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's true. He has. It's one of the intriguing conversions on the road to Damascus.

Our point of view on Petrocan has been made quite clearly to the government of Canada and to the first minister of this country. He is aware of it and the government of Canada is in the process of determining what it is going to do with respect to Petrocan.

Mr. S. Smith: Let's pass a resolution. What are you afraid of?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the Leader of the Opposition that while I don't minimize his contribution, he is quite free to make his views known to one of the aspiring leaders of the Liberal Party of Canada; that is, if he still associates himself with that party. Mr. Macdonald might make a statement on this. He is the chairman of fund-raising and the honourable member is so close to him, so why doesn't he get Mr. Macdonald to make such a statement?

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the Premier tell us what he is afraid of and why he can't have this House go on record stating not that some parts of Petrocan should be kept in government ownership, but the whole thing should be kept in the ownership of the government of Canada?

Why can't we have a resolution from this House? What is the Premier afraid of? Just because his dinner companion at Tory fund-raising dinners might not like to hear such a resolution. Why doesn't he have a resolution come forward from the House in Ontario to let him know what the opinion of this province is?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. J. Reed: You are in the barrel on this one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not in the barrel at all. I just say to the Leader of the Opposition if he is seeking some Emmy award or something of that nature I understand it, but his posturing here this morning is really immature. I say that with respect. I think it is silly.

Mr. S. Smith: You can say whatever you damned well like.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He knows full well what we have said. The government of Canada is aware of it and it is their responsibility to make these determinations.

Mr. S. Smith: What about the resolution?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not concerned about any debate in the House. Why doesn't the honourable member call for a debate if he wants to have one?

Mr. S. Smith: A resolution. We will call a vote.

Hon. Mr. Davis: A resolution from this House is not going to alter whatever decision is made. The honourable member knows that and I know that.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, as the government is now taking the position—advanced from day one with no ifs, ands or buts—by the New Democratic Party both of Canada and of Ontario, will the Premier explain why at the first ministers' conference on energy, there was not a word to be heard from the Premier of this province to tell Joe Clark and the federal government to keep Petro-Canada in the hands of the people of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, all of our documents were filed at the first ministers' meeting. There is only a certain amount of time he is aware—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, why doesn't the honourable member phone his friend, Mr. Broadbent? Ask him to ask the Prime Minister whether he understands that Ontario is in favour of the retention of Petro-Canada by the government of Canada. Mr. Clark's answer to that will be very simply, "Yes."

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, arising out of some of his statements yesterday. Since the Energy minister has told us he has a special pipeline to the oil companies and other sources of information apparently denied to Joe Clark and other people in the National Energy Board, could he tell us if there have been leakages of refined product or of heating oil from this province into the United States? To what degree has that been affecting the oil supply and stockpile situation in this province? Specifically, would he tell us what is the stockpile situation in this province for gasoline and heating oil compared to a year ago?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, there is an unfortunate implication in this question that the Minister of Energy should not be utilizing his office to obtain information from as many sources as he can in order to monitor the situation and to report in a responsible way to the people of Ontario to give them some factual basis upon which they can conduct themselves, rather than all the fancy we heard about yesterday from several of the members from the honourable member's group.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am expecting to receive today some update on the situation. Once I have that information I will be glad to respond, particularly to the third part of the honourable member's question on inventories.

I don't know what the honourable member means in his second question referring to leakages. I have no information in connection with that subject.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, the minister is aware that the NEB figures show about 375 million gallons of middle distillates have gone from New Brunswick into the United States over the course of the last 10 months or so.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You said Ontario.

Mr. Cassidy: I don't know what the situation in Ontario is.

How can the minister now get up in this House today and say he doesn't know about any potential leakages or shipments of heating oil from this province to the United States? How is it that he is telling us that he is waiting for figures from the NEB?

How then can he tell us that on the basis of his information, which is better than Joe Clark's, the situation is tight, but manageable, when he now, in response to my question admits he has no such information whatsoever?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Isn't that an interesting, illogical way to put a question. I have never heard the equal of it in my life. If there was a prize for it, the member would have to be the winner of the most circuitous flipping around in a question. Let's take a look at what he is talking about. I said to him on the basis of the total accumulation of information that will be available to us—

Mr. Cassidy: You haven't got any.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Wait a minute. I said we would have that information available and it would be more accurate and more up to date because it would be a result of the November 10 accumulation of data on a total basis, to which I will make a response.

The honourable member then quickly jumped into a document provided to him by the member for Carleton East which has a National Energy Board report with respect to the end of September.

Ms. Gigantes: I provided it to the minister too.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He drew attention to the change in the figures for middle distillates, 1.7 or some such figure. He was told yesterday that represented the in-out situation of a refinery in the Maritimes and that the exported heating oil is that which is derived from foreign crude oil processed in Canada, with the explicit understanding it is for export only. It simply comes in, it is refined and it goes out. It is part of the deal for that particular refinery in the Maritimes. It has nothing to do with Ontario.

Here we are, as usual, with a shotgun approach. Then he can hardly wait to knock over about three people to get out to the television cameras to try to attach some answer to question one that should have been attached to question three. He is an expert at that.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister if he can give this House an assurance today that the part of eastern Ontario which is more dependent on the Montreal refining base will not find itself in any special jeopardy as a result of the Prime Minister of Canada's remarks of a few days ago.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Barring abnormalities, there should be no shortages. That is my commitment by way of answering that question.

Mr. Martel: I have a supplementary, a very simple question for the minister. Is there leakage out of Ontario or not?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Would the honourable member tell me what he means by is there leakage out of Ontario?

Mr. Martel: Am I allowed to get up again on that?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Martel: In view of the fact there has been leakage out of New Brunswick into the United States, can the minister tell me if the same thing is occurring in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: If the honourable member is asking me whether or not the situation which is going on in the Maritimes, to which I made reference, is going on in Ontario, I don't know of any such situation.

Mr. Martel: That's what the minister should know before he gets up.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I didn't say I didn't know.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Halton-Burlington. Will the Minister of Energy sit down?

Mr. J. Reed: Would the Minister of Energy undertake to share with the House a strategy for utilizing the reserves that are available to Ontario in case we do have a shortfall? Would he be able to draw up his strategy and share it with the House so that the people in Ontario would know and would be reassured that these supplies will not be cut off, understanding there are some reserves of heavier fuel oil in this province that could be either refined or taken out of stock?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The honourable member does raise some questions which would support the advisability of the federal ministry's getting the technical advisory committee in place so that there could be some co-operative effort between the industry and government to respond with the sorts of solutions to which the member makes some reference.

If he is talking in terms of the hopefully unneeded implementation of the federal legislation with respect to emergency allocations, I attempted to assure him and others during my estimates that there has been a fair amount of consultation between the officials of the provincial Ministry of Energy and the federal ministry with regard to the implementation program which will have to start, as the member knows, by the appointment of the members to the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. That board will make the determinations on the situation and then certain things fall into place.

I would be happy to keep the House advised on any decisions taken in that regard. Hopefully, simply having the board will provide some assurance for the people of the country that there is a group charged with the responsibility of monitoring the whole supply situation, and in turn allocation.

AID TO CHRYSLER

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism regarding the future of Chrysler Canada.

Given that there are 13,000 Chrysler jobs in Canada, and since the company has been asking Canada for sums of money that may approach half a billion dollars in various kinds of assistance and much of that will come from the taxpayers of this province, can the minister say why the Ontario government has dropped out of the action and left the very critical negotiations completely up to the federal government?

Is it true, as the Financial Post reported this week, that the reason this occurred is because Bob de Cotret is a good friend of US Treasury Secretary William Miller? How can the friendship between two ministers justify Ontario dropping out of negotiations so crucially affecting so many workers in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I say that of course, the relationship between Mr. de Cotret and Mr. W. Miller, if there is one, is not a factor in terms of our involvement or our non-involvement.

Second, our involvement has been intense right from the start. I have been in perhaps weekly contact with Mr. de Cotret on the issue. He has been sharing information with me on the discussions that have been going on. My officials have been to Ottawa several times to meet with his officials. My deputy minister has spoken to his deputy and other senior officials there on a regular basis, so we have been totally briefed and updated on the progress of those discussions.

The first phone call placed was from myself to Mr. de Cotret, before any approach had been made from Chrysler to him, I believe, to indicate the types of things Ontario would want to see occur in this province whether there was any provincial involvement or not. Mr. de Cotret assured me that whether the Ontario taxpayers, the Ontario government was going to be looked to for any assistance or not, no decisions, no undertakings would be made with regard to Chrysler without having our specific input into that decision.

It is obvious, and it was made obvious by me to Mr. de Cotret at that time, that in the event any participation by the government of Ontario was required we were not going to be tagged along on any decisions or undertakings made by the federal government but we would insist upon laying down our own circumstances, rules, conditions and undertakings to our direct participation.

So notwithstanding the words the honourable member used in asking the question, we have been terribly and deeply involved in those discussions on a very close basis from the first word Chrysler would be looking for any assistance from governments anywhere.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In the light of the very active role this government played in the Ford negotiations, can the minister explain why Ontario has chosen to take a passive role in relation to Chrysler Canada by communicating exclusively, as it appears from his answer, with the federal government, with Senator de Cotret and his officials?

Since the chief government negotiator in Ottawa, Mr. Craig, is saying publicly Chrysler didn't even know how to put a financial proposal together and had almost no analytical research to put forward to justify their case, why wasn't this government in contact with Chrysler Canada about what it was they were demanding? Why wasn't this government talking to Chrysler Canada to lay down tough performance guarantees? Why wasn't this government involved directly rather than just passively in protecting jobs and protecting a vital part of the economy here in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The proposition the leader of the third party is putting would be equivalent to the governor of the state of Michigan having gone in to do the negotiations with Chrysler instead of doing it as part of an overall negotiation led by the federal government of the United States. It would be foolish for this government to try to make a deal with Chrysler and put our money on the table before all the other pieces have been put into place. Obviously our bargaining position would not be very good. If we had been in a position of putting money on the table at that stage, then we would have been the first of all the jurisdictions, including all the American states in which Chrysler does business and the national governments of the United States and of Canada, we would have been the first, under your scenario, to make a substantial offer.

That is no way to do business. The way to do business is to see what other jurisdictions are prepared to do and make sure the federal government of this country extracts the proper and careful undertakings necessary before we get into the specifics of what Ontario is prepared to do.

I want to stress to the leader of the third party that I do want to know how strong Chrysler is going to come out of this situation before I make an offer of taxpayers' dollars. I do want to know the federal government has acted responsibly enough, that federal governments of both the United States and Canada have put enough money on the table and required enough commitments from Chrysler in order to ensure it will survive over the next 15 or 20 years, before I commit my taxpayers to put up any more money to support Chrysler. There is no other responsible course other than to ensure that Chrysler is going to be in business and have all the necessary pieces put in place before the Ontario taxpayers go to the table and offer them money.

Mr. Speaker: The minister is repeating himself.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: Has the minister given consideration to making land available, in view of the large investment in the Townsend townsite in the city of Nanticoke, including the water intake, for Chrysler in that area of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The question of specific site location for any new investment in Ontario has not yet been discussed. We have to first make sure if Chrysler is going to be in business; and second, how many more jobs and what kinds of plants are going to go into Ontario. When we know the type of plant that might come here, then we will be able to talk to them about specific site selection.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, I assume the minister has read the quote attributed to Mr. Craig, the federal government's chief negotiator, which states the branch plant has no capability whatsoever. The president of Chrysler of Canada is here to sell damn cars in Canada and he reports to his superiors across the river. In view of that kind of statement by a senior official responsible for negotiations, has the Minister of Industry and Tourism made it perfectly clear to Chrysler that we are not simply interested or satisfied in maintaining existing jobs out there but we want a major commitment to our fair share of new investment, we want a major research and development facility in the province of Ontario, we want our share of new investments for small cars which will be the ones sold in the years to come, and that there be iron-clad guarantees attached to any plants that any part of the public sector provides to Chrysler and that equity be part of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With the exception of the last five words, equity be part of that, I can assure you we have made that decision absolutely clear from day one of the exercise. If the member will check Hansard he will see I confirmed that to the House many months ago.

CORN SHIPMENTS

Mr. Riddell: A question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Is the minister aware Ontario corn producers are in danger of losing the last 20 per cent of their crop because they can't get it to market due to the fact the corn elevators along the Great Lakes can't accept any more corn as they can't move it through the St. Lawrence seaway system? Is the minister aware of the terrible situation the producers are in this year? It is not the first year it has happened.

Mr. Conway: Where is the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson)?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those questions should more properly be directed to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: Surely the Minister of Industry and Tourism should be taking more interest in the agricultural industry, particularly where there is a good export market for soybean, corn and other grains? Would he, along with his federal counterparts, engage in some kind of an initiative to either deepen the water of the locks at Port Colborne or proceed with the twinning of locks at Port Colborne and Thorold so we can move these ships through and get rid of the corn, rather than lose 30 million bushels of corn this year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I should tell the member that, in a move with which I'm sure he would agree, it was decided between the then Minister of Agriculture and Food and myself about 12 months ago that we should finally make quite clear that agricultural products and their export from this province should be the responsibility of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food in order to deal with the perception at that time that perhaps agricultural products were taking some sort of a back seat in terms of our trade missions and our export efforts on behalf of industrial manufactured products in this province.

That wasn't an accurate picture of what was happening but the perception was there. In order to clarify that, it was decided about a year ago that all of the export transactions involved with the export of agricultural products from this province would lie properly in the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

I know the member would agree with that move and I didn't hear any objections from him at that time. Which is a simple way of saying, as he well knows, that it lies with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. When the minister is here—

Mr. Riddell: Where is he? Where is the minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He's out working for the good of the farmers of this province, instead of coming here every Friday morning and posturing as though he is the only one interested in that subject in this province.

Mr. Riddell: Every day of the week? Why doesn't he come in here so we can ask him a question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not like the other members who want to come here and posture and ask questions while he's not here.

Mr. Riddell: Are you afraid to bring him in to the House? Does the Minister of Agriculture and Food embarrass you? Is that why you won't let the minister in?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have to say if the member for Huron-Middlesex is here on most Tuesdays and Thursdays he'll find the minister is here. There was nothing stopping him from asking that question yesterday, or Tuesday when the minister was here, unless the member himself was absent on those days.

Mr. Ruston: The minister wasn't here all week.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: On the matter of the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, I would just say to the member for Huron-Middlesex the minister is not here because he is unwell. I know the member has never missed the House for any purpose whatsoever. I know the member wouldn't understand that on occasion the Minister of Agriculture and Food has a touch of the flu, that's why he's not here. If that upsets the member I can't help it.

ENERGY EXPORTS

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy arising from his statement this morning on natural gas exports. I wonder if he would care to elaborate in clear and simple terms the bottom paragraph on page three of his statement, in which he says, "Compensation for the consumer, should exports of any surplus natural gas and low-cost conventional reserves be authorized when that means future domestic requirements will have to be met from higher cost frontier reserves." What does that mean, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, quite simply what it means is that the gas that's presently there and available for export will go at a certain price because of its availability. It's going to be more expensive, obviously, with respect to future reserves on the frontier; that's going to be more expensive gas.

The point is that as we allow the export of the present gas at its price, which is bound to be more reasonable than the more expensive gas, there should be some way of compensating Canadians, who are ultimately going to have to have access to more expensive gas. That's what the bottom paragraph of page three means.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister wouldn't agree that instead of getting into elaborate programs of compensation for hypothetical gas in the future, wouldn't it be wise to say clearly and unequivocally right now, "No more natural gas exports, period?"

Hon. Mr. Welch: The position of the government of Ontario is clear. We made a statement today with respect to it. We've intervened before the National Energy Board. We've talked about the fact that the decision with respect to the export of natural gas should not be made in isolation but in relation to the overall natural energy policy. That position is quite clear, and I think it's quite reasonable.

Mr. Conway: On the basis of the minister's statement today, with his expression of the great possibilities of natural gas, what is the Minister of Energy telling those thousands of people in rural Ontario who don't yet have natural gas, who want to convert away from petroleum but have only a hydro-electric alternative and who see a real advantage in natural gas? What is the minister telling them today about their possibilities for conversion, given what he's said today about the future of natural gas?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) quite rightly brought that question to my attention earlier this week and encompassed some concerns about that in his contribution to the emergency debate yesterday.

The members will understand, of course, there is a tremendous conversion program under way at the moment, and I suppose it would not be unreasonable to expect the companies which are presently providing the service are quite busy looking after those who are presently within serviced areas to accommodate that type of conversion.

The future, of course, is the question. The expansion of the infrastructure to cover those areas not now serviced by natural gas is of much interest in at least two or three ways. I understand the companies themselves are presently developing plans with respect to that expansion.

We have some indication with respect to an incentive plan to be developed, and about which more detail will be made available, so that in some pricing way moneys are going to be made available to encourage the distributors with respect to that expansion.

Mr. S. Smith: What about the consumer?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Of course the consumer ultimately benefits because he has access to the fuel.

GAS AND OIL PRICES

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Would the minister assure the House that if the oil companies use the possible oil shortage as an excuse to increase the price of home heating oil and gasoline, as apparently they did south of the border, he will be amongst the foremost spokesmen, speaking out against this practice?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As the member knows, there's some evidence in the marketplace now that the law of supply and demand has been reflected in some price adjustments. I hope, in keeping with the spirit of the honourable member's question, we would not find companies taking advantage of that situation. If there was any evidence of excess, I could assure the honourable member I would add my voice to his in expressing concern.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Since the present federal government has virtually ignored all of the pleadings of the provincial government of Ontario on questions related to energy, would the minister assure the House if that eventuality does occur, that is if the price gouging does occur using the shortage as an excuse, he will explore all avenues of actions within the admittedly limited provincial jurisdiction to either penalize those who would do that or to attempt to block that from happening?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It's a hypothetical question at the moment. I can't add anything more than I did by way of my answer to the main question. If there is any evidence of excess then I would feel all of us would want to express some concern with respect to that.

I'm not familiar with all the details of the federal legislation, but I would think in the federal legislation part of the regulations, in the event of a shortage which results in the implementation of that, may well be some power to monitor prices by regulation.

FRENCH LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I have a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. Yesterday, La Presse ran a story on the Gabrielle Roy school crisis under the heading: "Le Toronto Board of Education refuse d'accorder comme prévu une école séparée aux francophones."

As this issue is no longer just of a local nature but has become part of an emotional and symbolic component of the national unity issue, like Penetang, will the minister not agree it's time for the provincial government to provide its real support to the French advisory committee in its quest for a homogeneous school setting; and secondly, will he tell us what action the government is willing to take to guarantee to the French-speaking community a school of their own by September 1980, as they have been promised before?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think that question should be directed to my colleague, the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), who has responsibility for those matters and I am sure would fully answer the member's question. In terms of the general broad principle and context, I think this government, as we have said many times, has supported the aspirations of the Franco-Ontarians over many years and will continue to do so.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary; as the minister again refers to the positive history of the Conservative government in support of the French Canadians, I would look at its past support to the advisory committee when the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), a year and a half ago, committed himself to providing enumeration tools so that the advisory committee could develop the very basic democratic connections with their community, a community that is in—

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question in there some place?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Yes. I would like to ask the minister how he can say the government is providing support to Franco-Ontarians when it can't even provide them with the guarantee they will be able to enumerate in order to find their community, so they can develop a power base to fight for their rights in the city instead of being overwhelmed by community groups in every area and a board that is not willing to support their efforts? At least give them enumeration tools.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, on two counts; one, I could enumerate, but it would take me a couple of hours to enumerate, what this government has done on behalf of and with the Franco-Ontarians of this province; second, the matter of enumeration is a matter we agree should be solved, and the Minister of Revenue, the Minister of Education and myself have been working on this and will continue to work on it. We are not opposed to the identification of the Franco-Ontarian community on the enumeration, it is just a matter of finding the proper vehicle; that will be found and it will be done.

AMBULANCE SERVICES

Mr. Conway: A question of the Minister of Health: Will the minister make a statement today as to what he sees for the future of private ambulance operators within the health-care system in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, that's a very broad question, and a very vague one at that.

The existing ambulance system, as the member knows, is made up of a variety of hospital-based, municipal-based, ministry-operated and private ambulance services. I have no plans at the present time to change that mix, although as he knows from the correspondence coming from certain operators, some quite misleading, we are certainly examining our policy with respect to ambulance services for the next 10 years, recognizing that we have made tremendous progress in the last 10 years towards the consolidation of ambulance services and in upgrading qualifications, vehicles and the general level of services.

Mr. Conway: Would the minister then undertake to have an immediate discussion with the private ambulance operators in this province, many of whom are operating under the assumption that it is the clear and private intention of his ministry to phase them out of the system without compensation? Will he take the opportunity in the next few days to meet with them and have a discussion to make them aware of what his policy intentions are?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, there is no need for such a meeting. There have been several meetings in recent months, some involving my parliamentary assistant, who has been ill the last little while and some involving myself as well as others involving my staff. It is quite clear to the Ontario Ambulance Operators Association, or should be, what my intentions are. There are certain individuals who for their own personal and private purposes are misleading some of the other operators. That is most unfortunate, and I am answering any and all inquiries to that effect.

MINING MACHINERY

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. I would ask him if he is aware of a recently published report by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on the Canadian content of equipment in mining operations in Canada, and that report concludes, "Canadian content in equipment increases proportionately with increased upgrading of ore."

In view of that conclusion—which report, by the way, this ministry should have done years ago—is the minister prepared to recommend to his cabinet colleagues that the existing exemptions to section 113 of the Mining Act, which apply to Falconbridge—which still has not built a refinery in Sudbury after more than 45 years in that community—be lifted and that they be directed to build a refinery in Sudbury creating at least 2,000 jobs in that community?

Hon. Mr. Crossman: Obviously, any recommendations I might make to my colleagues with regard to any section of the Mining Act would be dealt with inside the cabinet room.

Mr. Laughren: I won't ask the minister to tell us what he is going to say in cabinet. That same report says: "Open pit equipment forms a large part of the total, and is increasing rapidly."

Since there are going to be many projects of an open-pit nature with the tar sands development and so forth out west, and that is going to be a major component in the import of mining machinery, could the minister tell us what he is prepared to do to ensure Ontario gets its fair share of investments in this new kind of machinery, creating jobs and much-needed investment in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are trying to assess the size of that market and assess the competition in terms of those persons who are already able to supply that market.

I know it's attractive to suggest, because we have a great deal of mining in this country, that therefore all or a good portion of the mining machinery equipment ought to be made here. In fact, as the member knows, 30 or 40 years ago there was a fair mining machinery industry here, and we lost a good portion of it, very sadly.

Mr. S. Smith: During the tenure of your government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's easy to mouth things like that, as though the loss of that was this government's fault.

Mr. S. Smith: Who was the government here in the last 30 years?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I recall, it was a Liberal government in Ottawa, if the member wants to blame his predecessor.

Mr. S. Smith: And it was Conservative here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member's leader wants to blame it on who was in office 20 or 30 years ago. I didn't.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right—right here in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That loss has given competitors an enormous advantage in that market. We also must remember some of the manufacturers of that equipment are selling to mining markets that are larger than ours. They have bases in the United States and other areas where the total market is much larger than ours.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a huge market, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With respect, to the Leader of the Opposition, it isn't necessarily large enough to make an operation viable enough to sell only to the Canadian mines.

Mr. S. Smith: It's large enough to give them a leg up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It doesn't automatically follow.

Mr. Foulds: A good base for exports.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member is quite right. I say to the member for Port Arthur, he is quite right. It should be a good base, and for some operations it might well be a good base. What we're trying to do is to introduce that probability to some of the people who could go into that business here in this province. We're also making available to them all sorts of grants, all sorts of programs, all sorts of government assistance.

I want to make it quite clear that if we get anyone who is prepared to get into that business, to supply any of the equipment the member for Nickel Belt has just referred to, I will recommend to my colleagues at that time that we consider a whole range of programs leading from grants to tax policies that might make it possible and feasible for those companies to work upon what may now be a base for new operations here in Canada.

QUEEN ELIZABETH WAY

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Is the minister aware of the poor road conditions on the Queen Elizabeth Way, from McLeod Road in Niagara Falls to the Peace Bridge, in the town of Fort Erie? The dips and dives in the travelled portion of both lanes create hazardous driving conditions. It is almost like being out on Lake Erie in a boat.

Will the minister consider this section in his 1980-81 construction program as a rehabilitative project?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I haven't had any particular problem with that area brought to my attention. I did have a meeting a couple of weeks ago with a delegation from Niagara Falls but this was not mentioned to me. I will look into it and see where it fits into our maintenance program.

TRAVEL FUEL SURCHARGES

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Will the minister introduce legislation before we recess for Christmas to control the travel fuel surcharge rip-off that is currently being engaged in by Strand Tours and Club Mediterranean Incorporated?

As the minister is aware, these two companies are charging exorbitant and totally inappropriate cancellation fees to consumers who object to or who cannot afford the fuel surcharges that are currently being levied.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, Mr. Speaker, but I will handle it in another way.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Perhaps the minister would be polite enough to tell us what the other way is. While he is doing that, would he undertake also to investigate Strand Tours to see whether or not they were involved in underpricing their tours back in the earlier part of this year, which has led to the pressure in that company to charge these surcharge cancellation fees?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will be very courteous to the member, Mr. Speaker. I am already doing that. I'm not going to tell somebody what to do.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: The minister said he was going to approach it in another way. Can he share with us what his intentions are? Can he also advise us if there will be some pattern put into place so that the various cancellation charges, if there are to be any, are clearly set out on a scale reflecting the value of the package purchased so that people who are taking on these obligations will know clearly what they might be liable for if there is a cancellation?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'm extremely reluctant to say in public what I intend to do for rather obvious reasons.

PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. With the announcement of his grant structure for 1980, many municipalities are concerned as to their future planning, especially municipalities that are rural-dominated and would like to stay that way; but they're finding that with the new assessment situation they're going to be under a real bind. Since they have no guarantees for the next five years, they're contemplating whether they should change their planning to more industrial than residential to get away from the totally rural area because of the high increase in the tax structure now. Can the minister give them any assurance so they will know what they're going to do for the next five years?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, we will give them some assurance, Mr. Speaker. In the statement that I made yesterday, I said a couple of things that I hoped would assure them. One was that we didn't believe that the kind of shift that the equalization factors brought about—the shift of more burden on rural areas was a policy that we would support, and that this should be corrected in whatever we do over the next number of years. While the solution we've announced is for 1980, we will have a solution for 1981 and on, that I think will be of benefit to those municipalities, to be announced next July. Many people in the government will be working on that.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: May I ask the minister if he can justify using one type of assessment system for equalization and another type for the actual levying of taxes? Doesn't he agree that these should be uniform if we're going to have any kind of fairness?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm not exactly sure what my friend means. If he means that we shouldn't have a system of modifying the equalization factors and putting some limits on the assessment for grant and apportionment purposes, to prevent some of the hardships, then I don't agree with him. I think we should have that this year.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply

Mr. Chairman: I believe when the committee last met, the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) had asked some questions. I don't know if the minister has any comments.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. The member for Renfrew North is no longer with us. Oh, here he comes back to his seat. I am going to spoil his whole schedule for the morning. The interviews are cut off.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope Hansard doesn't record that.

Mr. Chairman, the honourable member was very flattering in his description of my abilities, my leadership in the role as Treasurer. At least that is the way I read all the notes Hansard gave me. "I haven't undertaken to maintain the same kind of profile or give the same kind of leadership, et cetera." One can interpret that either way. I just assume you mean I am much better. With that kind of comment I will just go on.

There is no question, Mr. Chairman, I believe perhaps this differentiates me from my honourable colleagues, and I really do like it. Of the members in the House, the honourable member is one of the bright lights over there. Mind you, being a bright light in a bunch of dim bulbs isn't that hard.

In any event, his ability to string a series of words together into a coherent sentence is probably unexcelled by anybody on that side of the House. However, that leads him deceptively into the kind of comment he made and that is, he has been judging me by my written word. That is not true of the other gentlemen who are far more able to judge me.

Mr. Peterson: Frank, at least you could hire someone to write that junk.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well, it is true. But you see, I am a poor, humble engineer. And in the process of being a poor, humble engineer, I have always learned it is not the words one utters that one is judged by in the final analysis, it is what he gets done. Engineers have always been a bit poor on the English course, but pretty good on the production department. I would only ask that we allow history to judge, rather than Hansard.

The honourable member asked me an interesting question in the course of his remarks. He said: "The only thing I have not heard from the Treasurer or from the Premier is an undertaking to personally confront the 58 federal Conservative members representing Ontario in the Clark caucus in Ottawa, whose silence on this matter of vital national interest"—that was oil, of course—"and the pricing thereof has been at least stunning and consistent."

I have had that opportunity. It is not in the future tense, it is past.

Mr. Conway: You and Stan over tea.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Stan and I meet quite often. I can only assure the honourable member of the very purpose in my mind. I was asked this question both before and after the conference of first ministers at Ottawa, where a lot of people rapidly jumped to the conclusion that Ontario had been isolated in Canada. Even the federal members couldn't agree with the provincial government on the matter of oil pricing. The other provinces all said, "Let's go to world price." All for very selfish reasons, when you analyse it, and only Ontario was there. Ontario didn't have the swat it used to have.

The people in this world who have the swat, as you and I as elected people know, are the voters. The voters of this province and of Canada had an excellent opportunity on the occasion of the first ministers' conference to start to understand what it meant to them, whether they lived in Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, British Columbia or Alberta, and what it would cost them from their pockets to see the demands of their governments met in terms of oil pricing.

I have enough confidence to believe that in the interval between that first ministers' conference and today a lot of the members of all three parties, including the 58 gentlemen you alluded to, have all heard from some of their constituents as to what they think. I would bet if you asked any of them privately and off the record what kind of response they heard from their people in Alberta, in Shining Tree, they would say without question, Ontario is right.

Maybe I will leave the Albertans out of this because they see themselves as getting it all. But the bulk of the rest of them will be saying, "Yes, when it comes down to whether I spend the money or my government gets my money, I would rather not see the prices go up on commodities as important to the economy and as important to the average taxpayer's pocket as fuel oil and gasoline." The price of electricity inexorably ends up being tied to these in today's society in most cases, except perhaps in Quebec and BC.

Mr. Laughren: This is a recent conversation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No. We have been very consistent through all this. If one goes back to the Ontario paper—and everybody loves to ignore that—Ontario clearly said the consumer had to be protected to prevent a bout of inflation and unemployment in the event of a sharp rise in the price of fuel oil and petroleum. That was the immediate short-term objective of Ontario. In fact, if anyone decided to raise the price, we said there had to be a mechanism to get the money back to the consumer.

I was quite accurately quoted one day after a visit to Ryerson Polytechnic Institute. I said I wouldn't trust any government with the money. I wouldn't trust my government with the money. I wouldn't trust the Alberta government with the money. I wouldn't trust the federal government with the money if it is acting as a dispersing agency. In other words if one has to take the money from consumers in the form of increased energy prices, pass it through governments and then give it back to them, I know only one thing about government, namely, it is going to cost.

The second thing is, I suspect, it won't be fairly redistributed. Therefore, according to the Ontario premise, it is better not to take it at all. Ontario clearly enunciated that policy over and over again, always with the fallback position that if governments do take it, then there has to be a mechanism to protect the consumer until such time as we know the moneys are being properly reinvested in security of supply.

Mr. Haggerty: That applies to the oil industry too.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, but give the oil industry credit where credit is due. The oil industry has been pouring back into reinvestment, it tells me, 88 cents out of every dollar, not of profits. Out of cash flow, and cash flow is more than profits. The real limitations on reinvestment today are the availability of people to build the plants to a large degree and the capability of industry to provide the needed equipment, the structures themselves.

This is where some reason could be attached to the Alberta position in that there is only a certain rate at which Canada is capable of building that plant. That rate will determine, in my opinion, the price—the amount that has to be reinvested. Anything over that is going unnecessarily either to governments or to windfall profits. That was the Ontario position. I can assure you I have personally taken the time to transmit that message. And I know by the way, that others have. I am not alone in having done that.

The honourable member then went on to talk about his own riding and I am trying to get the actual statistic, maybe he will shoot it back to me quite quickly. Twice, he referred to the double digit unemployment of areas such as the one he represents. I don't have the statistic on the unemployment rate in Renfrew county. I am not proud of it, he is not proud of it. I think though what we need to do is look at the one statistic I have, and I may have that before I am through because I sent out for it when I saw that it was not in the data my staff got back to me. Just a moment and I will see if it is here. They are just saying we can't get that specific information.

The one I have that is specific is this: In Renfrew county last year—last year the statistics were worse than this year in Ontario—6.7 of the labour force was receiving unemployment insurance benefits. That compared to an Ontario average of 5.7 per cent. That is an interesting statistic; I would have assumed it would have been higher. Last year I believe the unemployment figures in Ontario averaged somewhere around the seven to eight per cent range. So if one pro rated the increase, that should give us some measure of the statistics in the member's county, for unemployment. They may not reach the double digit range but they are close to it in any event. However, we recognize and accept that assistance is needed there.

As I mentioned in answer to a question the other day, I hope very shortly to be signing the eastern Ontario DREE agreement. That has been finalized; the signing will take place, I think it's safe to say, on December 20, in Kemptville. That remains as yet not totally sure, but assuming the other minister is available and assuming I can make it on time, that would be the time and place. It has been a long time coming. Ontario has been working quite hard to get it, recognizing the need of the whole general eastern Ontario region for assistance.

But let's look not at what hasn't been done, let's look at what—

Mr. Laughren: You gave the back of the hand to Shining Tree, again.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, yes. Am I getting the honourable member's goat?

Mr. Laughren: No. I can give you about 300 of them.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If he can find them I'll be happy because I was going to say if the honourable member was getting my goat I'd like to find his.

Mr. Laughren: I would rather not discuss it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: He would rather not discuss it. I only want to tell the honourable member I am a director of a number of corporations and directors are held accountable for corporations. It's a messy deal.

We have the Renfrew county development strategy. We have the design for development packages, as I am sure the member knows. Let me just put a few things on the record because one purpose of these debates is for members to let their people know what is done in the House and how incompetent this government is. I like to think in turn it's our turn to do the opposite.

Mr. Laughren: They require increasingly less evidence.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Perhaps it's because I can put in increasingly fewer words.

It was suggested that an intergovernmental agency be set up with an advisory role in the co-ordination, implementation and periodic evaluation of the strategy for the development of the county. That task force was formed under the late Peter York and recently we had the reappointment of Russ Radford to that position.

Mr. Peterson: Where is Bill Hodgson today, the guy who called for a quorum last time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member doesn't want a quorum call does he? I will say this, one of the things I learned was the clock runs during quorum calls, is that correct?

Mr. Peterson: Maybe there is a graceful way to get out of this mess.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If the member gets to the point where he has nothing to say please call for a quorum.

Mr. Peterson: Hurry up will you, I have to get on because I have to leave.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Oh, well, I waited all of the other days to say all this stuff.

We set up a county of Renfrew and a city of Pembroke economic development board with local representatives. That has been assisted under the community and rural resource development subsidiary agreement, costs shared with DREE. Two hundred thousand dollars have been made available for the use of this board since December 7, 1977. The municipalities involved took until March, 1979, to set up the terms of reference, to appoint their members and to hold the first meeting. Assistance for the board is designed to help the city and the county pursue economic development ideas for the region. It was suggested the city of Pembroke be designated as a major growth point for development and that studies be completed to identify any environmental constraints that would have to be met to determine the adequacy of municipal water in the sewage system. We should consider assistance as the needs were found. They suggested a regional industrial park should be established in Pembroke as soon as possible.

We have funded the industrial park study for Pembroke for $86,000; the servicing study for Pembroke for $33,000; the province and DREE cost shared the design of the new water filtration plant, $317,000; the testing of nutrient removal facilities at the sewage plant, $65,000. The Treasurer sent a proposal to cost share the water filtration plant construction, the sewage plant expansion and the industrial park servicing, to DREE in June. We estimated the cost to be about $14 million. We haven't had any official response from DREE. That may follow once we get the details of our agreement of eastern Ontario but we need that agreement before those water and sewage treatment plants can be upgraded.

It was suggested that the towns of Arnprior and Renfrew be secondary development points. We were to again assess any constraints, sewage, environmental, before that could be done. So, the town of Renfrew was given $390,000 from the regional priority budget of this ministry for trunk sewers to an industrial park and it had a loan from the Ministry of Industry and Tourism to assist with internal servicing. It is also in that park that Westinghouse is going to locate; that was a fairly large deal. Also, Arnprior, is designing a sewage treatment plant with a grant from my ministry of $92,000. It was suggested an industrial promotion team be established in Renfrew. The $200,000 we gave the Economic Development Board can be used for that if it so elects.

On the question of wood inventory, your valley has always had a very strong relationship to the pine. I guess that was the historic source of the square pine, wasn't it?

Mr. Conway: The family is still making money.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Your family is? Are you one of the people I used to come and buy lumber from?

Mr. Conway: Yes.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I used to purchase along with a purchasing agent for Rubberset Company Limited of Gravenhurst, pine from Pembroke. To think that I was supporting a future embryonic Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Warner: Scary, isn't it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is that. He's one of the few cases where two for one has worked. Okay, the inventory of the forest resources is being done I believe by the Ministry of Natural Resources. We are spending about $80,000 on that agreement and we expect once the DREE agreement is signed, there will be another $150,000 in round figures spent on the forest resource inventory.

It was recommended we have a study to determine the feasibility of income improvement and productivity gains in the wood industry and to encourage larger scale operations. That's part of the study we are working on. I am sure if economies of scale exist, like the honourable member, sometimes economics aren't the only answer to life.

I have always sensed in my riding and yours that many people do things the accountants would tell us are totally foolish. The scale is too small, the profits aren't good enough, the return on investment isn't adequate. But funnily enough, a lot of people in your riding and mine have some of the most delightful lives around and they have recognized that part of the price of not being quite as economically attractive in their scale of operation has been that there's a closer relationship between owners and labour, between life and country. Both you and I would share the fact they are pretty nice places to live no matter what.

Mr. Peterson: Have you ever thought of the ministry?

Hon. F. S. Miller: What ministry—

Mr. Peterson: The church.

Mr. Chairman: We are doing ministry estimates now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I've always argued that the more I accomplish here as a minister in this area, the less they have to accomplish in theirs and vice versa. If they manage to perfect the human being through their admonitions and church on Sunday, then I will not have to be a pragmatist in the House on Monday.

That put him right back to sleep.

The Woodlands Improvement Act was recommended to be expanded so that private wood owners would be able to manage their wood lots better. I want to say that having been Minister of Natural Resources, this to me—in your riding and mine—is one of the most attractive ways, both of providing employment and of securing a future for the wood-based industries.

We talk a lot in this House about crown lands and the management of the forests. There are legitimate criticisms of what the crown does on its land, but 25 per cent of total wood production in this province comes from private lands, which count for much less than 11 per cent of the total land mass of this province. The kinds of lands that are privately owned, absolutely and totally deserve and demand good management. The Woodlands Improvement Act is the best mechanism I know of to do that.

It's a system by which, as you know, an agreement is entered into by the Ministry of Natural Resources with the landowner to manage the forests. He only has certain conditions involved, not costs, if that is done. I think they have a minimum acreage of something like five or 10 acres. Past that, the ministry will get in and either give advice or actually perform functions.

It's something you and I need to encourage absentee owners to practise and current harvesters to practise, if the wood-based industries in my riding and yours, are going to have a future. We keep on hearing that crown lands can't sustain the present cuts. Our private lands have much greater fertility in the Ottawa Valley than they have north of North Bay. They have much greater potential. I would suggest that once the DREE agreement is signed there will be moneys available to see this kind of thing enriched. We have a duty to encourage its use by anyone with the lands, whether they are actively living in your riding or not.

It was suggested that we have mapping and exploration of mineral resources on a continuing basis. The mineral resource assessment is being carried out. It's costing $174,000 in provincial funds and $491,000 in cost-shared provincial-federal funds under the agreements we have. That kind of thing worked very well in the north. The field work is complete. The maps and reports, to some degree, are already published, and there has been some interest expressed by mining companies in the area. I guess you've got the only magnesium mine in Canada in your area, haven't you, at Carp?

Mr. Conway: Haley Station.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There was some fear it was going to go across the border a while ago.

There was a recommendation that the ARDA program be evaluated and programs be devised, if needed, to buy marginal farms. The eastern Ontario agreement that we signed will have a clause to see that's done.

There was a recommendation that short-term existing programs and promotion be used to generate investment in the tourism sector. You've had the Pembroke marina under the ARP regional priority budget get $148,000; the Mud Creek development got $33,000; the study on Timbertown, $240,000; the options on Timbertown about $82,000 to date.

Admittedly, some of these things are still saying, "These are what can happen," but you know the process requires a lot of this to be done. If your people are saying, "Studies on studies on studies," I can sense their frustration, but you'd be the first to agree that you won't get the results without the studies. They're done. I think we've shown our willingness to see that the potential be examined.

The eastern Ontario agreement, as you know, will have $50 million, in round figures, for development in the general area over the period of its life. That's combined provincial-federal money.

The Westinghouse plant had a $1.6 million grant to locate a turbine and generator in the town of Renfrew. That was announced in October.

The company will invest $23 million in land, buildings, and equipment and about $7.5 million in training the required personnel. We hope 325 jobs will be created in Renfrew. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is going to contribute $6.3 million towards the capital cost. The federal Department of Manpower, which is being useful, will contribute $1.7 million towards retraining. In Renfrew South, the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation has given 93 loans and guarantees worth $10.5 million—$464,000 in round figures to assist the town of Renfrew with an industrial park. In Renfrew North, it has made 27 loans and guarantees with a value of $3.4 million.

I could go on to Ministry of Culture and Recreation projects, but I won't. All I wanted to put on the record is that no matter how one is able to tackle us and make us look as if we aren't interested in an area, I can only assure you we are. We've been working consistently to try to help eastern Ontario. We will continue to do so, recognizing the realities of life, namely, that there are certain geographic areas that attract certain kinds of industries while other geographic areas attract others.

Mr. Conway: I know my colleague from London Centre wishes to participate, so I won't belabour the point. I appreciate the Treasurer's remarks in all respects. I have a frustration, which I know a lot of my constituents and friends in the eastern region have, about government trying to deliver services and programs from a point here in Toronto, 250 miles distant from the area requiring the attention.

I'm going to tie those remarks to the remarks the minister made in his opening statement where he talked about his humility as an engineer with respect to the political trade he now engages in.

I'm almost finished with the biography of C. D. Howe. I know my friends on the left would not particularly enjoy some of the policy thrusts. In that personality, was an engineer in politics who certainly was not prone to great Disraelian oratory, to be sure, but in his own right he was able to determine the kind of policies and practical projects that would be applicable in many parts of this country, and he got on with the job.

I certainly expect my friend from Bracebridge or Gravenhurst or wherever to exhibit the kind of decisiveness we normally associate, rightly or otherwise, with the engineering trade. I hope he takes it upon himself to cut through the myriad studies that are entertained. He rattled off a list of several studies involving probably a million dollars or thereabouts. These are studies which in some respects have probably committed this government to some of the most hare-brained schemes ever concocted. I will watch with great interest as the government opposite squirms its unhappy way out of some of the studies and commitments that I think have been improperly entered into.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Could you be specific about those?

Mr. Conway: I would do so perhaps at a later point, given my opportunity to speak very briefly here, and for reasons that I would not wish to embarrass the honourable member with, to be quite blunt about it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Are you against Timbertown?

Mr. Conway: I shall watch with very great interest the development of Timbertown, knowing what I know about the kind of advice that is coming from the senior economic planners in this government. I shall watch with great interest the attitude of this government to that project over the next 18 months.

Hon. F. S. Miller: My interpretation is you are against it.

Mr. Conway: I am neither for or against the government's commitment to Timbertown. I shall say—and maybe it's time I said it since the minister has provoked me—from my point of view, if we are going to marshal $8 million or $10 million with respect to an economic program that will in one particular way generate a response to the very serious structural employment problems of the eastern region, and particularly my own county, then for me Timbertown is not the answer to that particular problem.

It is being offered by this government as a solution to part of the serious economic unemployment problem in Renfrew county. I have to think that now Joe Clark is giving us $2 a gallon oil, we will see some very immediate and significant changes in the way in which the tourist dollar is spent, not only on the continent, but in the country, and in the province, generally.

When Timbertown was discussed, I looked at the St. Lawrence Parks Commission report to see what impact the OPEC 1973 situation had on the corridor parks along the St. Lawrence. I was quite impressed to see there was a very sharp drop post 1973 in many cases, and in many of the parks, in Upper Canada in particular.

I must say I would not be against a kind of initiative that brought about a major tourist creation into the county, but I have said repeatedly this Timbertown project is not going to be an answer to the employment pattern of the region.

The honourable minister knows better than anyone in this House that the kind of investment involved here will, by and large, result only in seasonal 10- to 14-week employment. I must tell you that is not the answer to the unemployment problems in Renfrew county. Go forward with Timbertown in its tourist capacity and you will have my blessing, but as far as a major government-supported project to do something about the unemployment in Renfrew county, I want to see this government undertake a project or a series of initiatives that will offer full-time, 12 months of the year employment. I must tell you Timbertown will not do that in this particular way.

When you talked about the unemployment statistics, I was quite interested. You people have more luck than I have. Ever since my friends in Ottawa, the late deceased federal Liberal administration, made that change some years ago about the way in which unemployment figures were made available through regional manpower offices, it is very difficult to get the information. In 1978, according to the Treasurer's figures, we had a 6.7 per cent of the labour force in Renfrew county in receipt of UIC benefits. Did I understand you to say that? I want to be sure of that. My recollection is you said that in 1978, 6.7 per cent of the labour force in Renfrew county in 1978 was in receipt of UIC benefits.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Mr. Conway: Fair enough. In 1978, as you know and as my family tells me, the lumber trade was at the top of one of its very best cycles and there is no question from my own experience on a general anecdotal level, that unemployment was reduced in many parts of my county as a result of the cyclical high being experienced in the lumber forest industry.

As the minister knows that cycle is now carrying it somewhat downward, and probably we're not at the bottom yet. I simply want to tell him that I raise the spectre of local unemployment because there are some communities, some of them not too far from Bracebridge, where the winter unemployment is not unknown to be in the order of 20 to 30 per cent.

Joe Clark has now stripped them of their winter works money, and this government has done precious little to fill the vacuum. The people in areas like Whitney and Stonecliffe look at a winter of very considerable discontent with respect of their economic and employment prospects.

I want to say the government has a responsibility which hopefully will be exercised in a provincial sense by strong local political leadership.

The sad thing for those of us who are in our embryonic political stages, is to look across and to think about the goodness of the eastern region over these many long years in generating a plethora of quiet, silent backbenchers to fill the government majorities of the past, and minorities of the present. We see them and remember the old days when the eastern region produced Premiers like Whitney and Ferguson and Frost and very strong regional spokesmen for the far and near eastern region.

What have we got today? What we have today is pathetic, and pales in relation to the historic greatness. If anything points to your end, Mr. Minister, it is the pathetic recruitment of your Tory friends on the back benches from eastern Ontario. Because when I look, in my embryonic way, at the new occupants of the shoes of Frost, Ferguson, Whitney and the rest, I see a very sad effort of third rate mediocre people insofar as the representation in this government and in this cabinet of the serious and real needs of the eastern region.

I have always expected those regional interests to be represented in a strong way in cabinet. The members for places like Ottawa South and Ottawa West are surely no answer to the kind of expectation some of us have.

The government has a tradition, I would that it were otherwise, but it is there and I will acknowledge it. Gone are the days when that tradition recruited and generated truly outstanding regional, provincial and national spokespeople. I certainly have to tell members opposite that at the next election we shall not only note the absence of the present members from at least Carleton East and Cornwall, but I dare say others from across the way, everywhere from South Renfrew to Durham West.

I point out to the minister that I expect him to go forward in his capacity as Treasurer to do something about the many studies being generated, to bring them to some kind of conclusion, to give the people of Cobden, Deep River and elsewhere in my region, a kind of commitment that doesn't offer pie in the sky, doesn't offer some hope for another millenium, but will offer their kids and their friends and neighbours an opportunity to work and to live in that part of this great province.

I see from the Minister of Labour the beginnings, after many years, of doing something in a very weak and shameful way in some respects, about keeping people such as myself, who are otherwise driven to less noble occupations to justify our staying in the area from which we came.

I invite the minister to go to Kemptville on December 20, or wherever it should be, and to make a clear policy statement of the ongoing, full-time employment strategy that will do something about the double-digit unemployment. Do something.

Mr. Ashe: We could add to the unemployment by adding the member for Renfrew North.

Mr. Conway: I'm speaking to my friend from Bracebridge and that's all the audience I feel I need at this point.

Mr. McClellan: Can we leave?

Mr. Conway: The member for Bellwoods has every dispensation to leave.

I want the Treasurer to do something that will deliver long-term employment to the people I represent and to others in the region. I've got to tell the Treasurer again, the frustration with the task force, for example—what does it say about this government's leadership? What does it really say about this government's leadership?

It took three or four months to just replace the chairman. I certainly thought the late chairman had done a rather adequate job, but in some respects I am deeply disappointed this government took three or four months, or however many months it was, to fill that vacancy.

Does the Treasurer know what the interpretation of that is at places like Renfrew county council? They don't care. They have no appreciation for the urgency of the obligations that fall to us as a result of these requirements. The Treasurer has got to do something to move that task force forward, to decide upon the priorities that are going to mean something for the 1980s, will deliver the jobs to the young people, and to the not-so-young, looking for employment in that region, and to make it clear what his strategy is going to be.

Save us, please, from the strategy of the 1970s which has improvised regions like my own at the expense of many of the Treasurer's friends in the consulting business who have reaped the benefits of a government strategy which seemingly has had more to say and do about the delivering of big contracts for people to study and restudy and study again the very kinds of issues looked at for the last 36 years, without bringing to any conclusion the strategy required if we're going to do something about the 6.7 per cent of the labour force that is dependent on UIC.

Let me tell the Treasurer, those figures are not as accurate as we would like them to be, although they're all we've got to go on.

I would anticipate, and hopefully I will be in Kemptville on December 20 to watch the glare of the television lights, as we have, at last, this promised agreement which I raised, together with my friend from Victoria-Haliburton and others, as late as December 1978 at which time—and I don't have the Hansard here to prove it—we were told we were on the verge of signing at that particular time.

We must have a strategy. We, in the eastern region, must know what it is. It must concern itself with an accommodation to what's already there, recognizing the energy resources around places like Chalk River, the tourist potential of the upper valley, the forest industries that have been there, the agricultural base that exists there. Those four areas are, surely, well established in the tradition of the economic history of the particular region.

I want to see your government move to introduce, in a meaningful way, new and creative programs that will supplement those already there. As the minister knows, the record of DREE in my part of the province, has not been very good. The record of DREE, in the words of my federal associate from Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, "is less than what we would like to have seen." The governments, both federal and provincial, have acquired pretty bad names as economic players in the local region, sponsoring many fly-by-night operators who have left a residue of unhappiness and obligation that do not reflect very well upon government in its responsibilities.

To conclude these remarks, I look forward to the engineer from Barcebridge getting on with the job; defining some strategic possibilities that will deliver the kind of employment we want; employment that we need, not for 1985, but for the winter of 1979-80, a winter which, thanks to Joe Clark, is, as I said earlier, going to be a winter of some considerable discontent for many disadvantaged people as a result of federal Conservative mismanagement.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, C. D. Howe, a man whom I think all of us respect regardless of our party affiliations, would have one advantage or disadvantage, depending on how one looked at it. He had a war going. There is something about a war that allows certain decision-making processes to be shortened.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Minister, which war was going on between 1948 and 1957?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Of course, there was one war going on. The member may not remember it, but we had the Korean war on for a bit of the time. It takes a bit of time to unwind after a war.

Mr. Conway: Read the book, Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'd be glad to.

Let me talk briefly about Timbertown. The member is quite right when he says it's not a solution. But a solution is a series of parts, I hope he would agree.

The member's own area is dependent upon the wood industry, tourism and one or two other things. The potential for tourist development is good. It is on a major corridor through Canada. While there may be changes in the types of traffic, I sense there may be, still, a good deal of Canadian-based tourism. As a matter of fact, I've gone so far as to say that I sense the world shortages of fuel are changing the patterns of vacationing enough to make Canada, and particularly Ontario, the net beneficiary of the change. I believe that change was evidenced this year in perhaps the best summer the resort part of the tourist industry has seen for some years. That was true across Ontario, and it may be true across Canada.

I have some experience with attractions, as you may well know. Last night I dropped out of character and, in fact, acted as Santa Claus for a party, dressed in a costume. Of course, having read the long list of the kinds of things your riding has got from us, I think the member would be the first to agree that is just simply an extension of my real life operation into my after-working hours.

Timbertown's real use is not just the number of jobs it may create per week. Any major attraction, like the one being built north of Toronto, has to have a fairly lengthy season today to survive. It can't be 52 weeks, but it may easily be 26 weeks, or 28 or 30 weeks.

I believe the one north of Toronto was aiming at 34 weeks a year, a fairly lengthy time. For the 18 weeks it is down, I am sure a large number of people will still be on staff.

That is true of the little business I run called Santa's Village. It is true of others, but what does that one do, in an area that has suffered all the economic problems, for the area? It brings 120,000 people a year through the town. It lets the main street merchant sell them something; it lets the restaurant business sell them something; it immediately stimulates the motel and hotel business in the area.

The spinoff effects of any major attraction, in terms of the support and service industries, is absolutely astounding. What do those industries, in turn, do? Right now at my place we are busy building, as I am sure many tourist operators are, whether they are employing themselves or doing what I do, hiring local builders, plumbers, electricians and contractors. People are at work right now. The tourists have gone home, but the tourist dollars are being spent in the off-season.

The quick dismissal of the small numbers that may be on site overlooks the spill-off effect, which is the very reason for having it.

Ste.-Marie-among-the-Hurons, which is hardly comparable, as it was put there strictly because of its authentic, historic fact, draws tens of thousands—hundreds of thousands of people per year.

Upper Canada Village specifically, located where it was, and I haven't the attendance figures, but something strikes me they attract in the range of 300,000 people a year. That may be going down slightly.

I've had a great fight for the last few years to maintain a steady attendance figure at the village, although sales go up, because we are seeing demographic changes as time goes on. Some people in this world aren't doing their share to maintain the population. I wouldn't want to impugn the member for Renfrew North, but I don't think he has been too productive in that area.

Mr. Conway: My colleague from Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) and I, on average it works out to—

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's true. It's 11.5 each on average. No, maybe we better keep him in Renfrew South—oh no, we need some in Renfrew North because it is getting closer, isn't it? In any case, I just like to say those things.

I would also like to point out to my colleague—no, I wouldn't like to point out to my colleague. The points we just brought up—

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I mustn't be taunted this way. I think simply, to say to my honourable colleague, "Let us not discount it." There are some risks, but surely, that is the only time government is justified in becoming involved in these things.

The province of Ontario wasn't required to put up any money for the Canadian Leisure World, or whatever it is called, at Maple. That is because a set of people, rightly or wrongly, let's not argue the pros and cons of that, especially with my deputy living how close to it? Well close. Let's not argue any of those kinds of issues, the fact is simply that a series of investors, after an analysis, decided they could make a profit on it and decided to do it. They are estimating two to three million visitors a year at that location. The economic spill-off of that would be absolutely fantastic.

I know each person who enters Santa's Village spends about $6.50. They would estimate each person entering there would spend $15. That doesn't mean too much, but how much do they spend in the area? In the area, the multiple is probably 10 to one in total, and that is the multiple we are after.

In the honourable member's area, if the study for Timbertown doesn't bring private money out of the woods through a small business development corporation through an employment development loan, then possibly the role of government is to see that it happens. That is the difference; a few years ago I wouldn't have seen that as necessary.

In Muskoka we had a steam-theme park study, much the same as your Timbertown study. The statistics all show that, given that attraction X-number of hundreds of thousands of people will visit every year, and the benefits to the area will be thus and so. So I say, let us not put it down the tube too quickly.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Chairman, one final comment to the Treasurer. I want to be very clear on this, because I know other members may find this a little too parochial; but it is important to the county of which I am one of the two members. I have no objection whatsoever to this concept being generated and being advanced as part of the tourist sector. Bravo, fine. However, I do want to reiterate my concern with the impression that is clearly being left by the government that this is a centrepiece for long-term structural readjustment within the local economy. It will not do simply what many will expect it to do, and that is deliver full-time employment to many people in the area. It must not be advanced as a solution to that very serious local concern.

As far as a part of the local tourist economy, as I said earlier, I can certainly support it and live with it under the terms that have been advanced by this government. I would not wish to be on the record as being anything other than supportive of it as part of the local tourist mosaic. But it cannot be understood and it must not be advanced as a major job-creation scheme that will somehow deal with the serious unemployment problems under which communities like Renfrew and Pembroke have suffered since the decline of the great lumbering period earlier in the century. That is my concern.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Do you mean when your grandparents cut more trees than they should have?

Mr. Conway: That's right.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I missed one point, Mr. Chairman, in my wrap-up.

Mr. Chairman: Are you going to reply to that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am just responding to a point I meant to reply to earlier where he and I both agreed, and that was on DREE assistance in general to Ontario, and he of course was interested specifically in his area.

I would have to say Ontario has never been satisfied that it got its fair share of DREE money. The statistics are simple. DREE expenditures in Ontario were not quite six per cent of its budget. The national per capita spending by DREE was about $20. The Ontario spending was $332. One province, Prince Edward Island, got $265 per capita DREE spending. DREE was aimed at helping less fortunate parts of this country to expand, or to do works that would generate and generally improve their economy.

Our argument with the previous government—and so far we haven't had to stress this too much with the present one, we may have to—has been that they look upon Ontario as an economic whole, rather than a very large province with regions that are just as much in need of economic assistance as any of the other provinces; greater in population, and therefore deserving of special attention. That is why we will continue to press to see that the northern and the eastern parts of Ontario get the kind of assistance through DREE that we believe is fair for the province.

Mr. Warner: It is fascinating to sit here this morning and listen to the economic plans for the province being revealed by the Treasurer. Your answer to our economic ills, it seems, is to create a Florida of the north, turn it into a Walt Disney World. I am surprised you don't want to plant palm trees down University Avenue. In the face of the serious economic problems which this province faces, serious to a structural point in our economy, your answer is to build a Disney World up near Maple, or some place.

Like the member for Renfrew, I will raise a parochial matter, but it touches on a problem that exists throughout this province. In my riding there was a plant, ESB of Canada, part of the infamous Inco holdings. A more irresponsible corporate citizen one can't find on the face of the earth.

They decided for their own reasons—wanting to get out of a collective agreement, wanting to exploit cheap labour somewhere else—that they would close the plant and relocate it somewhere else. One hundred and sixteen men were thrown out of work. It didn't mean anything to Inco of course. But I will say Mr. Treasurer that some of those people had spent a good portion of their lives doing nothing else but working at ESB. After 20 or 25 years, the thanks they got was to be thrown out on to the street.

I ask the minister, if some workers have only limited skills and training, and if they are aged 45 or 50, in today's world where do they go to find a job when they have been thrown out through no fault of their own? What compounded the matter for some of those men was the fact that they had some Workmen's Compensation Board claims. They had a minor injury on the job and they were still working, but because they have a WCB claim, that's another strike against them when they go to look for work. No recognition of seniority, no recognition of the fact that they had poured 20 years of their lives into creating profits for Inco.

I asked the Minister of Industry and Tourism and the Minister of Labour to do a couple of very simple things to help stop the runaway plants, because ESB isn't alone. I don't know if there are any runaway plants from the Renfrew area, but in total there is apparently somewhere in the neighbourhood of 1,100 in the Metro Toronto area that have run away, to locate somewhere else. So thousands of people are put out of work as that happens. There is no protection for those employees, no protection.

I asked the minister if it didn't make sense, if a company wanted to relocate somewhere else, that they must first guarantee that the wage rate will be the same where they move. Second, the contract will carry through. Third, the first job openings will be given to the present employees and fourth, where those employees agree to take the job in the new location, that the moving expenses be paid. Four very simple, reasonable conditions.

Surprise, surprise. Neither the Minister of Labour nor the Minister of Industry and Tourism could agree with that. They would much rather leave those people to be unprotected and out of work.

Unemployment is a serious problem. No matter how affable the present Treasurer is and no matter how pleasant a person he may be, he cannot hide from the fact that there are thousands of people in Ontario who want jobs and can't get them. Some of those people happen to live in my riding. It is a disgrace, an absolute disgrace. What makes it tragic is the fact that it doesn't have to occur. If the Treasurer had any idea about how to plan the economy of this province, we wouldn't have people out of work.

I'll touch on one of those, one which the Treasurer has done absolutely nothing about and that is foreign ownership. I am right now having the distinct pleasure of reading over the personal opinion letters that are mailed back to me from constituents, there are about 500 of these letters right now.

Mr. Conway: Read them all.

Mr. Warner: I'd be happy to read every-one of them. Almost every single one of these makes a comment on the extent of foreign ownership. Most people are writing down comments to the effect that foreign ownership is costing us jobs. How much longer will we tolerate foreigners owning our economy? Why doesn't the government demand that any foreign investment can be only to the tune of 49 per cent? Of course I have to write back to them and tell them that, in answer to their questions, the government has no intention of limiting the amount of foreign investment. The government has no intention of making sure we retain our economic independence.

What really scares me is that down the line if we don't have economic independence, we may not have political independence. That's not important to this government. It doesn't mean anything. But it does cost jobs, and the minister knows it as well as I do. It costs jobs in two main ways. Foreign ownership of our natural resources and of other industries normally precludes any secondary industries being developed. That's where the jobs are.

My good colleague from Nickel Belt can tell you about the tragedy in the mining machinery industry. He will tell you how we have lost our opportunities to develop real jobs in the secondary industries related to mining, the real jobs that would have been created by having a machinery industry located in the north. My other colleagues from the north can tell you similar stories related to the other natural resources there, forest products or iron ore, you name it. We have lost jobs and they are not about to be recouped.

The second major way in which we lose jobs through foreign ownership is that when things get tough in the United States, where's the first place to have a plant closing? Canada. Would an American shareholder demand of his company that it close an American plant first, ahead of a foreign one? Of course not. The plant closings we have seen over the past few years have been the result of the economic pressure on the American industry.

This government stands idly by, watching passively and suggesting we can solve the problem by creating a Disney World some place. I think the government lives in a Disney World. I wish the Treasurer would reflect for a moment back to the history of the province of Saskatchewan. He will recall in 1946—

Mr. Conway: I remember it well.

Mr. Warner: You would.

Ms. Gigantes: He wasn't born then. Don't let him con you.

Mr. Warner: No, but he has read every history book going. In 1946, when the CCF came to power, Saskatchewan was the second poorest province in the country. It couldn't borrow money. A third of the provincial budget was used to pay off the interest on the debt. In the midst of that economic problem, they began what is the most important social program Canadians have ever had the benefit of, medicare. They also set out an economic plan whereby they could develop the economy of Saskatchewan.

Thirty years later, they now have what I would guess to be the most strong and viable economy of all the provinces, except perhaps for Alberta which is dripping in oil. The main reason why the province of Saskatchewan has been able to attain economic independence, as much as a province is able to do within Confederation, is that it zeroed in on its natural resources. The delicious irony, about which many of us are so pleased, is that it culminated when the Premier of Saskatchewan went to the money market in New York and borrowed money from the Americans to buy out the American companies in Saskatchewan. That was a landmark for Canadians and something about which every Canadian should be justly proud.

For the first time, the people of Saskatchewan would have some control over the development of their natural resources and every penny of profit would remain within the province of Saskatchewan. It wouldn't be flowing south of the border as the profits from this province do. Further, it would be the people of the province who would be employed to run that industry, not foreigners.

Guess what—production increased, profits increased. The province, I understand, shortly past Christmas will show a plus of $1 billion in its heritage fund.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Thanks to our oil money.

Mr. Warner: No, the Treasurer hasn't been listening, has he? He's tuned out. He's thinking about selling used cars someplace. He's lost between the used car market and Disney World. Why doesn't he put the two of them side by side?

Hon. F. S. Miller: At least I can understand the real world. I've been in it.

Mr. Warner: The real world, Mr. Chairman, is where a province says, "We will develop our natural resources for the people of the province and not for some foreign multinational." That's the real world. That takes courage. It takes courage, but when you get the courage you find out that it works.

The Treasurer sits there shaking his head. I'm not sure whether he is falling asleep or disagreeing with me. If he's disagreeing with me, take a look at the balance sheet for the province of Saskatchewan. Also take a look at the unemployment figures and the cost of living and the social programs they're able to supply.

We're fighting desperately to hold onto OHIP in this province. In Saskatchewan they're expanding their health-care program; free dental care for children up to the age of 12. They're looking at programs for eye glasses and for dentures. They're expanding their social programs. Meanwhile, in this province, we have to fight every inch of the way to protect our health-care system because this government wants to dump it out and give it back to private insurance companies. It's a sad and pitiful day.

It all comes back to the fact that this government doesn't know how to manage the economy of this province. It knows the answers and refuses to do anything about it.

The answer's quite simple and the Treasurer knows it. It comes to having control over our natural resources and developing them so that we could develop the secondary industries, the manufacturing, the finished goods. Why should we send our iron ore or anything else to Norway to be finished? Why should we be sending resources to Japan? Why shouldn't we be developing them here in this province?

The Treasurer says, "Why not? Because we don't dare fight those multinationals. They're too big for us. They're too powerful." Well, the poor little have-not weak sister province of Saskatchewan stood up to the multinationals and used the money from Chase Manhattan Bank and some of those other places to buy out the American companies.

Right here in our own province, a little closer to home, I might refer to de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited. The little gang of bumblers presently up there in Ottawa wants to get rid of de Havilland. The Treasurer knows the story of de Havilland. As a private company it was a loser. The government bought it and turned it into a winner. Now, our Prime Minister wants to sell it off. There are no guarantees, at this point, that de Havilland will not move out of this province.

Is the Treasurer prepared—if Joe Clark continues along his stumbling path to rid us of the winners and pick up losers—is he prepared on behalf of this government to take over de Havilland to ensure that it remains in public control and in Ontario? Perhaps he'd like to buy some of the planes and put them in his Disney World.

Surely we can get a commitment from this government, since it knows the successful track record of de Havilland; surely, if Joe Clark is determined to destroy the potential aerospace industry, surely we can get commitment from this Treasurer to retain de Havilland in public hands in this province? Nothing could be more reasonable. I'm still waiting for him to make the statement.

Despite the rhetoric, not only from the minister but from the Premier and the Minister of Energy, we still do not have the assurance that this government will oppose in every conceivable way the selloff of Petrocan. We still don't have an assurance that the minister will oppose the sale of Petrocan in absolutely every conceivable way available to him, through our federation.

I don't need to remind him that part of the debate we had yesterday, part of the fury that's going on in this country from one coast to the other, would have been lessened tremendously had the Prime Minister not decided to meddle with Petrocan.

The Treasurer will recall that Petrocan was on the verge of making a contract arrangement, an agreement, with Venezuela and Mexico, the total of which would have supplied approximately 150,000 barrels of oil a day. Then along comes Joe Clark. Joe wants to get rid of the Canadian interest in the oil industry and Joe wants to turn it over to the Americans. The deal, the potential agreement with Venezuela and Mexico was just so much oil slick at that point. The agreement was never signed and the 150,000 barrels a day—which obviously would be of immense benefit to eastern Canada—is gone. Where was this government? Sitting on the sidelines. I reply to them and I tell them. I send them little copies of your speeches about how to turn the economy around by building a Disney World somewhere. I send them copies of those speeches, Mr. Treasurer.

Mr. Chairman, I don't know how much longer the people of Ontario will tolerate a government which cannot run the economy properly. As they look at other provinces, as they look particularly at Saskatchewan and see how well an economy can be run; see a province which started from a have-not basis, so deeply in debt that no one would lend it money, move to a position where almost all of its citizens are now working, where they have social programs far in excess of what we have in Ontario, and where, on the average, the people are enjoying a much better lifestyle.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Why are you staying here?

Mr. Warner: I'm staying here to turf you out of office and to bring to the people of Ontario the kind of sound economics which the people of Saskatchewan enjoy. That's why I'm here.

Mr. Conway: But are you going to sell their wheat?

Mr. Warner: Sure, would you like to buy some?

I don't know, as I say, how much longer the people of Ontario will tolerate absence of planning. What I do know, through the hundreds of letters that I get, is that the people are aware of the minister's lack of planning and they are frightened about the level of foreign ownership.

I would like to know before we adjourn today whether or not the Treasurer intends to respond to my question about de Havilland, because I think that's an essential item; and second, if he intends to respond to my questions about the runaway plants. I'd like to know whether or not he is going to make any significant changes to that. Those are two specific questions.

Quite frankly, I don't expect the Treasurer to make any commitment about the ownership of natural resources because I know he doesn't believe in that. I know he is quite happy to see foreigners own our natural resources.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's not the same thing.

Mr. Warner: I will just tell you that I want control of our natural resources here in Ontario. When we are the government that is precisely what we will do—the first order of business. I look forward to the next provincial election—to that delicious opportunity.

While the Treasurer is sitting here not supplying any answers to my questions, my assistant is over with a tape measuring his office.

Other members may have questions to raise and I certainly don't wish to get into a filibuster competition with the member from Renfrew. But I would appreciate it if the Treasurer would answer those two specific questions which I raise. Thank you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, the honourable gentleman from Scarborough-Ellesmere, with the grey vest, emulating those of us whom he despises, reminds me of the man with a blindfold feeling an elephant and trying to determine what he had hold of.

He came in during the middle of my speech, heard one of his colleagues talk about one topic, Timbertown, and assumes that in that he has seen the sum and substance of economic planning for Ontario. Then he reacted, following that, with a lot of comments alluding to that one point.

He talks about the planned economy. I am always delighted when I can get to the true philosophical differences. My colleague from Nickel Belt and I have had this chat before; you and I haven't. I'm delighted when you stand up and differentiate between you and me because I'm proud of the differences. I haven't got the slightest reason to stand here and tell you that I shouldn't differentiate. I should. I should let the people of Ontario know what I stand for and what you stand for.

And I do not stand for public ownership. I stand for Canadian ownership and the two are different. I believe in the public having their ownership through the traditional routes of equity, not through government. That is the only way I have ever seen to make sure companies operate in a profitable manner in the interests of the economy and of the people in that economy.

The planned economics of some of the nations of the world that keep on being thrown at us are fascinating. I could talk about any one of the businesses I have been in but I just compare one.

You tend to forget it didn't rain for about 10 years in Saskatchewan. It's pretty darned hard for any government to make the economy look good in a weak province when there's no rain. You wouldn't remember those days, but I do. I think there is another member or two in this House who do too.

Mr. Warner: Talk about Saskatchewan.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm going to talk about that in a minute. My own summer resort handles about 120 guests. I have a staff of 16. I visited a socialist country recently where the summer resort handled 110 guests. It had a staff of 115. My friend, that is how they've solved unemployment problems in socialist countries. They keep giving people jobs whether there is something to do or not. That fundamentally is the difference.

Mr. Laughren: That's so superficial.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Superficial? The fact is it's true. Anybody can keep people working as long as they don't have to put something out at the other end.

You talk about Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan was without question a poor province. Under the NDP government, without question, it has become a very healthy province in an economic sense. The fact that it happens to have had a Socialist government during that period of time does not explain the results.

The member has chosen to say it does. In terms of the charges on its people, the NDP government in Saskatchewan, has to raise 17 per cent of the gross domestic product to run the government, compared to 13.9 per cent in Ontario. That's its own revenue and is apart from other sources of revenue.

In addition to that, for the one million people who live in Saskatchewan they got last year $58.4 million in equalization payments, 43 per cent of which came from Ontario. That's roughly $58 per capita. That's not bad. Ontario has always honoured its commitments to less fortunate provinces like Saskatchewan and sent its money to them. We're just asking that the oil rich provinces now recognize that responsibility as being a collegial one. Now that the resources have been found, thank goodness, in Saskatchewan—any government would look good if it found oil and potash—let us hope its economy continues to improve, in spite of the government the people have chosen to allow to run it.

I heard some comments about de Havilland. The member asked if I would make two public commitments: to keep it in public hands and in the province. My commitment will be to half of that, namely, to keep it in the province. I am going to do everything I can to keep it in the province. If that means public hands, so be it. We'll make every commitment to do our best to make sure that plant stays here because we're proud of it.

We're proud of the 5,000 people working there. We're proud of the product they make. We're proud of the fact that internationally it is recognized as a very fine company. We're proud of the fact that 85 per cent, I think it is, of its production goes to foreign markets, roughly $200 million this year and $300 million next year. We're proud of that and we're proud that Ontario people have had a part of it. We're going to do our best to maintain it here.

I can assure the member that whatever we have to do we'll be doing it in the best way possible. That doesn't necessarily mean that it's the public way. The aerospace industry has changed somewhat in the last few years since the government took it over. I think it was very important that the government stepped in there—and I'm not a critic of that—at a time when the aerospace industry was on its heels. I would that Canadair were as successful as de Havilland. Canadair looks as if it is but I'm not sure it is. It may be having a few more troubles.

On Petro-Canada, I can only repeat what the Premier said this morning. It intrigues me when people try to claim we haven't said something consistently when we have. The province of Ontario has consistently, through its papers, through its statements, through its Premier, claimed it was in the interests of Canada, even though it may offend some of the basic philosophies of our party, to see that a nationally-owned oil company continues because there are problems in this country in terms of the security of supply that do require a Canadian presence at a national level and not at a parochial provincial level. That is the basic reason for being interested in seeing that no one province can control what happens with a resource.

Mr. Warner: I asked you what you were going to do.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What are we going to do? Listen, we've gone to every conference. We've produced our papers, we've let the Canadian public know, we've stood on the rooftops and yelled.

Mr. Warner: Can't you do anything more?

Hon. F. S. Miller: What can we do, as politicians?

Mr. Warner: Don't you believe you can do anything more?

Hon. F. S. Miller: If there is more we can do, please suggest positive things. You'll find we're listening to you.

There is one last thing I want to point out. This is both good news and bad news. The member keeps pointing out that there is foreign money coming into Canada. It is partly by design, you know. You talk about the high interest rate policy, and whether it's right or wrong.

Leaving that aside for a moment the design of the high interest rate policy is to attract foreign capital. At the same time, it is to insist that Canadians borrow abroad in large dollar amounts. I'm not trying to defend it. I'm only explaining the central bank's thinking because, obviously, if Ontario Hydro is faced with a borrowing of $300 million and there is half a point to a point difference in the interest rates, or you take it out of Ontario Hydro and go to any other major corporation that is free to borrow wherever it will, those kinds of moneys over a period of time matter a lot.

I think I did the arithmetic in February, when we were in New York. One basis point in the loan over a period of 30 years cost $900,000. It was 30 times $300 million times 1/100th of one per cent. If the arithmetic works out it should be $900,000. When they are different by 60 basis points, that's $54 million. That's a very important point to remember. That's not something we do by choice.

There's a second reason why there is some borrowing done abroad. When a corporation like Hydro is required to invest, as it is now, to give us a security of supply of about $1.5 billion or $2 billion a year, in that range, of borrowings, the Canadian market can't always be counted upon to generate that kind of saving. Therefore, one has to have sources in markets on a regular basis to ensure you're recognized, understood, trusted and you have the sources when you need them. We've restricted ourselves pretty well to those.

One interesting thing is half of one per cent of the government of Ontario's funded debt is in foreign currencies.

Over the past five years, the rate of investment in Canada has been 24 per cent of the gross national product. Savings were only 22 per cent. Is our spending rate in investment too high? Or is our saving rate too low? Let's look at something.

In the United States, the rate of savings has only been 14 per cent, so Canadian savings have been much higher than American savings. The fact is we've been going through a very active development period in Canadian history. Maybe we're growing and developing too fast, but when you develop faster than your own rate of savings, you obviously have to import capital. That's basic to our future.

Imported capital isn't always the drag some of us think it is. It depends on how it's used. If it's used to pay for the current operations of a government, or for any government structure, a new library, a new highway, that's a drag because the money is borrowed in one place, used in the country and interest payments are made. But if it comes into this country and helps us establish an industry, which in turn sells in international markets, and the value added in Canada exceeds the interest payments abroad, it is not only not a drag, it is a positive benefit to our cash balance. Therefore, a foreign investment can not only provide employment, it can, if it is export oriented or import-replacement oriented, actually have other effects upon the economy that are positive.

Growing countries traditionally have had to depend upon foreign capital. The real issue is, are we encouraging Canadians to invest in their country at the desired rate, and by what mechanism. I would argue, as I did in my budget, that Canadians have listened too often to my friends in that party opposite and have become afraid of investing in equity and, in fact, are great investors in debt.

In the budget we took a couple of modest steps to encourage them to invest in equity. I am rather pleased that some of them are doing it, and I can only say that what we need to do is to encourage the unions, with their large funds, and the average home owner to think of Canadian investment.

The best way to make Ford of Canada a Canadian company is to buy its shares as far as I am concerned, because once the shareholders of this country own a good big chunk of it then we have that interest.

Mr. Chairman, the clock being so close to one, may I, at this point, adjourn the debate?

Hon. Mr. Wells moved the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12:58 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make, but unfortunately I don't have sufficient copies because it was not completed. If I may, I will wait until tomorrow when I can do it properly.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TEACHER-BOARD NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. S. Smith: If I asked where is everybody would that count as my first question, Mr. Speaker?

I will ask a question of the Minister of Education. Given we are now in the 26th school day of the strike in the Brant elementary schools and are continuing with the very divisive and bitter work-to-rule situation in North York; given that in Brant the teachers want arbitration but the board doesn't and in North York the board wants arbitration but the teachers don't; how long will it take before the minister realizes compulsory arbitration of a fair and reasonable kind is the proper way to settle disputes in the educational system and that this business of each side stubbornly clinging to its own demands and refusing to have a referee come in to take over the matter is a poor example to our children—especially in these days when we are asking the children to be better disciplined, yet we have the boards and the teachers refusing to do anything other than use their ultimate weapons in their negotiation of salary disputes?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would heartily agree with the Leader of the Opposition that arbitration is an appropriate alternative, in some situations, in resolving labour-management disputes and that it's one which should be considered seriously in the course of any set of negotiations.

The Leader of the Opposition is asking that at this point, in peremptory fashion, without considering the views of all those involved in the labour-management negotiation situation within the school system of Ontario—and I refer to representatives of boards of trustees, representatives of the teachers, representatives of parents' groups with a very direct concern, and representatives of students—without these groups being given any opportunity to place before the external review committee their concerns about the appropriate mechanisms and sanctions which should be introduced in the context of the negotiations between teachers and school boards, that I act in a unilateral fashion, which I believe at this point to be quite inappropriate.

I would ask the Leader of the Opposition to develop his thesis in the best possible form to present as rapidly as possible to the chairman of the committee which is reviewing Bill 100 so it can be considered by that committee which will be reporting to me in the very early spring of 1980. If at that time there are strong recommendations by that committee that major changes should be made to the bill, particularly changes related to the sanctions available under the act—sanctions which I would remind the members of this House were supported by all three parties and were introduced by the then leader of the official opposition—

Mr. Nixon: That's not correct.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Well certainly the support was there for it at that time, and it was initiated in that part of the House. I do believe the democratic process must and should be permitted to take place in the review of this bill; I would ask the Leader of the Opposition to consider that action seriously.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, and I may say I sincerely am pleased the minister is over her laryngitis, I would ask the minister if she's really being serious? Surely she understands this House is the appropriate place for the opposition to put forward suggestions, and given virtually everyone in Ontario who is politically aware recognizes the minister is at some point going to adopt our position, just as her parliamentary assistant already has, why doesn't the minister do so now rather than wait for the excuse of her so-called external review, or wait for an election campaign before she takes our position? Why doesn't she do what everybody knows she is going to do ultimately; that is take our position now, introduce a form of reasonable, professional, permanent arbitration and get these matters settled rather than dragging them out for political purposes?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am persuaded from time to time that the Leader of the Opposition did relatively well in his other existence, although there are times when I would have some difficulty in being sure just what to expect as a result of the initial statement made by him. I am not quite sure of the meaning when he congratulates me on regaining my voice: there may be some ulterior motive there.

I would have to remind the Leader of the Opposition he is not a very good prognosticator either, and to tell this House I am going to adopt his position—which I would remind the House was indeed final offer selection—at the end of the external review committee's activities, I believe is using a crystal ball which is either veiled in some peculiar shades or is so totally cloudy he hasn't any idea what is going on.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that a major reason there are problems in the working of Bill 100 right now is the chronic underfunding of education there has been across the province over the past few years by this government, the fact that the provincial share of education costs have fallen from 61 per cent to 51 per cent over the course of the last few years, and the fact that despite the minister having had the report from the Jackson commission on declining enrolment on her desk over the course of the last year there has been no action by this government in implementing the recommendations of that report?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no; but I would remind the leader of the third party that we have already implemented some of the recommendations of the Jackson commission, and indeed we did implement them before the final report of the commission was delivered to my desk, which I would remind the honourable member was February of last year.

Mr. Speaker, we have been looking at all of the responses to the Jackson report and the honourable member knows that we will be bringing forward a comprehensive statement on education within this province in the very near future, however I would like to remind the honourable member that if he were to take into account all of the funding which is provided by the provincial government on behalf of education in this province, the total percentage of the provincial contribution is closer to 58 per cent than 51 per cent, and the total decline is not nearly so massive as the leader of the third party would like people to believe.

Mr. Nixon: If the minister cannot report to the House anything from the Education Relations Commission that would indicate an approach to an agreement in the Brant/Brantford situation, is she now prepared to recommend to her colleagues and to the House that we take action in this House to end the strike, certainly before we think of an adjournment during the next week or two?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I can report to this House that the Education Relations Commission, as the honourable member knows, was actively involved in Brant over the weekend with some progress, although not sufficient progress. There is, I am afraid, at this point a considerable amount of games playing within the Brant situation. I think that must be made public, because it seems to me the children in that area are being jeopardized by the kind of example which is being set in that area, although in fact I have no report that their educational program has been jeopardized at this point.

Mr. Speaker, there is in addition a report from the Education Relations Commission that negotiations took place over the weekend in North York as well. They were not particularly productive, but I can report to the House that at the request of the North York Board of Education I will be meeting with them this afternoon. I do not know the purpose of their request for the meeting, except that they did suggest there was an impasse and they wished to have a discussion with me about that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Given the fact that both sides are adamant and refuse to move at this time, and the fact that this Legislature will cease to function about December 20 and will not resume until about the end of February or March, what does the minister see or foresee as available options, or what actions does she intend to take to prevent any harm in the educational process of the children in Brant due to the fact that possibly nothing will be done for the next two months?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am not nearly so pessimistic as the member for Brantford obviously is. It is my understanding that the Education Relations Commission is still carefully and closely monitoring the educational program for the children in Brant, it is also my understanding that they are keeping a very close eye on what is happening; but there can be no solution to that problem unless the two parties to the negotiation decide they are going to change the attitudes which have been prevalent up until this time. It is my sincere hope they will begin to behave in a responsible way related to the children of that community in order to ensure that the very few items still in dispute are negotiated rationally by the two parties within the next two days. If that were to happen there would be a solution immediately.

NATURAL GAS CONVERSION

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy, if I might have his attention. Given the fact the main reasons for the backlog in conversions to natural gas from oil have to do with manpower and to some extent with weather problems, what has the government of Ontario done to get rid of that backlog, to anticipate the problem and to provide the extra manpower which might be necessary so that this fall could have been used more intelligently to get people converted to natural gas, since the government of Ontario has known for years that natural gas would be plentiful while oil would ultimately be in short supply?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in reporting to the standing general government committee on this subject matter we did share some facts and figures with respect to the tremendous increase in conversions being undertaken by the distributors. It was my understanding, in consulting with them to acquire that information, that they were proceeding to the extent of the resources that were available. There are not just the limitations imposed by manpower but rather by a shortage of some equipment, for example burners which they did not have available.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware, as anybody could be by doing what we have done and getting in touch with the two main companies, that the main reasons for the backlog have to do with a lack of manpower and with weather problems? The burners and furnaces were a small matter, they could handle those, but they've lacked the manpower to get out there and do the job. Why didn't the minister, over the late summer and throughout the fall, work with those companies to give them the manpower they need? We have enough unemployed people in Ontario thanks to the previous efforts of his government, why didn't we work with the companies to put those people to work so these conversions could occur?

In particular, would the minister like to comment on what he's done with the companies regarding the matter of Pine Valley Farms in Norval, which has a large greenhouse and wants a gas pipeline? The farm is within 800 feet of a Union Gas line and three miles from a Consumers Gas line, and yet Consumers Gas has a monopoly so the farm is still unable to get the natural gas which could have enabled them to save on other fuel? What is he doing about that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the problem which the honourable Leader of the Opposition raises in the latter part of his question, but obviously I'd be glad to get information to follow up on that particular question.

Certainly, if labour is the only problem being experienced by the distributors in order to step up the conversion, I'm sure they would have programs and resources and access to the labour market in order to step that up. I say to the House quite honestly that in seeking information from the distributors I was told that one of the main problems was the fact that the supplier of some of the equipment that was required was falling behind in his orders, notwithstanding how many more men they might have.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the government have a plan and projection for the rate of conversion from fuel oil heating to natural gas heating over the course of the 1980s? Has the government communicated that plan to the natural gas distributors across the province to see whether it's feasible; and have this minister and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) and other ministers, as needed sat down to establish where there may be bottlenecks in reaching that target and taken action to ensure those bottlenecks can be ironed out so that the rate of conversion can be achieved?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think that's a reasonable question. The discussions have been going on for some time. I think a lot of people, including ourselves, are waiting for some of the final details with respect to the gas incentive program to see what resources might be available. It is my understanding that companies will then be attaching certain priorities with respect to the program, particularly as they relate to the results of extensions.

In the meantime, if the companies are doing the reasonable thing they are working in the densely-populated areas to attempt, as quickly as possible, to respond to the tremendous number of requests there are now for this conversion in the large centres.

Mr. J. Reed: Does the minister recall that when we discussed this matter during estimates of the Ministry of Energy that one of the bottlenecks to increasing the gas infrastructure was identified as the artificial line that was set up giving one gas company a monopoly in one area and another one a monopoly in the other area? I'm sure the minister must recall that. In the light of the very specific mention by my leader, what action has he taken in matters of this kind, where relative to this specific situation the conversion from oil to natural gas would save about 75,000 gallons of heating oil in this next winter?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is the member referring to the latter part of the Leader of the Opposition's question with respect to Pine Valley Farms?

Mr. J. Reed: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I indicated when I gave my answer that I would get some further information on that.

AUTO INDUSTRY LAYOFFS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism about the layoffs which have now put one quarter of the workers in Ontario's major industry out of work, that is in the auto industry.

In view of the fact there are 13,000 workers on indefinite layoff and next week there will be 14,000 workers on temporary layoff in the automobile industry, can the minister undertake to call together all of the major companies in the auto industry and in the parts manufacturing industry, as well as the leadership of the automobile workers, in order to bring together plans to resolve the crisis in the industry and get people back to work in Ontario in the auto trade?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Over the past few months I have met with all the persons of whom the leader of the third party talks.

Although the meeting with the United Auto Workers concentrated on the Chrysler situation, we did take advantage of that very constructive conversation we had in that lengthy meeting to discuss the automotive industry generally. It seemed to me at that time that all of the major automobile manufacturers, the UAW and all of the parts people to whom we have spoken, and we have spoken to all of the large parts firms, agreed with regard to the essential problems we are now facing, which mainly centre around the massive changes the industry is undergoing, as well as the problems in terms of markets.

The market for the automobiles being put out here and in the United States is very bad; it's very slow for the automobiles being made here. The plain fact of the matter is that little will be accomplished in terms of putting those people back to work in the short term through all of us in the province being called together again to simply repeat everything we've all agreed upon over the last several months.

Let me deal with one more item in the short term: I should remind the leader of the third party that in the short term the layoffs in this country, on a percentage basis, are substantially less than the layoffs occurring in the United States.

Mr. Laughren: Our sales are up, too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is absolutely true, and the member's leader acknowledged that was true. The member for Nickel Belt should turn around before he interjects.

The layoffs here are proportionately less than in the United States. We aren't getting too badly treated in that sense.

It is a critical situation and we're most concerned about it. The only point I raise for the leader of the third party is that these solutions take a lot of money and take a period of time to solve. They will be solved, I am confident. I think all of the people with whom we have met, including the UAW, are fairly confident that in the longer term, that is over the next three or four years, they will be solved. I think most analysts of the industry see that after this current year there should be a lot of those people who are currently laid off going back to work.

It's a critical situation, we're not happy with it; but I say to the leader of the third party I think we've done literally everything we can do as a province at this time to deal with that situation.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Before the Legislature is drowned in the tears being shed by the minister over the critical state of the industry, is the minister not aware that when we were out to see General Motors just a week or so ago for example, we found that company has no plans to bring into Canada, or into Ontario, the small cars which are the wave of the future in terms of providing jobs in the automobile industry in North America?

What action is the government intending to take under the auto pact in order to ensure we are making the cars that will be selling in the future, rather than being landed with white elephants, cars that are too large and consume too much gasoline to be effective contenders in the North American marketplace over the 1980s?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The leader of the third party wants to give the impression General Motors is not giving us any share of the action on the new, lighter, fuel-efficient vehicles. The member knows that's not accurate. The member is well aware of the almost $2 billion in commitments General Motors made a couple of weeks ago, which would involve putting a great deal of money into their Windsor plant to begin to assemble the front-wheel drive transmissions that otherwise the member and others would have expected might not have come into Ontario.

The member also knows they just committed money, in both Windsor and St. Catharines to begin to make lighter, more fuel-efficient engines which will enable them to supply their new X-bodied cars. So that Ontario will have a large portion of the new X-bodied cars, their new car of the future as it were.

Look at the press release, it's right there. Two billion dollars directly pointed towards those new cars; these units can't be used in other cars.

The second point is Ford was in the same situation a year and a half ago. The member knows we were there and he knows we made sure they switched to the new V-6 light engines, thanks to the contribution made by the government—the taxpayers of this province more accurately—in order to ensure we had our fair share of the new jobs provided through Ford's new vehicles.

I've also dealt in this House with the situation at Chrysler, where while other governments are talking about putting in bridge financing and bank guarantees I've made it clear as far as the government of Ontario is concerned any financial contribution, be it grant, loan-guarantee or whatever, must be contingent upon Chrysler doing what Ford and GM have done, and that is to put components, plants, factories and employment in this province related solely to the cars to be sold in the next 10 or 20 years—the new technology, the lighter, fuel-efficient vehicles.

These are the things that caused the changeover from the current heavy, larger vehicles being made here to the lighter, fuel-efficient vehicles, not only mandated by American legislation but required by American consumers.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Is the Treasurer—the Minister of Industry and Tourism rather, a slip there.

Mr. Martel: A Freudian slip.

Mr. Laughren: I refer to the minister's ambitions that way.

Is the Minister of Industry and Tourism telling us he is satisfied with the announced investment plans of the Big Three as they apply to Ontario? Further, how can the minister talk about the need for time to resolve the problem? In the 1978 report done by the then Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs the problems expressed in that report were the same as the problems we're facing today, as a matter of fact they're probably worse today because of the down-sizing changes taking place. When is the minister going to get off the sidelines and into the game and tell the Big Three we're not happy with what is going on, and that their investment plans are inadequate for the future of jobs in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To the leader of the third party—sorry, Freudian slip. May I say, as I have said earlier—he wishes he had Stephen Lewis's job, not his—may I say to the member for Nickel Belt, as I have said here earlier, we have quite seriously told the Big Three we are not satisfied with the current level of investment here. We're terribly dissatisfied with what has now become a serious and perhaps even chronic trade deficit on the auto side and we have to have some things done which will help correct that.

By way of taking concrete action further on the auto parts side, the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and I met last April with the multinational firms and delivered that exact message. We spent a great deal of time talking about research and development and the need to make sure the Canadian subsidiaries get their fair share of the new technology in that area. As a result, we have had one of the big eight in the auto parts side build a new plant here. I've got another coming in to see me and I'm rather optimistic that will result in some more new auto parts activity, involving new technology, in this province.

So I must say to the member for Nickel Belt that I can't accept the analogy that we're sitting on the sidelines. It would be hard for him to find an example of a government that has been meeting with all the players involved more often, more regularly and more aggressively in terms of asking, demanding and trying to arrange for the kinds of things we need in this province.

I should remind the member for Nickel Belt that in some cases when we meet with them we find that investments that might otherwise be coming here might locate in one of the southern United States, and in those instances I'm happy to be in a position in which I can say to them, notwithstanding the opposition parties in this province, that we are prepared to offer the incentive grants to get those automotive jobs in our province.

PILKINGTON GLASS LAYOFFS

Mr. Cassidy: Bearing in mind these frequent meetings the minister has talked about have led us to a situation where the auto trade deficit this year will be the worst in Canada's history, I do want to ask him another question about a specific layoff in Scarborough at the Pilkington Glass Limited plant which makes auto glass. Has the minister met with Pilkington Glass Limited to talk about their problems and talk about that company's situation? What action does the government intend to take to protect the jobs of the 450 workers in that automobile glass plant, who now find their jobs have been eliminated because of a decision of a multinational corporation which has no other automobile glass production in North America?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The company met with officials from both my ministry and the Ministry of Labour. We have had meetings to discuss the situation. It is clear, I must say, that this is not one of those instances in which I can hold out much hope, as a result of those meetings, for the company being able to reconsider its decision.

I know the member wants to phrase it in the context of the firm being a multinational to give the full picture. He knows they had a severe loss of business. He knows they lost $14 million or $16 million in the past six or seven months. He knows the company attributes that loss of business to the fact that the firm was on strike for about six months, causing them to reconsider certain investment decisions they say they were about to take.

It is not my job, nor the job of this government, to take responsibility for the decision of that firm, be it multinational or Canadian. It is not my responsibility to comment upon whether that firm's decision might have been different had the union not chosen to strike the plant over the past six or seven months. The member may draw his conclusions and others may draw theirs. The fact is the company has lost $14 million or $16 million in Canada this year and it has decided that it must reassess its position. It has found it has lost certain markets to its two major competitors during the time the plant was on strike, and therefore has reached certain decisions which we cannot alter.

The Ministry of Labour is working with the firm to ensure that they meet all of the current labour laws in force in this province and meet their obligations under the existing union agreement.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Given the fact that in 10 months we have chalked up a $2.5 billion deficit in our automobile trade with the United States, I assume the minister agrees that we should be producing more rather than fewer components and parts for automobiles in Canada. I would, therefore, like to ask the minister, since there are no other corporations producing auto glass in Canada, what plans does the government have to ensure the auto glass that goes into cars produced in Canada is in future made in Canada and is not imported into this country, with the permanent loss of 450 jobs?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I say I believe that some of the business that was being done by Pilkington Glass Limited out of Scarborough has gone to PPG Industries Canada Limited in Owen Sound, the fine town of Owen Sound.

Mr. Cassidy: No.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member says no. I must tell him that as a result of our meetings with the firm they have acknowledged that their share of the automotive glass market has gone to Canadian Pittsburgh Industries Division in the fine town of Owen Sound. If that information which we have received and checked out is true, then our automotive parts deficit will not be affected by this particular closedown.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, if I can, because he has been involved in this process. Is he willing to conduct a full investigation of the labour practices of Pilkington Glass Limited, given that the company shut down the SC2 tank on September 7 as part of a systematic intimidation tactic and subversion of the bargaining process during the 16-week strike? Will he not agree to attempt to determine whether or not Pilkington Glass had actually decided before the strike to close down this line permanently?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, if that allegation is being made by workers or worker representatives then the Ontario Labour Relations Board should hear about it.

[Later (3:00):]

Mr. Cassidy: During the course of the discussion just now about the closing of the Pilkington plant in Scarborough, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) informed this House there was a plant in Owen Sound, the Canadian Pittsburgh Industries plant, which would in fact be supplying auto glass and is supplying some right now.

The minister was ill informed, Mr. Speaker; his information was inaccurate. We have checked with the company. They are not providing automobile glass right now. They may be doing it for next year. If the minister's information in this case reflects his knowledge of the industry in general then the workers of this province are badly protected by this government.

[Reverting (2:36):]

BRANT DISTRICT HEALTH COUNCIL

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Health, having to do with the acceptance of the resignations of eight members of the Brant District Health Council, with which he has been somewhat involved. Does the minister not agree with, or at least understand, the problems the members of the health council in Brant are experiencing, which I suggest are part of the problems of other health councils, that put them in conflict in that they are attempting to be an advisory group to the minister at the same time they are supposed to be spokesmen for the community?

Would the minister not agree that instead of simply accepting these regulations and throwing additional problems into the health situation in Brant and Brantford, he might very well put his mind to clarifying their terms of reference, which is really all the dissident members of the health council are asking, so that they will know in the future precisely what they are expected to do and so that they will not be seen simply as whipping boys for the minister, who is trying to shove his responsibilities off onto them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I certainly don't accept the latter part of that question. Let me, if I may, just take a few minutes to describe the message that I consistently have given to the health councils in the three years I have occupied this position. That is that clearly the ministry must retain and must carry out the responsibility for establishing provincial standards. Whether it is the level of funding for health units or the standards for beds or whatever it might be, health planning clearly is best effected when it is assisted by local people.

We accepted a long time ago that having a large concentration of bureaucrats at the centre of the system, at Queen's Park, is not the answer. It is interesting that a recent report prepared for the American government pointed to the Ontario system as a model for health planning, pointing out that we have fewer than one civil servant for each hospital in the institutional division of our ministry, which is a little known fact.

In the three years I have been minister I have met with countless health councils. Wherever I travel in the province I make a point of sitting down with them. We have held a conference regularly once a year for the health councils to review current issues and to explore any problems they are having.

With respect, I think their role is clear, they are advisory. We will accept our responsibility, certainly, for setting the standards; we look to them for advice on how the standards can and should be applied. Clearly that is not easy, especially when you are looking at the institution affected, because you are dealing with traditions, with vested interests, and if I may be so bold sometimes with empires that have to be questioned before you can arrive at a conclusion.

This was a most unfortunate situation, because we are talking about some extremely well qualified people. I regret very much losing their services to the health council, but it was clear on the advice I had from the chairman of the health council, in a telephone conversation as well as a letter—and if the honourable member hasn't seen a copy of that letter I would be glad to share it with him or any other member—it was clear, based on that advice, that we were dealing with something which was inevitable. In the interests of ensuring that the council did not become a lame duck council, and in the interests of carrying on their work in Brant county, I regrettably had to accept the health council chairman's advice to accept the resignations forthwith.

Mr. Nixon: Would the minister not agree that a rubber-stamp council would even be worse? If he is prepared to accept a recommendation from the chairman that eight members of the council should in fact be dismissed, although he did it by accepting their resignations, the chances are the minister is going to get a very pliable group representing the community of Brantford. Such a group will not have the confidence of the people in Brantford and which will leave the minister free to do as he is observed to have done, which is deal directly without going to the council anyway.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am glad the member raised that last aspect, because it seems to me there is a misconception abroad in Brant county which I would like to clear up right now.

There has been a variety of meetings in this last year. The council, the ministry and everyone concerned have been bending over backwards so that we can all work together to develop a rationalized plan, viable from many points of view, for the hospitals in that county. At every meeting in which I have participated the district health council has been represented by the chairman at least and the executive director, and sometimes other members of the council.

Mr. Nixon: They have heard the word "rationalization" only from the minister, it didn't come from the council.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, I don't believe that is correct, not in the slightest.

Mr. Nixon: That's what they resigned about.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, with respect, I think it is broader than that. I make a point of making sure the health councils are involved, because one of the quickest ways to destroy the health council is to allow unfettered end-runs and I don't allow them.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: I hope the minister is aware that all these hand-picked Tories will be supporting the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) at the next leadership convention.

Would the minister state whether he did meet with the four administrators of the hospitals in Brant without the benefit of any health council representatives being present? Further, in view of the fact there are vacancies on there, would the minister consider the possibility of holding open public meetings for the election of other representatives to the health council?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry, perhaps because there was a comment behind me, I missed the very first part of the member's question.

Mr. Makarchuk: Did the minister meet with the four administrators from the hospitals in Brant without health council members being present? If so, why did he, when there is a health council?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have already answered that. I said at every meeting in which I have participated with representatives of the hospital, representatives of the health council have been present. What is more, both administrators and board representatives, usually the chairman and in several cases the vice-chairmen as well, have been present.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. Makarchuk: He hasn't finished. What about public elections?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With regard to the latter, once the health council, working with the hospitals and the medical society, has been able to complete its implementation plan for rationalization, I anticipate early in the new year we will be advertising in the area for interested individuals to come forward, and through the health council we will interview prospective candidates and appoint new members.

CLEANUP OF SPILLS

Mr. Martel: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. In view of the spill of gas by Bot Construction Limited in 1976 and in view of the spill of gas just recently near Coniston, both of which have resulted in the contamination of the wells of the residents living adjacent to those facilities, can the minister indicate how frequently this type of spill is occurring in Ontario and who is responsible for paying the cost of providing temporary water and bringing about permanent solutions for the lack of water for those people whose wells have been affected?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I hope my memory doesn't fail me on this occasion. I would think there are in the order of 1,000 spills a year. I could be wrong on that and I will certainly correct it if I am wrong. There are a large number of spills of petroleum products. They are not all of large magnitude; some of them result in no harm, but some of them certainly do.

With the new legislation, the issue of who is responsible will be very clear.

Mr. Wildman: Who is responsible now?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I guess tomorrow night we will have the privilege of seeing that bill become a fact. At this minute in time it has to be done by negotiations among the companies, ourselves and the residents, which is an unsatisfactory arrangement; that is why the bill was brought into this Legislature.

In the one the member mentioned the responsibility is clearly the company's and I think it is taking that responsibility. It certainly isn't finalized yet. The long-term solution will be a communal well. Right at the minute, as the member is probably aware, there are only filters on those wells. We don't think that is the long-term solution for the problem.

Mr. Martel: In view of the letter which the ministry staff recently sent to a number of my constituents, a letter which I find offensive in its tone to people whose wells have been polluted, can the minister tell me why there would not be an agreement worked out to operate some of the equipment that's necessary, whereby the people whose wells have been damaged would not have to pay for appropriate electrical systems? If there was damage caused by the equipment that was used the constituents, the people whose wells have been damaged, are held responsible for any damage created by that equipment. Why should the onus be on the people whose wells have been damaged as opposed to those who have created the pollution?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I had a chance to read that letter. It's my interpretation that the onus for malfunction of the equipment is only so far as it would affect the owner's residence, the same as though he or she had purchased a filter or a pump from someone in the private sector, and if there was a malfunction of that pump the person wouldn't go back to the person who originally sold him that equipment. That's how I interpret that. If the honourable member thinks it is beyond that I certainly would check it again, but that equipment is basically on the property of the person, and therefore if it does go wrong it seems to me it's reasonable to expect they would look after the rented equipment as though it was their own.

NON-ALCOHOLIC WINES AND BEERS

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations in regard to dealcoholized wines and beer.

Since the Legislature amended section 3 of the Liquor Control Act in 1975 to allow the minister to place dealcoholized beverages in liquor stores across Ontario, why has the minister not gone ahead with this matter to give people a choice of beverage for themselves and to serve to their guests? Has the minister arrived at any policy in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the availability of this product—I don't like to say dealcoholized because it is not something the alcohol has been removed from, it is made so that the alcohol content is very low—the acceptance of them in the grocery store, or in the delicatessen, has proved relatively successful. Since that provides an immediate market, it's been chosen to go that route with the product rather than carry it in the liquor stores.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: That really isn't satisfactory. As the minister well knows there are lots of problems in selling them in grocery stores.

In view of the fact that the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) has indicated there is going to be $412 million revenue coming from the sale of alcohol in the province, does the minister not think it might be incumbent upon him to give people that choice by allowing these products in liquor stores? They would then be widely available for people who wish to provide beverages for parties and social gatherings at that same place so that they will be able to have a choice of either an alcoholic beverage or one without the alcohol in it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will be very glad to take a look at it again, but it seems to me this is the representative of a party that wants beer and wine sold in grocery stores, that was indicated at their last convention.

We are selling the nonalcoholic beverages. There is no restriction on them being sold in the grocery stores, or outlets other than those of the LCBO. If the member is so intent upon everything being convenient to the public in terms of the grocery store for alcohol products, I must admit I am a little bit baffled by the fact that unless they are sold in a liquor store they won't have acceptance, but I will take a look at it.

They have been, within the limits that can be expected, relatively successful products for the public. If the member is here to tell me there's a great demand out there, that's just not so. One of the problems, too, is that the demand for it isn't quite what people anticipated.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does the minister have a poll on that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, I don't have a poll on it. I happen to know the brewery and the other people who are the agents for that product.

ROYAL COMMISSION LEGAL FEES

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Attorney General, if I could gain his attention. The question is in reference to the rate of pay to legal counsel for royal commissions. Given that his guidelines, as stated on May 11 in this Legislature, were that legal counsel for royal commissions would be paid at the rate of $85 to a maximum of $850 per day, how does the Attorney General justify allowing Mr. Strosberg, who is the counsel to the commission looking into the confidentiality of health records, to bill in excess of $850 per day? Can the Attorney General explain to the people of Ontario that they are getting good value for their money, keeping in mind that even $850 a day is equal to seven weeks' work at the minimum wage this government imposes on the people?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the figures as set out in the guidelines referred to by the honourable member are correct as I recall them. So far as Mr. Strosberg is concerned in relation to the Krever royal commission on the confidentiality of health records, Mr. Justice Krever made a request of the ministry that given the demands being placed on Mr. Strosberg that he as commissioner was requesting the ministry to allow Mr. Strosberg to work more than the hours than would normally be expected. Rather than be perceived as not wanting—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They asked me a question, Mr. Speaker. I am doing my best to answer it and they don't want to hear the answer. I am surprised. What does one do about such rudeness?

Mr. Speaker: Just persevere.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Persevere; upwards and onwards. So given the very crucial importance of this commission and given the importance of Mr. Justice Krever's task, we in the Ministry of the Attorney General did not want to appear to be not assisting him, because I am sure if we had said no, we are not going to allow any departure from the guidelines, that very New Democratic Party caucus would have been accusing us of interfering with Mr. Justice Krever's ability to do his job.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary: Could I ask the Attorney General, is Mr. Strosberg also allowed to bill for Saturdays and Sundays? How does the Attorney General monitor his billings to ensure that the people of Ontario are getting X amounts of hours' work for each hour that he bills?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I understand they are monitored by the commissioner, Mr. Justice Krever.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I understand this matter has been repeatedly brought to the attention of the Attorney General, most recently just before the matter that was raised that had to do with his predecessor, John Clement, who is being paid $750 a day by Toronto to look into the size of policemen. Does the Attorney General not feel that somewhere between the minister's policy of noninterference and handing them the keys to the treasury there is a reasonable procedure whereby we can see that there is adequate counsel provided to our royal commissioners and at the same time the people can be assured they are getting value for money?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: You have to distinguish between the nature of commissions. When a judge is appointed to act as a royal commissioner we are really talking about something in the nature of a judicial inquiry. It has always been the policy of this government, and quite properly so, to allow a judicial officer conducting a judicial inquiry to choose his or her own counsel and to make some of the basic arrangements in order to enjoy and be perceived to enjoy the necessary independence necessary for him or her to carry on a judicial type of inquiry.

STERILIZATION OF THE MENTALLY HANDICAPPED

Mr. Sweeney: A question to the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: Given the release last week of the report of the Law Reform Commission of Canada on the sterilizing of mentally handicapped, given the fact the ban in Ontario is due to expire at the end of this month, and given that on September 6 the minister indicated in Charlottetown that he expected to have legislation before the House on this issue this session, where is that legislation? What is the policy of Ontario? What is going to happen?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will be making a statement on that matter dealing with the question of the legislation later this week. As regards the federal report to which the member refers, it is interesting to note they have basically taken due cognizance of the options paper we released in September in Charlottetown.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: How does the minister react to the statement within the report that most such sterilizations are done to protect society from the mentally handicapped rather than in the best interests of the individual himself or herself?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is one of those situations in which we, as legislators, should be careful not to presume to say absolutely, one way or the other, what is right and what is wrong. It is a very difficult situation involving the rights of parents as well as the rights of the individual, particularly the mentally incompetent individual, and one we are going to have to take very great care to resolve.

PARKS CANADA TRANSFER

Mr. Samis: A question to the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: Could the Treasurer tell the House what position his ministry has taken on the proposed transfer of Parks Canada's Ontario headquarters from Cornwall to the city of Peterborough with a loss of 180 jobs and a payroll of approximately $3 million?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, that issue I do not believe has come directly to Treasury. It may have. I have heard of the proposal but only indirectly, not through any direct contact with my federal colleagues. It may have been through the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), who may have heard of it.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Since the minister's predecessor, the president of Union Gas Limited, made a very strong public statement opposing the transfer from Cornwall to the city of Guelph in 1977, does the minister not think that in terms of regional development such a change would be not in the interests of eastern Ontario, as the Premier (Mr. Davis) said to some of his friends in Cornwall on his last visit?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope I will have the chance to do the same again very shortly.

Mr. Samis: I know the minister will.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Certainly it is not in the interests of the city of Cornwall. I think I could agree completely.

LIVESTOCK PAYMENT DEFAULTS

Mr. Riddell: A question to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, Mr. Speaker: As an overseer of the program of the various ministers under his jurisdiction, and in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson), who I understand is still fighting the flu bug, could the provincial secretary tell me why the Minister of Agriculture and Food does not consider the problem of default in payment for livestock to be of sufficient importance or priority to be dealt with in this session of the Legislature, in view of the fact 11 packing plants have defaulted in payment over the last few years, five of them in 1979; and in view of the further fact that this legislation was first promised during the 1977 election, and again by the former Minister of Agriculture and Food who indicated that legislation would be undertaken in the fall session, in other words this session?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, obviously if my colleague is not back due to ill health within the next few days, I would be pleased to reply to the honourable member. [3:00] would he ask him if he is aware of the shock and the frustration this decision not to come forward with the legislation has produced in the cattle industry, which has been working with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food now for over four years in developing acceptable proposals which were to have been introduced in this session. Is this failure by the minister to proceed with the legislation an indication that this government is opposed to providing legislation for an industry-wide program of protection against default in payment for livestock purchases?

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: When the provincial secretary is talking to the minister,

NURSING HOME CHARGES

Mr. Grande: My question is to the Minister of Health regarding the scandalous ripoff of $12.15 per month of every resident in nursing homes since 1976, with the continued blessing of the Minister of Health and his ministry.

In view of the fact that in an answer to the Legislature on April 14, 1977 the minister stated that a nursing home inspector's report, "confirmed the $10 a month charge for marking, mending and ironing of resident's clothes was being applied to all residents, not just those who used the service," and that on November 8, 1977, in his answer to a question on the order paper, he stated he had no statutory jurisdiction because these services are uninsured services; could the minister inform the Legislature what are the blocks which prevent him from gazetting the regulation he proposed in November of 1977, in the recommendations from the review of nursing home legislation to prevent what he calls the excessive rates to residents? Would he also inform the House why he does not prevent nursing homes from applying the exorbitant charges to residents who do not use the services?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I had difficulty hearing the question, so I better take it as notice, get it from Hansard, and give an answer later.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: While the minister takes it as notice, would the minister realize and be concerned about the fact that the nursing home operators, since May 1976 have sponged from the residents $18 million to date, and also be aware that for every month he delays gazetting that regulation, which he's had ready since 1977, $328,000 more is being taken from residents? Further, I wonder if he would find out in the process whether the reasons—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is abusing the privilege of the question period. If he wants such detail, obviously, it should be secured by way of an inquiry of the ministry. Is the minister going to take that as notice also?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will certainly take it as notice; and I will particularly try to determine the basis on which the member makes such allegations in such outlandish numbers.

Mr. Speaker: The member for St. Catharines has about one minute.

LIBRARY GRANTS

Mr. Bradley: A question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation: Does the minister have any plans to channel funds from the regional library systems into the large urban libraries so that they can provide these services in a given area, since it has been proven in many cases, most particularly in the Niagara region, that the regional library systems have not performed the roles for which they were set up and have encountered many financial difficulties, which have been difficult to overcome to say the least?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The member wanted a short answer: the answer is yes, we are actively looking into this.

REPORT

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Renwick, on behalf of Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr30, An Act to revive South Russell Holdings Limited.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CONSUMER PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Swart moved first reading of Bill 200, An Act to amend the Consumer Protection Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Swart: The purpose of this bill is to require that every product offered for sale bearing a product code must also be marked with its purchase price. The bill prohibits increases in the purchase price of a product above the price initially marked on it by the retailer. The bill also provides that if the price marked on the product differs from the price associated with the product code, the purchase price of the product is the lower of the two prices.

MOTION TO SUSPEND NORMAL BUSINESS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise to move that the business of the House be suspended in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, of which I have given you written notice, namely the crisis in the automobile industry as reflected in the layoffs and in the very large deficit in our auto trade with the United States.

Mr. Speaker: I have received the notice of motion. The notice of motion is in order. I will listen to reasons why the honourable member thinks the ordinary business of the House should be set aside for an emergency debate. I will hear the honourable member for up to five minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: Two weeks ago I was at the General Motors plant in Oshawa. I had the experience of touring an automobile plant which normally has several thousand workers, but which on that day was completely empty of workers except for one or two people pushing brooms. That reflects the fact that in the single largest industry in the province we have 25 per cent of the workers out on indefinite or on definite layoffs.

In November, 27,000 men and women in the industry were on layoff. The most alarming fact is that this isn't just layoffs of a temporary nature which one finds in the industry from time to time. Half of those workers are on permanent layoff or on indefinite layoff, layoffs that may last for three or six months or longer, because of the crisis which is occurring within the automobile industry.

This is an urgent and pressing matter for this Legislature when one reflects on the fact that next week alone there will be 8,000 Chrysler workers in Windsor who will be put on temporary layoff by that company. Next week alone there will be 4,500 workers at the Ford plants in Windsor who will be put on layoff.

The auto parts industry tells us that they have 8,000 people or more on layoff and the unemployment rate in their industry is 15 per cent, compared to only four per cent in the industry in the United States.

The crisis is compounded by the fact that the layoffs which are now the urgent matter which we wish to have debated this afternoon are compounded by the energy crisis; by the potential bankruptcy of Chrysler Corporation, which is one of the largest industrial corporations in North America; by the huge auto trade deficit, which in 10 months has gotten to $2.5 billion, a sum which exceeds by $600 million the biggest trade deficit in automobiles and parts that this country has ever had in the past; and by the dependency of our industry on large-car production, which units are the white elephants, as I was saying in question period, because of the changes in the industry and the rapid increase in the sale of small foreign cars in the North American market.

Finally, the crisis exists because of the unwillingness of this government to fight to have Canada negotiate a fair share of automobile production in order to ensure that this major industry is no longer a drain on us here in Canada.

The minister just got up and spoke. He bathed us with his concern, but he sounded about as aggressive as a tabby cat in terms of what he was saying to the Legislature or to the companies. When we asked about what he was doing in one particular sector we learned he doesn't even have his facts straight, and that is contributing to the crisis in the industry which has one quarter of the whole work force in that industry out on layoffs.

When in Windsor alone the real unemployment rate is running at 17 per cent I believe there is a crisis. When the parts industry estimates about 8,000 people out of work I believe there is a crisis which must be debated in this House. When even General Motors is forecasting further layoffs in the new year, clearly there is a crisis.

What we would like this House to examine is not just the short-term situation, but also the inadequate response of the government to the situation and the need for Ontario to step in to see that we are producing the small cars, as well as the parts for small cars, that Ontario will need if we're going to keep in the game during the 1980s.

We had a dialogue of the deaf just two weeks ago in trying to talk to General Motors about the $2 billion investment they say they want to make in Ontario during the early 1980s. That is well under 10 per cent of their North American investment over the next few years, yet here in Canada we have 10 per cent or 11 per cent of their North American market. We're not getting a fair share in that particular area, and the government is not prepared to insist that we get that fair share.

Ford is planning to spend $20 billion in 1985 on new facilities. In this country we have promises of an engine plant worth half a billion dollars and a casting plant worth $50 million. It may sound like a lot but it's nowhere near a fair share. Because we don't get a fair share of investment the crisis we face today is going to be a continuing crisis in this particular industry, unless we get a change in policy from this government as well as from the federal government. That, too, is a reason for the emergency debate.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to say finally, Mr. Speaker, that learning, as we did last week, that this government has opted out of the negotiations with Chrysler Canada, is another reason this urgent matter should come to an emergency debate here in this Legislature today.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have the impression, since the leader of the NDP persisted in going over his time, that he feels perhaps his case in this connection is a bit weak. We agree, however, that the level of unemployment is a matter of concern, as it was yesterday and as it undoubtedly will be tomorrow.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) just completed his estimates last week. There was every opportunity for the matter to be discussed and I understand it was discussed in some detail.

Naturally question period may be used, as it was today, for the kind of specific exchange of information that is useful to all members of the House, and thereby to the public at large. The fact that concurrence in the minister's estimates will be scheduled some time later this week or early next week would provide another opportunity.

Mr. Speaker is the person who has to judge whether under our rules the matter proposed for discussion relates to a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration. If he does so rule, we do not want to stand in the way of such a debate this afternoon. We want to associate ourselves with those on all sides who want to see the level of employment increase.

The fact is that people, not only in this province but even in this House, avail themselves of the products built by the automotive manufacturing industry in this province and built by the members of the UAW. It's interesting that when I look over the parking lot of the NDP I see a Peugeot station wagon sitting there and a couple of Audis. While I understand they are very good cars, it seems to me their policy should begin even closer to home. If they would follow the good example of my esteemed colleague the leader of the Liberal Party and drive a Ford Fairmont, they would be well served by transportation and also serve well in supporting the industry.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: I'm glad to have aroused the members to my left who are expressing such concern in this matter.

[3:15]

I do recall, and perhaps the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) will recall too, that before the election of 1975 we were in a period when there was some considerable unemployment. There was more unemployment than now and the government of the day took some initiative. They withdrew the sales tax on new automobiles for a few months just before the election. They committed over $600 million to the economy at that time in an attempt to buy a majority, in which they sadly failed. It's obvious the government can take action when an emergency presents itself. It may well be there will be such action presented by the government, particularly if they sense an election in this province in the offing.

We are in your hands, Mr. Speaker. If, in your judgement, this is a matter of urgent public importance, we are quite willing, in fact anxious, to proceed with the debate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As we've discussed time and again during question period in this House, we have what is obviously a long-term problem in the automotive industry. It's one we've been aware of for some time and have done a considerable amount of work on, as has the federal government.

The point I want to make on whether we should have an emergency debate here this afternoon is that this situation is not one that is solved on the floor of this Legislature. Many other forums and levels of government must be involved, because we don't have a problem that's unique to Ontario in any way. It involves discussions in the House of Commons, in the United States Congress, in the United States Senate. It involves long-term solutions dealing with everything from the availability of gasoline and energy right through to tax situations and the auto pact, hardly matters which can be resolved here this afternoon.

In terms of the extent of the crisis, it is a difficult one. I won't apologize to the leader of the third party, who has now left the assembly, for being concerned about the situation.

Mr. S. Smith: He's out warming up his Peugeot.

Mr. Martel: Where is dirty little Bill?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He's out counting Peugeots.

The fact is the situation is not nearly as critical—I've only got three minutes guys—as it was in 1975. The layoffs to date, while they're serious, are several times smaller than in 1975.

For example, we have not received representations from the union and others, as was the case in 1975, leading to some of those very constructive measures the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has talked about that this government took at that time.

May I say there are other forums in which this matter can be discussed. We did discuss it in my estimates last week and, for the benefit of the House the third party did not take an extensive length of time on it, although we did cover the matter quite well. At that time we discussed it, as we had earlier, and yet another opportunity is coming in terms of concurrence in those estimates in this House. Treasury estimates are due to proceed this afternoon. This is another point of impact for a proper discussion on the auto situation. Labour estimates are on, I believe this evening or tomorrow evening, which is another opportunity where this might be discussed rather than taking the time of this House.

The main point is this: what has happened in the car and automotive industry is a severe market problem. Sales are off in terms of United States cars, if not Peugeots. In terms of North American vehicles they're off 20 per cent this year. That is not a problem created by either this government or in this Legislature, nor is it one that can be solved in this assembly.

The sales for the Big Three North American automobile makers are down as follows: Chrysler is off 39 per cent; General Motors is off 21 per cent; and Ford is down 20 per cent. If we are to take the time of this House to discuss that North American fall-off in market, I suggest we will have to be here day after day having emergency debates as various sectors of the economy go through cyclical changes in markets. If we have an emergency debate today on this subject, tomorrow it will be on wheat, agricultural products, electronic products, electrical products or whatever. The important thing is whether this province is holding its own during those cyclical changes.

If this debate proceeds we will have an opportunity to talk about some of the structural things we are doing to buffer our people against these situations. I would remind the House that we obviously have succeeded in some of those things, because our layoffs so far in the automotive industry in this country are 9.4 per cent, while layoffs in the United States are 14.8 per cent to date.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you quite simply, if this situation calls for an emergency debate now, basically upon the North American market for the automobiles being made, then I say to you we will be having emergency debates every time there is a change in market conditions throughout North America.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

I have listened to the debate from representatives of all three parties. I listened very carefully to the question period. While everybody is of one mind that it is of great importance to everybody in Ontario, it is a question that has been raised here on numerous occasions.

There has been ample opportunity for discussion, both in question period and in estimates. As has been mentioned, there will be a further opportunity later on this week during the concurrence motion on estimates of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism.

I find this matter does not lend itself to an emergency debate because it does not highlight one specific event. It must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration. It seems to me that is one of the issues we have been involved in on a continuing basis over the last several weeks. I find it does not meet the requirements of standing order 34.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

On vote 901, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments or questions on item 1 of vote 901? The member for London Centre.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, now that the diminutive Treasurer is back in the chamber, perhaps we can proceed. There are a number of items I would like to discuss with the Treasurer, if that is possible. I assume he is prepared for any contingency and every eventuality, because if he isn't forthcoming in all his answers and able to answer them quickly and forthrightly we may have to take more serious remedial action.

At the outset, I would like to ask the Treasurer about the whole question of oil prices, which I have not yet discussed. I am sorry if you are having trouble hearing me, but I have a grievous disease. I came out of my sick bed this morning just for and exclusively for the pleasure of spending the afternoon with you here today. I hate to say this, but I think I contracted the disease from the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson). Wherever she goes she spreads plague, disease and scurvy.

Mr. Chairman: Maybe you should ask your questions while you still are able.

Mr. Peterson: I was habitating the same chamber with her on more than one occasion—the legislative chamber, I hasten to add. I feel I may have contracted it from her. I can tell you it is probably the most important influence she has had, lately at least.

I want to talk about oil prices to the Treasurer. I don't want to thresh a bunch of old straw, but I want to point out a couple of my concerns. I want to take you back to what I consider was an excellent speech you made to the bar association in Calgary, when you were supposed to be on the same platform as the honourable Merv Leitch—or was it Merv Leitch who didn't show? No, it was Hnatyshyn, the Minister of Energy, who didn't show.

You were discussing the rewriting of the Canadian constitution by way of petro dollars, and frankly, that was the best speech I have seen you make. I am not sure you wrote it yourself. It is the only speech I have seen you make, now that I am on the subject. It was good, it took you six months' worth of effort to do it but perhaps it was worth it. One good one every six months is better than a couple of bad ones per week perhaps, if that is your point of view. I want to talk to you about that.

One of the things that concerns me about your government, and I am being very frank, is you have expended an incredible amount of energy, political energy, and credibility—and I am not talking just about you, I am talking about the first minister and I am talking about the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) as well—in taking your strong position to Ottawa and taking it across the country.

You knew from the beginning you were going to lose. I don't want to stand here and accuse you of political dishonesty, you knew you were going to lose. There were a lot of fine headlines written out of that. I am one who thinks you substantially blew your position in that energy paper of last summer when you said it should only be one dollar, but if it is more than one dollar here is how it should be distributed.

In my judgement you should have carried the full weight, force and efficacy of your position to have a far more narrow range of options, recognizing the inevitable. Everyone knows energy prices are going to go up tomorrow. I am not happy about it. I am one of those, I guess, who has taken the view that it is inevitable and we must steel ourselves against it. I don't like it, but there is a lot of prophylactic action we could take in the meantime to insulate our own economy and to help out our own economy. I am upset about the way you dissipated the efficacy and the strength of your argument.

What you have done, in my opinion, is use a disproportionate amount of your time, energy and resource beating your collective heads against a wall when you knew you were going to lose. I subscribe to the view of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) that you did not carry that argument well and you did not serve the province well, but what concerns me is there are two areas in which you do have a substantial amount of jurisdiction, as a matter of fact the only jurisdiction. I am referring to electricity prices and I am referring to natural gas prices.

I have asked and my colleagues have asked the Minister of Energy about those matters in the House and received extremely flip, superficial, and I would say juvenile, answers to our questions. You will recall last week I asked the Minister of Energy what he was going to do about the rate application from his friend Darcy McKeough of Union Gas.

Just in case you are not aware, I am going to tell you what that rate application is for. I am not talking about the automatic increases pegged to the price of oil, because we recognize the federal system for that is pegged at 85 per cent on the BTU value of the price of oil. I don't like that either; that should be unpegged, that should be unhinged. I agree with your position, you should fight it very hard; I will get into that particular aspect in a moment.

The Minister of Energy had the temerity to say to me, "If that is your view, that Union Gas shouldn't get the 42 cents per thousand cubic feet, non-stepped price increase, then you should go to the Ontario Energy Board and make a submission." He accused me of grandstanding because I disapproved of a system whereby the small residential consumer and the small commercial consumer is going to subsidize large business and the large consumer. That is virtually what Union Gas has asked for.

I am telling you that you have jurisdiction. You can't just fob it off and say that is the Ontario Energy Board. The Ontario Energy Board is a creation of your government, of this Legislature. It is not good enough to say you don't have jurisdiction. You should be there, you should have made a presentation.

What is your position on that rate application of Union Gas? Are you for it or against it? I don't know what the Minister of Energy's position is because in his charming little squirt way he weaselled out of the question and didn't deal with it.

[3:30]

What worries me about this Minister of Energy, who is a man of a capacity in my opinion, and certainly he has the greatest capacity of anybody I've seen in that ministry, is that so far he has used all of his energy to be charming and avoid the question and avoid the real issues that this province is facing in trying to keep the government out of problems, as opposed to using the creative potential in that job to do something for this province over the next 10 or 20 years.

I regard the job of the Minister of Energy to be creative as probably the most important one in the ministry today. I have said that of all the ministers to date, I have said that for four or five years. I am concerned that he is going to take the position that his job is only to survive, keep the government out of trouble and not be creative. I haven't seen any creativity out of him whatsoever.

Where it relates to the Treasurer is that everything he does bears so very directly fiscally and economically on the prospects of this province. That's why the Treasurer has to be concerned. He cannot let the Minister of Energy run on his own, he must be involved in his decisions. When the Treasurer allows the Minister of Energy the 16 per cent increase in Ontario Hydro for next year; when he allows what I consider this excessive, unfair, unrateable increase—if he does—of Union Gas, then it's going to reflect very badly on the consumers and on the economy of this province; because at the same time we are stuck with automatic increases which there isn't very much we can do about, barring some new redistributive mechanism from the federal government.

In brief those are some of my views. I am very interested in the Treasurer's opinion about what I have just said and what he is doing about it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The basic assumption of the argument the honourable member just made was that the paper, and the arguments that followed the paper, including my speech, were all made in the certain knowledge that Ontario would not win. If by that it means there would be no change past the one dollar per barrel on January 1, 1980 he is correct

I am sure. Obviously with world prices themselves escalating on an irregular and unpredictable basis, one really can't tell what the world price alone will be, let alone what something that is used internally will be.

Mr. Peterson: If in fact there is a world price, and there probably isn't.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The more we have problems, such as Iran, the more likely the, let's say monolithic world price set by OPEC is going to hold, because the spot price market appears to be taking over and panic buying then takes place.

I was told Japan, for example, paid $40 a barrel for the oil the Iranians either refused to ship to the US or the US refused to accept from Iran, whichever was the case.

Mr. Peterson: That's a big quantity.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That, of course, is the very kind of action which can add fuel to the fire; which is a poor metaphor.

I would have to say that Ontario entered that debate recognizing that a win would be hard to define, because no one wanted to see any increase at all. But Ontario argued strongly and I think, though I won't know for a while, with some measure of success, that Canadian prices should bear some difference from world prices since the whole economy is going through the kinds of strains so clearly demonstrated in the debate about the emergency debate today.

We know that any increase in the price of energy, or in fact anything that adds to the cost of living, the cost of manufacturing Canadian goods that can't be recaptured within our own economy, can only eventually weaken our economy, cause some uninflation and perhaps re-enforce a recession.

So we entered the lists knowing when we came out we may be winners but would be blamed for losing, blamed because some change took place. That makes it a difficult political decision, however we are satisfied that the changes would have been of a much greater order and would have had much less regard for the Ontario scene had Ontario not entered into the argument. This is because a number of other provinces, for very widely varying reasons, had no good governmental reason for opposing massive increases in the price of oil and they were letting the federal government know that. Obviously if you produced it you had no reason to oppose it, even though it isn't in the interest of your taxpayers to some degree.

If you lived in Quebec, or if you were a member of the Quebec government, you had two good reasons for supporting world price. First, all the oil used in Quebec comes in today at world price and it is subsidized by the federal government. This is something that that government hates to recognize. With a referendum coming along it hates to admit there's any umbilical cord of federal money flowing in one direction only to that province. One very visible example of that flow of money—I've seen the figures, they are in the hundreds of millions of dollars per year—is the federal government payment to offset the difference between world price for all the oil used in Quebec and the price the consumers pay.

The second good reason is one much more understandable, and I would think it is one much more readily accepted by all of us, and that is that obviously the government of Quebec, having made a huge investment in electric energy and having a number of reserves untapped yet, can see that it will have a pretty predictable price for its electric energy for the foreseeable future. Once committed to development the only thing one has to worry about today is the change in the costs of the capital plant between the time one decides to construct it and the time it's finally built. Once it's built one doesn't have to worry about fueling it. Labour costs are a tiny part of the cost of operating a hydroelectric system, a hydro-based, that is water-based system. However in Ontario 37 per cent of total energy is from water and 73 per cent is from some kind of fuel source, so we don't have that assurance of the cost in the future. Obviously Quebec would say, "In our industrial planning interests, anything that makes our electrical energy even more competitive relative to other kinds of fuel makes our province more attractive to potential industrial investors vis-à-vis the other parts of North America, or indeed the world."

I was always mystified by the arguments from any place but Newfoundland on the east coast—Newfoundland at least hoped to get oil—had some reason to believe it might find oil as a result of the newly awarded offshore rights. I believe every bit of electricity in Prince Edward Island is oil produced, but I am not sure how much of Nova Scotia's electrical energy is generated from oil. I know the bulk of it is—

Mr. Laughren: Do you agree with Clark's position on that by the way?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am only discussing the answer to the question on energy today. I am mystified because they say, "Yes, we are quite happy to see our people pay world price for oil for their cars, for their home heating, but when we use it to make electricity you will have to subsidize it." If they got that they would be gaining the best of both worlds. They get a federal equalization transfer because the price of oil has gone up and they get a federal government subsidy to burn the stuff. I think that can be seen through patently. I am intrigued, too, by my friends who operate the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund loaning money to those provinces at prime triple rate A rating—or whatever it is called, the triple A rate—for some of their utilities or some of their government purposes or both; in effect lending money at less than the rate that the credit would traditionally warrant. In effect, I believe, buying support for an oil pricing policy by subsidizing an interest rate for government spending. That is a very interesting set of circumstances.

Mr. Peterson: That is something the teachers have done for you over the years.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I find that hard to follow.

Mr. Peterson: The teachers superannuation fund charges you below market rates.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would challenge that currently.

As to the second part of your argument, you said we made our case weaker by broadening it to indicate how to redistribute our revenues if increases took place. In all the rhetoric on this matter, that has gone on in the last four or five months, really every bit of it that has been reported in the press dealt with absolute price. Very little of it dealt with the redistribution of income and the fundamental structure and mechanisms of the transfer of moneys within the Canadian confederation on an historic basis.

We argued that should we be wrong, should the increases exceed those we thought should be put in place because of an impending recession, because of the oil industry's inability to use more investment dollars in the short term, we must have a formula to prevent a government, a provincial government in particular, being the major beneficiary from the transfer of funds, simply because in the Canadian context that was not the historic mechanism or way of doing things.

That is all seen as sour grapes. I can understand it, but I must admit I feel, and I hope you feel, a bit sorry to find a number of Canadian provinces so pleased to see that they can turn down something Ontario needs, after for many years, in my opinion, profiting from an Ontario position under Mr. Robarts and under Mr. Frost—I am thinking of prior to my present Premier—that always emphasized the responsibility of Ontario to a relatively strong Canadian government and to its central duties to make sure that certain minimum levels of government services were available, regardless of the provinces' fiscal capacity.

I hope it is something like the freedom of some of the Third World nations when they are finally liberated from a colonial regime. I hope it is short lived. In other words, once the euphoria of suddenly saying, "We can tell you off" passes, I hope there will be some reconsideration in a sober way as to what this country is all about, the fact that we do use and need a central government to carry out duties and redistribute moneys.

Once the decisions are taken on the price of oil, I would say the second part of that paper is going to be the major part, the part we have to spend a good deal of time working on in a Canadian context. We in Ontario recognize we will have some difficulty having credibility because we have been well off in the past and because the transfer payments from this province by any route, whether it is general taxation through old age security or equalization payments, no matter what the mechanism has been, have not necessarily been recognized as being based on Ontario's wealth or appreciated if they were.

You mentioned something about the price of energy going up tomorrow. I don't know what is in the budget. I am only looking at the same kind of predictions you are, predictions that we can see anywhere from 23 to 30 cents a gallon change in the price of refined products, fuels for transportation basically, I would say, not necessarily for home heating. That is not a change in the price of crude. You know that. While it is very critical, it is not the kind of argument Ontario was advancing in the papers because at that time it was not predicted.

We were talking about the price of the raw material supplied for industry, whether for heating or for reprocessing. As I understand the advance guesses, the money the federal government is talking about levying in the budget will be on specific uses or types of a distilled product basically for transportation. Tomorrow night's budget will answer that question and only then will I know who's right.

The member said our jurisdiction applies to electricity pricing and natural gas. Of course, on the natural gas I guess we're limited to the distribution costs of natural gas not the provincial gate price.

Mr. Peterson: That's what I said.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, I think later on you did. I made a note. I don't think the member had at the point I wrote down my note.

The jurisdiction in terms of electrical pricing is again of the same nature. That is the variation in rate between types and classes of users or quantities of use, not as I read it, on the global gross selling price of Ontario Hydro as output. Because if I understand the Power Corporation Act—which I don't believe is administered by me, I believe it's administered by the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch)—ever since Sir Adam Beck, a fundamental principle has been that power from Ontario Hydro will be sold at, quote, "cost."

Cost can be arrived at by charging one consumer more and another consumer less. I think that is a kind of argument we are going to see a good deal of discussion about before too long, because we're going to go into discussions as to whether one should charge large consumers more to limit their consumption or recognize that distribution costs to large consumers are less and encourage their use so we'll have a good strong industrial base.

You're going to hear all kinds of points of view on it; I don't want to get into them today. I would just say that I don't believe you want to throw away yet the principle that the gross selling price of electricity in Ontario should match the gross cost of generating it. That's a principle that has stood well for many years. I would argue though that one of the key things is what is gross cost? How much should you lay aside in a given year to create capital, limiting borrowing? Because we guarantee a goodly part of the borrowing for Ontario Hydro, I would say we're probably more highly leveraged than privately owned utilities—80 per cent or 82 per cent or whatever it is of our total equity is in debt. I've been told that a more normal US rate would be 50-50.

Obviously, if one elects not to add to the rate today to create capital for investment for immediate increase in output and instead goes to the market to borrow that money and therefore keeps a high debt to equity ratio, then the final cost of power will go up in total. I think that is one of the areas where a government does have jurisdiction—I'm not saying government does, but traditionally Hydro and/or government has been involved in that process. I don't think Ontario has ever directly leaned on Hydro, but we've never tried to duck our final responsibility.

That is exactly the same kind of question I assume the member implied is before the Ontario Energy Board for the distribution of gas through Union Gas. I don't have an answer for it. I think one can argue with good logic both ways. One obviously wants to price energy no matter what its source or type today so that one does not encourage waste—I don't think we need to worry about that; that has become academic. The price is going up fast enough anyway.

If you're an industrial user making steel, the price of natural gas, no matter what we do with it, is such that you're going to take measures to save energy you wouldn't have taken 10 years ago. I think the member would agree. That's true of electricity. So I would say that industrial users have good immediate economic reasons for cutting back in consumption.

The real question becomes one of what costs should be apportioned to the bulk user and what to the smaller user. I am not going to prejudge that. I am going to listen with great interest because I think it is going to apply equally to electricity and to natural gas in the next while.

I think any one of you in this room could stand up and make arguments for whichever side you decided to take and sound equally impassioned in the process. There is only one political side and you know it. The question is what is best in the long-term interests of the consumers of Ontario, even if it isn't the immediately politically saleable reason.

Mr. Peterson: On the subject of price: I am not one of those people who has ever argued in this House that we should try to cheat the future and I think you know that. I'm not one of those people who has ever argued we shouldn't pay our way today so our children have to pay it for us after the fact. There are certain realities we all face as politicians. Historically, probably the greatest mistake we have made is we haven't faced up to the current realities, if we could possibly shuck them off on someone who was coming after us. To some extent, that argument enters into the whole energy pricing question.

I am also one of those who says it has reached the tolerance level. The abuse of the small customer, the distribution of rates—who is expected to carry what load—is now beyond the tolerance level. I am one who very clearly feels you should have a position on this and there is something you should be doing about it.

One of the reasons Union Gas is doing this is because of the bloody incompetence of the company. They entered into that contract for synthetic gas with Polysar and they're taking a $10 million a year loss on that. They are trying to extricate themselves from that by shipping it down to the United States and they're having some regulatory problems doing it. I hope they can get out of it.

What we have with a monopoly, unless we look at it very severely is the consumer in the province pays the price for that management incompetency, not the company. Who should pay the price? The shareholders, the management? They've rolled a couple of presidents over that particular issue and I assume the mandate of the new president is to clean that up and try to get out of it. I hope he does.

At the same time, when they come pleading for cash to increase their price by 42 cents for administrative costs and for distribution costs, one of the arguments implicit therein, although they don't use it overtly, is because of this management mistake of some three, four or five years ago, whenever it was. I can't argue and I don't think you can in conscience argue this is a burden which should be fairly carried by the consumer in a monopoly situation.

When one has a monopoly in a province like ours, one has some very grave responsibilities. Obviously, we don't trust them to exercise their responsibilities well or we wouldn't regulate them. Therefore, you have the whip hand. The energy board reports to the government and the government puts members on the energy board and makes sure they are being fair.

I am one who very much dislikes the attitude of the provincial Minister of Energy, who completely washes his hands of these things when it is convenient. One gets the impression very clearly that when there is something you can do about it, you opt out and say that's the Ontario Energy Board's responsibility. When there is something they know they can't influence, at least very much—for example, the hearings of the National Energy Board on whatever—you feel quite free to criticize, complain, carp and belly-ache, but you don't do that with something over which you do have jurisdiction. If they are concerned about what they're doing at that level, surely when they have the power, one, they should have a position and, two, make that position very strongly felt.

I can tell you very sincerely, if and when we ever have an opportunity to change government in this province—and that's not all that unlikely a prospect, don't kid yourself—the rate structures of Union Gas and of Ontario Hydro are going to be very close to the top of the agenda for legislative action. It's historically wrong and it encourages consumption. Any rate structure should not encourage consumption, but the rate structure, as it is presently administered, does encourage consumption because it diminishes with usage. There is a regressive rate. The more you use, the less you pay for both of them. That is completely 100 per cent backwards in our opinion.

I'm happy my colleague, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed), is here today because he and I have discussed this at great length. He has yapped about this until he was blue in the face. I talked about this at great length when I was energy critic in this province. We will continue to talk about it because it is unfair and wrong.

When you say, "Quite obviously the object of energy pricing is to discourage consumption," I can tell you, if you believe it, you're not following it. As Treasurer, I would like to see you use your good offices to change those kinds of things. If you look at it, I know you'll agree with it. We all recognize that over the long term energy prices are going to go up. Obviously I would like them to go up as slowly as possible. Then we can always get Claire Hoy running around saying, "I want to see world prices." I can tell you that's nonsense. I can tell you there is the inevitability that I, my colleague and my leader recognizes, and we have been pleading since 1976 to do something now.

Don't get caught in the trap the federal government got caught in when they brought in wage and price controls. Those came in with a lot of public sympathy at the time, and even had public sympathy for the couple of years they were around with the exception of my friends in the labour movement. But, generally speaking, they were well received. People didn't know what to do. There was a lot of confusion in the economy and people said, "Gee, with this runaway inflation let's buy some time." They bought time and nothing happened. They might just as well not have had it.

We told you you were slow to move on energy pricing and the whole question of how it impacts on the economy and its insulating our consumers and our industries from the effects thereof. We said that then. We're saying it now. I can tell you this, we're going to go through the same guff two years from now.

The energy debate we're having today is critical to the future of our province and our country from several points of view. The formulas hammered out now on the distribution of those revenues will probably apply in the future. And we're all looking, whether you or I like it or not, in the not-too-distant future at $40 to $60 for oil. Everyone who is looking ahead says that.

You think we've got adjustment problems at $13.75 a barrel—man, it's nothing like you will have. You can't imagine what it's going to be like. It has been your government's inability or unwillingness to recognize the inevitable; recognizing it takes tough decisions to do something about it. I can tell you you've been far too slow. If you think our industry, our transportation sector and all of the infrastructure in this province is vulnerable to energy pricing now, I can tell you, Mr. Treasurer, two years from now it's going to be far, far worse. That is why you must, in my judgement, do a couple of things.

One, you must argue until you can't talk any more; until you've got a sore throat; until you get laryngitis, which would be refreshing to us on this side of the House. I hope you don't for the sake of the argument you're taking to Ottawa. You cannot let one penny of this increase, whatever it is, go to just fuelling government revenues that go into consolidated revenues. It must be all deployed effectively back into the economy for a myriad of reasons.

It must go back into the economy to insulate the low-income people in our society from the effects of these high prices. That is very important, but it is just as important to invest now in the capital technology of renewables and conservation to more insulate us from the shocks of what is going to happen in the next five, six, seven, eight, 10 and 20 years. These are realities. It doesn't take any brains to figure out where this province is going to be at the end of the century.

You're losing time. You have been losing time. You have had a lot of goodwill from the people of this province. You've been in power a long time. Anything you did that was tough along those lines, I have no idea whether our friends in the NDP would support these areas. I can tell you without equivocation those of us in this party would. We have taken the view we are prepared to make contemporary sacrifices for something that is going to protect us in the future, no hesitation about that. We have not seen any leadership or direction in the area of renewables or conservation from this government and I am very serious about it.

What the minister is going to do is let those prices go up in the things he controls. He is going to overbuild the hydro system and I will argue very much that now is the time for a pause in hydro to get the costs in line, to get conservation under control, then he probably won't need to expand the system in the next little while. He can get a handle on this from my friend from Halton-Burlington, who can speak far more eloquently and expertly on this particular subject.

Rather than build up a system that isn't going to be necessary in this next little while, the minister is better off to insulate the consumers from some of those excessive prices in the short run. Secondly, he has to do it with hydro prices. I am appalled at the way Union Gas wants to do it and I am also appalled by the way the Treasurer and the Minister of Energy take that "hands off" approach saying, "Well, it is not my responsibility." It is their responsibility, and in the same breath, they use up all their energy complaining about something that isn't their responsibility, where they don't have power.

I am not saying the minister shouldn't take his argument to Ottawa, he should. I regret only that it was badly put and he didn't win. Surely, when he has some power he should use it and should be using it in the area of renewables and conservation.

We have been so specific in our criticism, we have been so constructive; I am tired of being constructive. We have given the minister lists of 25-point programs on conservation, on how to conserve with automobiles, in housing, in insulation, in methanol and in biomass. God knows, we have a lot of good ideas and we shouldn't lose that advantage but as I say, I don't see anything happening.

That is why I say to the minister he should insist, with all of the might he can summon up—all five feet four inches of him—that Mr. Crosbie does not steal any of that money from the windfall increase in oil prices for consolidated revenue. He should make sure it is used for the benefit of our Canadian people and our children. He should make sure also that the money, apart from protecting people on low income, is going to be invested in capital and in renewables, all those kinds of things to protect us in the future.

That is where the minister's energies have to be and I am concerned that tomorrow night Crosbie is going to steal that money, because he is obsessed with balancing the budget. I think he should be balancing the budget, but there are many other ways he can do it and there are a lot of expenditures in Ottawa that can be cut.

The minister should not let Mr. Crosbie take advantage of this windfall. There will be so much confusion when this price goes up. Nobody will know who is going to get that money. It will be reported in the press, but there will be a lot of confusion. Those who want to will blame the oil companies, some will blame Alberta, but don't let the federal government sneak up the middle and steal the money just to fuel or to cut down its deficits at the expense of Ontario.

If the minister insists on some kind of policy like that, Ontario probably will be the beneficiary of a lot of investment, technology and research and development, so we can go on and build a new capital base here and explore new kinds of industries.

There is one other thing to say. The minister talks about power at cost and the traditional mandate. Power at cost is just a buzz word. Nobody knows what power at cost means. When one looks at the books of Ontario Hydro, when one looks at their depreciation accounts—they don't account like a private company—when one looks at the surplus at the end of the year, the minister can't tell me it is power at cost because they do run up reserves. It is a judgement call.

I am not saying they should not store up some little surpluses here and there in order to keep their borrowings down, but what I would say is that the mandate of Ontario Hydro should change, not just to respond to the demand as they have done over the past 50 years. They have a major role in influencing demand and apart from running these little advertising campaigns, the most important way we could do it, in my judgement, is with pricing. That is where they have been left sadly far behind the rest of the country.

I just want to ask the minister one question before I move on to something else. Are you or are you not going to take a position on retail hydro pricing, bulk hydro pricing and gas pricing? Does the Treasurer have any information about what it will do to the economy and what is your position on it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have dealt not with specific rates as Treasurer, but upon the macro-economic effects. I have left rates to my colleague, the Minister of Energy, to deal with. I am kept informed by him and I listened to some of his discussions this week.

I suspect you will be getting a report from the Ontario Energy Board this week. I will enunciate more clearly. There is a major report I thought was due before too long, giving some advice. However, the energy critic would be able to answer better than I can.

Mr. J. Reed: It has been forthcoming for some time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I believe there is a due process for it once it comes in and instead of me prejudicing the results I would rather see the process followed.

Mr. J. Reed: I am just saying nicely that it is late.

Mr. Peterson: I am just trying to work this out in terms of time allocation. I gather Friday is our last day, is that right? And whatever time is left, we will just agree that the estimates are finished. I want to let my friend from Nickel Belt perform today so I will save some stuff for Friday.

On this whole equalization question—we dealt with it in my opening remarks and you responded briefly—I have a tough time knowing exactly where you are sitting right now. I gather your last comment is, "Well, if we can't get satisfaction any other way, we may press for our entitlement under equalization." If I am putting words in your mouth, please correct me. You feel it is a little bit immoral in the sense it is not in the spirit of the Fiscal Arrangements Act and you feel there are better ways to redistribute the windfall oil profits coming to the principal producing provinces. You feel the resource revenues should essentially be taken out of the current equalization formula. If I am not being fair, I want you to correct me on this.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Everything up to that point has been reasonable. On that last point I don't recall saying—

Mr. Peterson: I could be misinterpreting. I was under the impression you wanted resource revenues treated separately and redistributed through other mechanisms, not through equalization payments. Is that it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I thought I had offered at some length the opinion the formula of the 29 factors currently used in computing the entitlement of a province under the equalization factors was designed at a time when oil revenues were not as unbalanced as they currently are and therefore, since it increased the payment obligations of the federal government but did not increase its revenue sources, I considered it was putting an undue strain on the federal treasury until it had some source of revenue to counterbalance it.

Second, the money flows no longer necessarily reflected the needs of the receiving provinces because of the change in oil revenues out west. Therefore, at the very least, the formula should be restructured without becoming specific. I did point out there are two caps in the system, the 50 per cent of oil revenues and the one third of total payments from the resource base.

Mr. Peterson: On that subject and as you now know—you didn't know at the time—Bill

C-26 has not been passed. You have intimated it is going to be introduced and applied retroactively. Who told you that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I understood in Ottawa.

Mr. Peterson: When are you expecting it will be introduced in the federal House?

Hon. F. S. Miller: We may learn tomorrow night in the budget.

Mr. Peterson: Are you going to militate against that to protect your own options? You see, I want to know what in hell is your position? What are you going to take—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member will watch his language, please.

Mr. Peterson: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. Good Lord, I know you have never heard that before.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, I have never heard it, not in this chair.

Mr. Peterson: I would like to know, what is your position on this redistribution of the oil wealth? How would you restructure? I want to know how you relate that to equalization.

I would say to the Treasurer that in the absence of some firm agreement that I assume has to come up either at a first ministers' meeting or a meeting of the ministers of finance of this country that when he puts some new formula to those esteemed gentlemen and tries to sell it to them, he is giving away his trump card if he allows Bill C-26 or its successor to be passed.

It can be stopped by working very hard at making a terrible fuss. If the Treasurer can make a fuss about oil prices, he can sure make a fuss about this one. He gets all those 58 Tories that he and Bill Davis helped elect and he says: "We will not tolerate this. Ontario's getting it 16 ways, all the way to Sunday."

Hon. F. S. Miller: I thought you were working for them.

Mr. Peterson: Working for whom?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Those 58. In fact you were working for a couple who didn't make it.

Mr. Peterson: If the Treasurer asks me did I shed a lot of tears over it, my response in all honesty would be, no I did not. I did shed a great number of tears for some of the very esteemed Liberals who went down in the last election.

Mr. Laughren: Name one.

Mr. Peterson: I refer principally to the candidate in Willowdale, one James Peterson, who has brought a great deal of prestige and credibility to the Liberal Party ticket. However, that's another story.

This is a most serious issue we are addressing now and I gather what has happened is the Treasurer's education was so inadequate in this area that he has tried to do some catch-up in the last month or so since this issue has been brought out in public.

What is the Treasurer's position? How does he figure that money should be redistributed? How does he want the Fiscal Arrangements Act redone? How does he want those 29 categories treated? What does he want done with resource revenue? Is he in favour of Bill C-26 or its successor, or is he going to fight it? He should be very specific because I can assure him that my friend from Nickel Belt is a very erudite economist. He and I understand everything he is going to say, so he should not worry about being complex.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I thought that was unparliamentary language he was using a second ago. I thought it had something to do with the human rights bill.

Let me try to disentangle two things I thought only the honourable member's leader had tangled. I have listened to him argue that we have tried to confuse equalization payments and the redistribution of oil revenues since the day the paper came out and I keep trying to tell him they are two separate things.

There is no question that the formula as it now stands is influenced by oil pricing. No argument.

We are totally against the continuation of that formula as it is now designed, because—

Mr. Peterson: What are you suggesting in its place?

Hon. F. S. Miller: —it's not due to be changed, I think, until 1981 or 1982. We have asked for and hoped that discussions will go on towards making it fit its original purpose. That was to provide provinces who have the fiscal inability at the provincial tax level to raise the moneys they need to provide basic services. Ontario is not in that position.

Mr. Peterson: When is this going to be discussed and what is your position?

Hon. F. S. Miller: All right. I have asked that it be discussed at a ministers of finance meeting very specifically. I hope it will be. I have talked already to the federal Minister of Finance about my concern.

Mr. Laughren: It's 1982, by the way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I thought it was 1982. Yes, it's somewhere down the line before it changes. The fact remains that it may not change quickly enough. It is giving whoever is finance minister real problems in the meantime. It has nothing to do with the money Alberta is getting.
[4:15]

Let me try to see if I could somehow sketch what happens in my mind when the price of oil goes up. It goes up, say, $4 a barrel. A small part of that money, to be determined, I assume, by the Minister of Finance of Ottawa, will go to the producer. Some part of it—currently 10 per cent—goes to the federal government. To date 45 per cent on average of revenues have flowed to the producers—not of profits but of revenues.

Mr. Peterson: Are you leaking the federal budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have no idea what's in that budget. I could sit here all day and I wouldn't be able to leak something I know nothing about.

Do you agree with 45-45-10? All right. It varies from company to company and from kind of oil to kind of oil, old wells and new wells, Syncrude to non-Syncrude, and so on. But if I generalize and say 45-45-10, I am not far off. The federal government currently gets 10 cents out of every dollar increase, unless it changes the rules in the budget or some other way.

That doesn't give it much money. At the same time, when the price of oil goes up, the formula it now uses requires it to pay out more money. It has no source for that money. It pays it out to the have-not provinces. By definition, we have fallen into that category without being one, because under our entitlement, because of oil revenues, they now owe us about $18 per capita per year. On sum total for the last three years, that comes to about $470 million.

When the federal government raises the price of oil, 45 cents flow to Alberta and go into its treasury and 10 cents flow into the federal treasury. Then Ottawa is committed to a payout under the equalization program. The 10 cents flowing in doesn't help them a great deal because they already have massive deficits, in the order of 25 per cent of the total budget. Therefore, they are faced with an equalization formula that penalizes their treasury each time they raise the price of oil. Agreed?

When it comes to giving money to Ontario to provide basic government services that poor provinces can't afford, I hope you would agree the formula isn't doing what it was designed to do. Do you agree with that?

Mr. Peterson: No. I happen to be a lawyer and you are talking about all the moral implications of this act. Isn't Rendell Dick a lawyer?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I never knew you were a lawyer.

Mr. Peterson: Yes, not a very good one.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You have got a lot of company in that case.

Mr. Peterson: In fairness, I am about as good a lawyer as you are an engineer, so we are not talking with a high degree of expertise.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I won't even ask you what makes you a poor lawyer.

Mr. Peterson: I admitted that at the beginning.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Go one step further and say you are as good or bad a lawyer as he is a Treasurer.

Mr. Peterson: Let me say you are bringing this new moral judgement to this act.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is not a moral judgement.

Mr. Peterson: Sure it is because you have a legal entitlement. That's my whole point. If you didn't have a legal entitlement, Bill C-26 would not be necessary. It's to clean up the loophole, for want of a better word.

Hon. F. S. Miller: All right.

Mr. Peterson: I am saying you have a legal entitlement and I am saying there is a good chance the resource revenues you want retransferred, albeit under another mechanism, which I agree with you is more fair, will not be. Therefore, I am saying to you the only weapon you have today legally, let alone morally, is a positive entitlement under equalization. You are going to get up and say, "It is just going to make the federal deficit bigger, and 45 per cent of all that comes out of our taxes." You are still a net winner of 55 or 60 or 65 per cent.

Secondly, I say very frankly when did it ever become your responsibility to balance the federal budget? I admit they have problems. Is it because your friends were just elected you feel you have to balance their budget? I know you don't share all this doom and gloom stuff about the province of Ontario being booted into the ground, but surely there are enough indices around to say that we are, relatively speaking, in a downward slide and it needs some corrective action.

I am saying there is a million bucks—half a billion, $470 million—that could be used to our purposes. I am not saying you should use it just to get rid of our deficit. I am saying there are a lot of other constructive capital investment things that could be done. I am taking this ahead a little more than I wanted to.

You were saying: "Really, morally, we are not entitled to this because our average per capita income is above the national average. So we are really not entitled to it." That really was not the intention of the bill, according to a lot of economists I read. The intention of that bill was to equalize provincial revenues. You have taken a different attack on the bill.

I still do not understand. Is it just because you sit there in your cabinet meetings and you feel badly? You really feel, "Gee that wasn't the intention of the bill so therefore we had better not collect it"? You know that legally you are entitled to it.

You made me angry in the middle of it. You don't often do that but you made me angry because you are so wrong. Therefore, I had to stand up and correct you. You carry on.

Hon. F. S. Miller: "Wrong" is a subjective opinion. We believe that the federal government—what, a year and a half ago?—gave notice that it agreed the formula was not reflecting the intent of the legislation any more. It stated it was going to make certain changes in the bill. You can quickly point out that one day I was thinking, in error, that the bill had passed, non-lawyer that I am.

Mr. Laughren: That is the only good thing about you, Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You touched the Chairman's heart when you came up with that one.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You woke me up.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We were told the legislation on entitlement to which we legally had the right to ask would be changed retroactively. On that much I agree with you; legally we have the right to call upon it.

I say it is foolish to demand something that is going to be taken away from you in the next breath. It is something like sending an old age pension check out to somebody, letting them spend it and then coming back with—you have seen this happen in your riding—"in error sent," or "calculations based upon last year's income."

Mr. Peterson: That couldn't be a more irrelevant analogy.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, because you end up having to pay it back later at a time which may be totally—

Mr. Peterson: That's not true.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The feds make these saw-offs. A note that I was just given by staff says the federal government is already paying on the basis of Bill C-26, by the way.

Mr. Peterson: The new crown leases bill?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. The crown leases are out, Ontario is excluded and there's a three-year averaging provision for Saskatchewan.

The other half of this argument is: okay, we have agreed that equalization formula was designed for a certain purpose. You can have the minor difference in opinion that you and I had about whether it was to average provincial incomes or whether it was to help provinces with less-than-normal incomes.

Mr. Peterson: Provincial revenues.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Provincial revenues. The fact is it came to a government at the expense of the people of Ontario. I would be grateful to get that money because it would appear to come from another governmental level, without me raising it. It is like increasing municipal grants. We still take them out of the people of Ontario one way or another.

The real argument was the one you touched upon earlier: the 45 cents out of each dollar that currently go in as royalty, or whatever else it may be, to the province of Alberta. In my opinion the money should be used not just for the benefit of the people of Alberta but for the benefit of all Canadians. Either the federal government has to increase its 10 per cent share, or some recycling mechanism such as we proposed in our paper needs to be adopted. The recycling mechanisms we have proposed in our paper were, of course, to protect the consumer first and then to see money funnelled back into the reinvestment for security of supply as a capability to use it wisely was there.

So we say: "Fine, leave the equalization formula out altogether for the time being. We have to dwell upon the redistribution of that revenue for Canadians' sake." If you do that adequately, you may not have some of the problems the equalization formula is trying to address and we'd be in a better position to know what it was doing.

If the federal government says there's no way they can attach any part of the 45 cents, there's no way they're going to reduce any part of that 45 cents on the incremental prices of oil, then I think we have a problem. That problem may require us to go back to the federal government and say: "Fine, since Ontario is not going to be given"—and not loaned, by the way—"any part of the 45 cents Alberta is getting, we will now look for other mechanisms to help the Ontario treasury."

I wouldn't be at all surprised if at that point we started looking at the basic purpose and design of the present mechanism, the equalization payments, in place and start saying they have to achieve a different purpose—that is, help us get some of our oil revenue back. Surely, we should deal with one problem at a time.

Mr. Peterson: If this doesn't work out we will look at a new mechanism. We might get angry and, as the minister said, if we don't get treated fairly, we may demand our equalization.

You have to recognize what's going on in this country. I had a conversation with a very important man in your government. I'm not going to name him because this was at a cocktail party. I happen to have a great deal of respect for this particular senior person in your government, who is a civil servant. We both just chatted off the record at this cocktail party.

Mr. Laughren: He's going to put it on the record.

Mr. Peterson: No, I'm not.

He said: "What is going on right now is very difficult for the province of Ontario. When we try to make a deal with the federal government there is a very definite bias away from Ontario. We're really having a tough time getting our fair share out." He's talking about various little programs.

I don't want to be specific or even name the chap because I don't want to jeopardize these negotiations, but I thought that statement was a significant one. There used to be a lot of feeling that there was real bias in all the federal programs in favour of Quebec. A disproportionate share of the money was going there from Department of Regional Economic Expansion grants or whatever you want to talk about, or local initiative programs or federal/provincial programs of any type. I don't know if that's true or not true, but there was that feeling.

There's a feeling now—certainly, as expressed by this particular person—that Ontario is really going to have to fight for its rights. There's a new attitude that Ontario has been living too high off the hog for too long and we're going to sort of redirect some of these moneys west; that we're going to recognize some of the new realities; that it would be a very tough time.

I'm trying to impress upon the minister he was talking about a bureaucratic attitude and probably a political attitude with this change in the composition of the federal House and the people who run it. It may just be a very real stumbling block the minister is going to have to face politically, legislatively, as well as bureaucratically. If you're facing that kind of a mentality—and let's just say for the sake of argument it's a subtle thing, but it's settling in there—you may have a real difficulty trying to impress your new arguments on the government of the day. There may not be a lot of sympathy for you there.

Let's not forget, there aren't many important ministers from Ontario at this time. None of the major shooters are from here. There are a couple of cabinet ministers from here. You may not have the pipelines in. There seems to be a pretty serious disagreement between the Prime Minister and the Premier at this time. If one accepts what one reads in the press, there's pretty bad blood between Mr. Lougheed and Mr. Davis—I have no idea whether that's true or not, you have a better idea than I have. I'm just saying you may have a much tougher time getting what you feel is your fair share than you have revealed so far.

My suggestion to you is this: Don't give up your legal entitlement. It might be the only chance you have to get a fairer redistribution of some of these moneys. Obviously, I would like to see these formulae redrawn in a fairer, more just and equitable way. I'm not particularly optimistic, if you accept my former points, that it is going to be easy or that you even have that much clout.

The underlying theme of most of the commentators who were looking at the most recent first ministers' conference and during this last three or four months of discussion on the federal level was that Ontario has lost clout, that there is no longer a Darcy McKeough, who used to be the second most important financial man in this country. When he spoke, they listened.

The Premier doesn't seem to have a lot of clout with the Prime Minister at this time. It's a function of players. The Treasurer probably would have done a lot better with Trudeau because he could have fought him up front. Now he has to justify these guys. He is caught in a very difficult position. He semi-apologizes and semi-fights with them and it's made his position a most difficult one. I have some sympathy for that.

But generally speaking I am concerned about this lack of clout that appears to exist. I think if the Treasurer loses his entitlement, if he acquiesces in the face of the successor to Bill C-26, then he goes and says, "Well, boys, let's redistribute this money," why won't Mr. Loughheed and Mr. Bennett and—who's that socialist out there—Mr. Blakeney, all say, "Why should we redistribute it?" On the same arguments they have made before they may just say: "You've had it pretty good for so long, you're not entitled to equalization or any redistribution. You've got the industrial base, you're not entitled to it."

I am concerned when I see what I perceive to be this lack of influence on several levels—politically, legislatively, bureaucratically. I think the Treasurer would be sadly mistaken to give up any levers he has, albeit they aren't very substantial right now. At least he has this legal lever of equalization.

The Treasurer must not let that slip through his fingers or get out of his hands. He can fight it. He can fight it politically. He should go to the people of Ontario; we can arrange for him to have an election over the issue, if he wants to. He should go and say, "We are getting abused by the federal government." He shouldn't feel he has to apologize to them. The consumers in Ontario have a right to that money and we'd better send Joe Clark a message.

If the Treasurer won't do it, we will do it. I am concerned that the Treasurer can't fight the fair fight. He is sort of semi-apologizing for them. The Treasurer should not give up the legal right to that money until he has something to his satisfaction and the satisfaction of this province in its place. I feel very strongly about that.

I think that whole issue has been extremely poorly handled by the government. I am one who is not too proud to go and say that we're entitled to it. The world has changed and legally we're entitled to it and we should take it right now. It's that simple.

Mr. Speaker, my little friend from Nickel Belt has been doing a lot of yapping. He's sort of getting all charged up. I gather he would like some time. I will continue with the Treasurer on Friday because I have several other issues I would like to discuss.

It's been a pleasure doing business with the Treasurer. We will be back to him on Friday. If he would like to respond, I would be delighted.

Mr. Cooke: I want to ask a few questions of the Treasurer, the economic strategist for the province.

First of all, I want to say I was quite amazed by his colleague's admission this afternoon that we could have emergency debates on just about every aspect of the economy because they're all in as disastrous a condition as the auto industry. That was quite an admission this afternoon. I'll certainly want to make duplicate copies of this afternoon's Hansard.

I'm also very disappointed in the Liberal Party because they have representatives in my area, in Windsor, and they were not very supportive, to say the least, of an emergency debate this afternoon.

Mr. Peterson: If you have so much integrity, why didn't you challenge the Speaker's ruling?

Mr. Cooke: If the member was concerned, he could have supported our debate. But the members for Essex South (Mr. Mancini), Essex North (Mr. Ruston) and Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) weren't present

Mr. Peterson: Why didn't you stand up and challenge the Speaker?

Mr. Cooke: I think the member's House leader's words speak for themselves. Just reread them or have someone read them to you.

I want to ask the Treasurer what kind of economic planning or what kind of visions does he have for this province, when back in May of this year his Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) made a statement in this Legislature in answer to my questions. I'll quote the whole thing. He said: "V-8 engines are used in popular vans and trucks as well as larger passenger cars. Therefore, V-8 engines are believed to have a good future, as evidenced by Chrysler's large investment in Windsor's plant in 1978."

That statement was made by the Minister of Industry and Tourism in May 1979. Now we know that kind of planning was all screwy and V-8 engines are not in demand. As a result, we have extremely high unemployment in the Windsor area. What kind of planning do you have? Do you just simply take the opinions of the leaders of the corporations in this province? Do you do any kind of economic planning of your own? What I'd like to know from the Treasurer is what steps he is taking, along with the Minister of Industry and Tourism, to make sure we do get our fair share of small car production in this province.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism made a statement this afternoon. He continues to talk about the investments that Ford and GM are making in this province. The fact is GM plans to spend $38 million by 1985. To date, they have indicated they're spending something in the neighbourhood of $2 billion in Ontario, but a lot of that $2 billion was announced back in 1977. If we're to get our fair share, we should be getting over $3 billion worth of investment from General Motors. The same goes with Ford. We're not getting our fair share of investment from the Ford Motor Company. I'd like to know what the Treasurer is doing, in conjunction with the Minister of Industry and Tourism, to make sure we get our fair share of small-car production.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member took the words of the Minister of Industry and Tourism to mean there were a lot of disasters on the horizon. That's understandable because his party has made a habit of seeing disaster in every statement issued by everybody since time began.

The hypocrisy of demanding a debate on the automotive industry and demanding government intervention, having been one of those to stand up and say we should not help Ford locate in Windsor, really astounds me. Your party was absolutely and totally opposed to the government of Ontario assisting Ford to locate in Windsor.

Mr. Warner: You're on thin ice. You're better in Disney World.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Go back to your seat. Mr. Chairman, he is out of his place. The one place he's confident is in the classroom.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You're right. If the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere wishes to make remarks, he should make them from his own seat.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Do we do economic planning and are things as bad as you sometimes say? Of course we do economic planning. Economic planning involves the best appraisal of the facts before you and their extrapolation into the future. You do economic hindsight and that's not to be one of the safest things in the world to do. Many a good economist looks pretty poor in hindsight. Let's look at the record.

The third quarter national accounts information just came out. Canada had a 5.1 per cent annual rate of growth on real terms in that third quarter. That's a heck of a high rate. That's following the quarter before it, which saw a 2.9 per cent decline. This is the quarter ending September 30. Inflation moderated during that quarter. We saw investment—and to me that, is the measure of what's going to happen to future jobs—at a robust 25.4 per cent seasonally adjusted annual rate, 18 per cent higher than it was about 18 months ago.

When we started the year we said there would be about $10 billion invested in plant and machinery and in capital investment in 1979. I understand it is up to around $14 to $15 billion at present. Profits of companies increased, meaning my revenues will increase. For a change, housing did a little better.

Both exports and imports improved in terms of volumes, if improved means higher imports. I don't know that I would read that. Our current account deficit in that third quarter, on an annual rate, dropped to $4.6 billion from $5.9 billion in the previous quarter.

Mr. Laughren: That will be the yearly figure.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I quite agree. I am just talking about the rate of that quarter. Take-home incomes, in spite of a lot of comments that they were dropping dramatically, stayed level during that quarter. That is not good, but it is not as dramatic as we have been led to believe.

The third quarter was a surprisingly strong one. I don't mean the fourth quarter is going to look good by comparison, but when I started this year off I stood up and I predicted somewhere around 130,000 to 133,000 jobs would be created in Ontario in my budget and I heard then how wrong I was, how the world was going to fall apart. I was wrong; it was 170,000 at last count. Better than I would have ever dreamed.

Mr. Laughren: You were wrong. What is your prediction about 1980? Will you tell us about that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't know yet. I want to see the federal budget before I come in on that one. The honourable member knows as well as I do after the budget I will have to make my predictions and he knows as well as I do that until I get that information I would be foolish to make those predictions because what happens in 1980 surely will be affected by Mr. Crosbie's budget. I have given Mr. Crosbie a few pieces of advice.

Mr. Chairman, through the Employment Development Fund and through other measures in the province I would say we have taken steps to increase investment in so far as we can in this province, as opposed to foreign destinations. A great deal of that is going into the Windsor area and will continue to go into the Windsor area, all being well. That depends to some degree upon the survival of Chrysler, because Chrysler is vital to your area.

I have great confidence that while you're going through a cyclical downturn in the auto industry as you went through a cyclical downturn in the metals industry when I was minister, you will shortly see an improvement.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Chairman, it should be pointed out to the provincial Treasurer that when we debated the bill to give the $28 million to Ford we indicated quite clearly that yes, we were in favour of the jobs, but the ends do not justify the means. Those jobs were deserved in Windsor through the auto pact. We shouldn't have to bribe a company to live up to the auto pact. If you advocate that is how you are going to enforce the auto pact then I think this situation is in an even sadder state of affairs than what I had imagined.

We know what kind of investment these corporations are willing to give under the auto pact. As late as April 1979 I had given to me documents from Chrysler management that indicated this company that you and your colleagues have said all along was interested in investing in Canada and Ontario for small car production, as late as April 1979 was planning to continue production of the 360 V-8 engine until 1985. The only thing that has changed that plan for Chrysler is not any great concern for the community in Windsor, or for the auto workers in Local 444. The only thing that has changed Chrysler's mind now is because they are in such a desperate situation and need government handouts and the only way they can get that money is to live to certain conditions.

One of the things that disappoints me about you and your colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism, is that you people have been absolutely quiet on the problem at Chrysler. I would like to know what you, as the minister of finance for this province, are saying to the federal government about Chrysler and why you are not putting public pressure on them to say right now, "We accept in principle the idea of assisting Chrysler in maintaining those 13,000 jobs in Windsor." But we haven't heard that. What has your government been saying about TAB benefits for unemployed auto workers?

The Minister of Industry and Tourism wrote me a letter saying he favoured it and then when I asked him a question in the Legislature he didn't have the guts to say it publicly. He doesn't have the guts to put the pressure on the federal government and to say that in a very open and vocal way. It is that kind of non-leadership that makes the people in my party and myself and the people in Windsor frustrated and angry at this government.

I would like to ask a specific question. An article in the Financial Post indicated part of the Chrysler proposal was that there will be an expansion of jobs, but the expansion of jobs and the expansion of production is being encouraged to take place in Quebec. I would like to know if the minister knows anything about that and if he favours it. I don't want to get into a debate on where the jobs should go, but you know as well as I do that right now in Windsor there is 17 per cent unemployment when you consider the temporary layoffs.

Chrysler has existed in Windsor for many, many years but I have the feeling that those 6,000 jobs that were mentioned were replacement jobs—as were so many of those other new jobs you have talked about in the past. A good example of that is the jobs at the Ford V-6 engine plant you people contributed to. I think you will find the $28 million will not have created new jobs; they will simply have sustained the present work force.

I would like to know if you are aware of anything of this proposal to create jobs in Quebec, what your position is on it and whether you will say very strongly that the first and foremost aspect of any assistance to Chrysler should be the preservation in Windsor of each and every job that now exists in Windsor. Then we can talk about new jobs.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have heard no more than the rumours you have. I am totally opposed to any federal government assistance to redirect Chrysler out of Windsor and into Quebec. It is as simple as that.

I think the law of the marketplace which says southwestern Ontario is the logical location for the great bulk of the automotive parts and assembly industry in Canada pertains and we should see that happen.

I want to point out one thing. It's great again, to say you have your hands on a company document that says the 360 V-8 will be needed until such and such a time. I don't know whether it will be or won't. I just know that in a world where gasoline shortages can so radically alter the demands of car buyers, as they did this year in the States, it is extremely difficult for any orderly planning to take place.

Let's go back a few years. General Motors has an assembly plant at Ste. Therese, Quebec. I don't know how long it has been there. I would say it was built somewhere in the 1960s. As I recall, that plant started out assembling full-size Pontiacs. Maybe you are aware of that. Then somewhere around the time the fuel crisis hit in 1974 and the world price started to skyrocket, there was a sudden US gasoline shortage, as I recall, and a sudden switch away from the big car. Do you remember that, around 1974?

I believe it was around then that General Motors brought out the Chevette. I can't recall which year it was—1975-76? I was in the business and I would not have lost that kind of date. They very quickly turned that plant over from making Pontiacs and Chevs to Chevettes. For a short time the Chevette and Acadian were sales sensations.

Mr. Nixon: You never had any of them on your lot.

Hon. F. S. Miller: When they started selling Chevettes I ordered Cadillacs. That is one of the reasons why I always succeeded.

In any case, I recall the General Motors Chevrolet division manager in the United States getting great marks in one of the automotive magazines for having this tremendous foresight to know just when to bring the little car into the marketplace.

It was the fastest-selling new car ever brought in. The production lines couldn't keep up. They were going to have to add new plants. They converted the whole plant at Ste. Therese to meet the Canadian and the northeastern American demand. Then wham, the shortages of oil in the States ended; they started having normal supplies. All of a sudden the buying habits of the Americans went back to the mid-size and full-size car. All of a sudden GM dealers had Chevettes and Acadians coming out of their ears; they couldn't give them away. They put packages out to sell them. They had special sales. They converted the Ste. Therese plant back to full-size cars because that's what was selling. Does the honourable member remember that sequence?

We now see the same kind of sequence going on and the companies have, I am thankful to say, in most cases very real ability to adapt their plants. We have seen Ford switch the Talbotville plant from Zephyr to Zephyr plus Pinto this year. Surely, no matter what is said, Pinto is a small car. I would put it in the subcompact range, would the member not? It's being added to Canadian production.

I have seen Chrysler drop the Newport series in Windsor; I guess they put them back in the States. That was the only model in which they showed an increase in sales in last year. They have brought in a much lighter-weight product this year in the Cordoba/Mirada line and put those cars into Windsor. I think the member will agree, did they not? Did they not? Those cars have not been too well received yet; I have a son selling Chrysler—that is my contribution to Windsor.

Does the member know why those cars are not selling? Because of the psychology abroad that the company won't survive. One of the worst things we as politicians do is create that psychology by talking it up so the papers write it, so we are seeing the slump from 18 to 11 to whatever it's going down to for Chrysler. I feel a bit badly about that because the member talks about our responsibility. Our responsibility is to help but not create in the public's mind the panic that aggravates a problem already existing for a corporation.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could get around that psychology if the Treasurer of this province and the Minister of Industry and Tourism could convince their Conservative friends in Ottawa to have enough guts to make their proposals and to support the Chrysler proposals and put pressure on Congress—

Hon. F. S. Miller: At any cost? At any cost?

Mr. Cooke: —and put pressure on Congress to accept it in principle, obviously the basic principle being that the American government also has to provide some kind of support.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me just point out one thing. Chrysler Canada I am told made a profit last year, except for the variation in foreign exchange. Correct? The fact remains it has had a very loyal dealer network compared to Chrysler US. I think that is correct. It has had a relatively good and stable market. I checked; 66.5 per cent of all the cars purchased by the province of Ontario last year were Chrysler products, did the member know that?

Mr. Breaugh: No wonder you are never going to win Oshawa again.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Those were from tenders my friend, tenders, and the member wouldn't have us take the high tender.

It's just an interesting statistic. Chrysler was going after fleet business, the member knows that. It was taking the taxi fleets, it was taking the government fleets, it was taking the Bell Canada fleets, it was taking Hydro's fleets. I don't blame them. I am just pointing out that those are some interesting statistics. But the member does know, I am sure, that anything Canada does to save Chrysler Canada would be blowing in the wind if the American government doesn't take some action and the American government I understand has turned a $1.5 billion guarantee down to $1.25 billion, put in a series of conditions such as a three-year wage freeze and a demand that the States become involved in active support of such things as purchase of product so the company would have some support other than from the federal agency.

I tell you those are going to be very difficult measures, but there is absolutely no use saving Chrysler Canada if the parent Chrysler US goes under. Obviously then, Mr. de Cotret, or whoever is charged with the decision in Ottawa will have to await a decision of the US government. Pray to God it's not too late because I want to see that company saved.

Mr. Cooke: The minister didn't hear what I said. What I said was that Mr. de Cotret could accept in principle the idea of aid to Chrysler. One of the conditions obviously would be that the American government also would have to come through. Mr. de Cotret could do that and it would add pressure on Congress in order to pass a reasonable bill. At this point it's only the Senate bill that's unacceptable. The bill from the House of Representatives, I understand, is a reasonably acceptable one.

I want to raise three other quick items. First of all, the minister didn't respond to the question of TAP for displaced auto workers. I think the minister must recognize how very important that is because even if Chrysler does get assistance, it's going to be to 1983 to 1985 before the retooling takes place and—maybe I could wait until the minister—

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am listening.

Mr. Cooke: This is very important so I hope the minister is listening. I haven't had a straight answer from anyone else in his government. We are talking about 17 per cent unemployment in Windsor. We are talking about thousands of people. I want to know what is his government's position on TAP and whether he is willing to go to the federal government and speak out publicly to put pressure on it on behalf of automobile workers, not just in Windsor, but automobile workers in this province?

Second, I would like to know what his position is on a job-creation program for Windsor which is now the city with the highest unemployment in the entire country. I think it's essential that the government get in there and speak with local officials and design a program to meet the needs of that community before the problems of unemployment filter right down through to the retail and other businesses as they are beginning to now.

Finally, I would like to know what is the minister's assessment of the result if the government tomorrow imposes the 25 cent tax on gasoline. What effect is that going to have on the automobile industry? Has he done any studies of that? How much more unemployment is going to be created this time by the federal Conservative government?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The question of the excise tax on fuel; can one hypothesize it is going to take place? Right now that's all we are doing, hypothesizing, because we don't know if it will take place. A good deal of the argument or the rhetoric that flew around the question of the oil-pricing issue, the quick move to world price, particularly through provinces like Quebec and for many of the theorists who are advising ministers—not in my ministry I want to add very quickly—was that a rapid increase in oil price would cut consumption. I attended a seminar at—now you are not listening to me, by the way. If you were a student in my class, you would be staying after school with Mr. Samis and you would both have a few lines to write, like "I will listen to teacher."

Mr. Samis: We both buy used cars.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In any event, at the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute I was listening to an interesting economist deliver a very good lecture on the question of oil pricing. He said it was his opinion that the consumption rate in fuels had an elasticity of about minus 0.1. In other words, for every 10 per cent you increase the price, you had a one per cent drop in consumption.

[5:00]

I have no idea how accurate he is, but if he is accurate, and I sense he is within normal probability or of normal error, I would suggest to you that 23 cents is an awful price to pay for a tiny reduction in consumption. It has to be justified by some other means. It is hitting a consumer today who is pretty well dependent upon the automobile. That is why the reduction is so small. It is hitting him at a time when he can ill afford it because of the number of other measures like high interest rates and at a time when unemployment is higher than we would like to see it. So we would have to argue it is not going to be productive in the economic or conservation sense.

There are many buzz words used. One of the things I have learned always to say is if I don't know something, admit it. What is TAB?

Mr. Cooke: Transitional assistance benefits, which basically was put in place back when the auto pact came in. We have suggested it, city council suggested it and your Minister of Industry and Tourism has supported it in a letter. It is one of the few positive letters I have ever had from him, so

I make sure I don't lose it. In any case, in a letter he wrote to me very recently he indicated he supported the position of the city council and the UAW that TAB should be reinstated in order to cover auto workers who have lost their UIC and their supplementary unemployment benefits. As you probably know, Chrysler with its massive unemployment has run out of its SUB fund and the TAB program would bring them up to a reasonable level.

I might point out, in the States the auto workers qualify for TRA which is Trade Readjustment Allowance. That qualifies their unemployed workers and I believe it covers about 66 per cent of the laid-off auto workers in the States. They are getting $240 a week which is much better than our workers get. It is to keep them off welfare.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, since I am not familiar with the details of the program, I would be very unwise to comment on that, so therefore I would reserve any comment until I check.

Mr. Cooke: Your Minister of Industry and Tourism has supported it and communicated that to city council and to me. He is so bloody serious about it he hasn't even raised it with the Treasurer of the province.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Chairman, I am somehow puzzled by the answer given by the Treasurer. I think there is total confusion on the side of the government as to how to handle the automobile crisis. It is really regrettable for him to state that if there is a crisis it is mostly because politicians are spreading statements that create uncertainty in the automobile industry.

On the other hand, today during question period, the Minister of Industry and Tourism said the auto pact is performing well for Canada. I think he should try to clarify his ideas before giving answers to us and before accusation members of creating an atmosphere of uncertainty. Certainly it isn't our fault if Chrysler is falling apart. It isn't our fault if there is a very serious crisis in this sector. When the Treasurer comes to us and tells us Chrysler has good dealerships in Canada and that is the reason for its success on this market, I think he handles the issue from a very narrow point of view that doesn't reflect the complexity of this industry.

It isn't good enough for the government of Ontario to say, as the minister said before, "At this point we don't have any definite answer and we don't know what Congress will do and we don't know what Mr. de Cotret will do."

From last week's report in the Financial Post comes something very dramatic and most serious. We have a company which wasn't even able to give acceptable figures to the government. I think the minister read the statements Mr. Craig made that in Canada Chrysler has only 10 people in the accounting department and they were not even able to produce credible figures. They had to ask the people in Detroit to do the work for them. What's more serious is the fact that Ontario has been completely cut off from negotiations.

I'd like to ask the minister if he doesn't think it's the responsibility of this government to make our position clear, because most of Chrysler's production is located in Ontario. We cannot just wait until Mr. de Cotret decides, or for the decision of the American Congress.

Our question is does the minister have a position, and what is he doing in order to avoid a collapse in the Chrysler situation in Canada and in Ontario? The minister hasn't been able to answer this question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, it's fair to ask me any of the questions about any part of the economy, I quite agree. But the honourable member has to understand that the Treasurer doesn't personally negotiate with every single sector or industry. The Minister of Industry and Tourism has been the minister who has carried out the person-to-person or ministry-to-company discussions, therefore I am not always current as to what has gone on in a particular discussion. I am certainly aware, in general, of the trend we're following.

The trend we've been following is to await an understanding of what the US government is doing, which in turn will influence what the Canadian government is doing and which in turn will influence what will be necessary for Ontario to do.

There's a lot of argument in the States whether anything should be done at all, because a lot of people from the States feel that the 400,000-odd people working for that company in the States would not be out of work but would end up, in the main, working for the remaining two major automobile manufacturers. I don't subscribe to that, I'm simply saying that's the kind of argument that is being put forward by a number of critics of the American plan.

Anything we do with the workers of Ontario, through either level of government, has to be done with the assurance that the parent company is going to survive. To do it any other way is absolutely ridiculous. You can't deal with hypotheticals until you see the facts.

Mr. Di Santo: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it's fair for the Treasurer to say that he's not involved in specific aspects of the industry; I agree with that. But when we are faced with a major crisis—and I think the Chrysler crisis is the single most serious problem we have in the Ontario manufacturing sector—we expect the Treasurer to take leadership. As the person responsible for the economy of the province surely he is required to give us answers.

I think there should be some conversations at cabinet meetings. When we see that the Minister of Industry and Tourism not only doesn't understand the problem, but as late as November 17 comes up with the idea of another study on the automobile industry, surely the Treasurer should remind him that in 1978 his ministry did an exhaustive study on the auto pact and came out with the idea we have been propounding for years: that we are not getting a fair share from the auto pact. I think it's the Treasurer's responsibility to come in front of us and justify the inability of the government to deal with these important issues.

When we see General Motors is announcing they will spend $2 billion in Canada in retooling, out of $38 billion in the North American market, surely it is the responsibility of the Treasurer to say that is not good enough. If we have one tenth of the North American market, surely we are entitled to have one tenth of the manufacturing in Canada.

The Treasurer should answer us now, when we are talking about the lack of research and development and the lack of skilled jobs developed in Canada. The Treasurer should be able to tell us if we are content with having only jobs and some manufacturing, and therefore to perform a service function or if we want to be able to develop a manufacturing sector which is self-sustaining and is comparable to other countries that produce and buy fewer cars than Canada, but which have flourishing automobile industries.

I want to remind the Treasurer about other companies—I want to mention some of them: In 1978 BMW, in Germany, produced 311,793 cars and employed 37,581 workers; Peugeot/Citroen produced 1,596,000 cars and employed 190,000 workers; in Canada, in 1978, we bought 1,366,000 cars and we employed only 63,000 workers.

Has the Treasurer asked himself why it is we have this situation in Canada and why we have this situation in the auto pact? If we have in the auto parts industry during the first 10 months of this year, a deficit of $3,287 million; surely that has a serious impact on the economic performance of Ontario and results in a lot of lost jobs in Ontario. Has the Treasurer ever calculated how many jobs we lose because of the huge deficit in the auto pact? Has the Treasurer ever examined the performance of the auto pact where we went from a deficit of $90 million in 1969 to a deficit of $2,512 million in the first 10 months of 1979?

Surely this is not a brilliant performance. We are entitled to ask the Treasurer to give us answers because these are serious questions.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member hasn't been here all through the debate and at times his critic has touched upon some of the issues he has mentioned.

I would point out, if the number of people employed per car produced by Peugeot and BMW that you mentioned is correct, it may explain why those cars cost quite a bit more than North American cars. I suspect we have fairly efficient manufacturing plants here and runs that permit economies of scale. Dollar for dollar, I still think North American cars are the best buy on earth, even if some of the members over there happen to be driving imports.

By the way, I'm having a little survey done on the cars driven by each member of the Legislature and we'll be giving members a rundown on who's driving what one of these days, very shortly—by licence number. I'm going to do it my own open way—just go out and count the slots, take the MPP licence numbers and see who's driving Volkswagen Rabbits—MPP 046 is a Volkswagen Rabbit, I know that.

There's a Mercedes Benz in the NDP caucus. I spotted one the other day; white, 1975. I think the owner sits in the front row. A few other things like that.

Mr. Peterson: The big question is, what's Bill Hodgson driving?
[5:15]

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is one of those campaign changes that didn't quite catch up with the car. A campaign change, for the edification of the member for London Centre, is one of those notices you get by mail telling you to please bring your vehicle in because a part is to be changed. That is called a campaign change. It's not a political statement, if that's what he means.

Mr. Peterson: What's that got to do with changing the shrubbery in front of the building?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I drive a Chrysler product. I got a letter from the company. I, at least, am doing something to support Windsor. In any event, I got a little letter on Saturday morning that said, "Please come in because your car may have an accelerator that sticks."

One of the basic principles one has to resolve in a capitalistic society is when should the state intervene in the saving of a company? That, I think, is being argued in the United States more than any other issue in terms of the Chrysler matter.

The second thing is if you accept the fact that the state will intervene—and we in Ontario have accepted that principle; witness the aid to the pulp and paper industry—one must then determine that the aid will not go down the drain; that in other words, it will not simply support a company that is past the point where it can be resurrected.

In our case, we took the time to carefully study the industry before the plan was tailored. In the case of Chrysler I suspect no such opportunity had been given to the government because the information wasn't readily available. I suspect one of the major factors, apart from whether the government of the United States should become involved at all, is whether the company is at the point in its economic state that the money will turn it around.

Once that's decided I hope we'll have an answer.

Mr. Ruston: It was interesting to hear the last speaker and the Treasurer replying with regard to the automobile industry as it is now and as it pertains to Windsor. Some people living in Windsor would like to see more diversity in industry other than just automotive. Mind you, there are a number of smaller plants in the city now and many are in research and development.

I was talking to some neighbours of ours last evening about one small industry which now employs 300 people; that increased from 30 over the last six years. It is one of the very highly rated research and development companies in Ontario which goes to show you what can be done in that area because we do have the manpower and the expertise.

The Treasurer's comments about Chrysler and the United States, of course, are true. I understand there is supposed to be a vote in the Senate this week on whether they're going to give aid to Chrysler and whether they're going to give a $1.5 billion loan guarantee. I think we have to hope that the government of the United States will come to the company's aid at this time. Of course, many people in the States are fighting that very strongly.

It's interesting that one of the senators from Indiana who was defeated in the last election was a great defender of the United States on the auto pact; he always said they were getting the short end of the stick. Probably some people would remember his name, Vance Hartke. However, he was defeated in that election even if he did get $310,000 from the United Auto Workers and the AFL-CIO to help him get elected.

Another senator—or congressman—from that state was one of those who seconded the motion to put the freeze for the workers in that loan agreement which is going through the Senate.

Doug Fraser, president of the UAW in the United States, has said they really can't negotiate with prices any more. However, I noticed that in an article in the paper on the weekend, he said, "I learned long ago never to say never." He said, "I suppose in a way there might be some minor negotiations, or they may furnish some money if it is guaranteed by the government." I think the UAW have already agreed to give a sizeable amount to Chrysler, providing it is guaranteed by the United States government.

Interestingly, Mr. Chairman, the Treasurer was talking about the imported cars around. I read an article in the newspaper the other day with regard to the number of countries from which we import cars; we do not export to one of them. I believe in being a trading country, but it is not really a two-way street when we import so many cars from Italy, Japan and Russia and do not sell a car to one of those countries. If that is the case, we shouldn't really be buying their cars. I believe almost 50 per cent of the cars sold in Los Angeles and San Francisco are imported cars from offshore.

As far as auto pact cars are concerned. I classify any car you buy in Canada or made in Canada or the United States as an auto pact car.

The Treasurer mentioned receiving a notice about having his car called in. It must be the same as we have, an Omni. A beautiful car and about 32 miles to the gallon—up to 40, depending how you drive and what you have. If you want to save fuel, Mr. Chairman you can cut your fuel consumption in half by going from a large V-8 to one of them. In our family this year we are going to cut our fuel usage down from 2,100 gallons to 1,400 gallons. It can be done, providing the companies have the money for research and the facilities to build these cars.

This is the problem, Mr. Chairman. Regulations the government put in over the past 10 years with regard to environment, air pollution and gas consumption are costing billions of dollars. In General Motors they figure it costs about $300 to increase the gas mileage in each car, whereas in a smaller company like Chrysler it will probably cost about $500. That's one of their problems.

I suppose another of their problems over the years has been poor management. If a company gets into financial trouble, one says that in some way it was mismanagement. Part of the mismanagement would be the number of cars they built last winter without a market for them. They would have to store them and then sell them the cheapest way they could, with the refund of $400 which I got on the one I bought a few months ago. That was a Chrysler Cordoba.

CBC in Windsor is the only TV station we have in Windsor. Thank goodness we have them in Detroit. The only Canadian station we can get very well in is Windsor, unless we pay a lot of money for a beautiful aerial, then maybe we can haul in CTV or Global from some far-away transmitter.

When Chrysler was having all its problems there was that beautiful young lady who gives out the news every night and she was saying, "Chrysler's gas guzzlers are piling up in the fields out there; they can't sell them." Two or three nights a week she would be talking about Chrysler and their gas guzzlers. I got rid of my other car and got what she called a gas guzzler and I am getting five miles more to the gallon than I was getting on my other one. I have cut down my consumption 20 per cent or 25 per cent right there.

Mr. Nixon: Send that to the president of Chrysler and he will send you a new car.

Mr. Ruston: They already sent me $400; that's plenty.

Mr. Treasurer, what they are looking for, of course, is what we have to consider. An interesting concept of all that is the government, with its 21 cents a gallon tax on gasoline, will receive about $140 a year less from our family because of our reduction in gasoline consumption. But we are afraid the new Prime Minister, Mr. Lougheed and his energy minister, Mr. Clark, and his waterboy, Mr. Davis, are going to Godzilla us tomorrow night—whatever that word is. Anyway, in our area we understand Mr. Lougheed is the new Prime Minister of Canada and the new Minister of Energy is Mr. Clark. They had to have a waterboy so they named him the Premier of Ontario. I am afraid that is what is going to happen tomorrow night.

With the conversion of the automobile industry to smaller cars and smaller engines, there is no doubt we can compete. As you said, cars made in Canada and the United States are of even better quality, or just as good a quality, and as economical to run as the imported ones. Of course, the imported cars have gone up in price because of the devalued dollar, but it hasn't slowed down sales very much. That is the thing that worries many people in the automobile industry.

Mr. Chairman, all I want to put across to the Treasurer is that with the way industry has had to make changes over the years under a lot of pressure from government, environmentalists and so forth, we have put our automobile industry in a pretty bad way. Of course the biggest company, General Motors, has been able to handle that because of its diversification and the number of models they have. If the sales of one slow down, they sell a great many of another kind and away they go.

If you drive around the General Motors transmission plant in Windsor today, it is unbelievable to see the construction going on all around that two- or three-block area. By the end of 1981 they will probably have more employees in Windsor than the Ford Motor Company because of their extension of the transmission plant. The problem is that doesn't help us out at the present time. It helps the construction industry a great deal.

The concern we have is whether the industry can afford to put in the necessary machinery and so forth to convert to more economical engines and smaller cars. That is the thing we have a great concern for. We feel all levels of government are going to have to probably help in some way to see they carry out these goals.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think the honourable member may be wrong in a comment he made. We can let the record be checked, but he said we don't export to any of the countries that ship vehicles to us. I am told Ford's Libertyville plant does nothing else but export business and GM is exporting. We can check individual countries.

Mr. Ruston: The countries are named, Mr. Chairman. I am sorry, I don't have them with me.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There is one thing I should point out. The honourable gentleman ended up saying GM is building a large plant in Windsor right now but it isn't going to help immediately on the automobile workers side. I accept that. The only optimistic point I make is that a good many people are predicting a sales rebound shortly in the automotive sector.

Mr. Laughren: Big cars or little cars?

Hon. F. S. Miller: A lot of people have tried to tie the sales slump to the interest rates. Having been a dealer back in the 1960s I made the observation the other day that interest rates today for the average purchase of a new or used car are lower than they were in the 1960s when the bank rate was six per cent.

Mr. Worton: Taking into consideration inflation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I'm just taking the nominal rates. If we go back to those days, we recall that the bulk of the cars were financed by the retail credit companies. The rates varied from a low of 14 per cent to a high of about 28 or 30 per cent. There was seldom any car sold in the used car field at less than 18 per cent and most were sold at 24 per cent.

The reason I say that is that when the Bank Act was changed, I think in 1966, the banks were allowed into the field. If one traces the switch to see where the retail credit has gone, you find the banks moved aggressively into that field and brought down the cost of financing. Every car salesman in the world in the old days knew that no one shopped credit, they shopped price of car. Today, thank goodness, through the competition in the finance business, people shop both. I will tell you the cost of credit is more important in your shopping than the price of the car.

It is interesting that even at today's relatively high bank rates of interest, nominal rates, the retail credit purchaser often is getting a better deal than he got in those days, unless he had a secured loan. Just a little matter of interest because so many people today say, "That's one of the reasons I can't afford to buy a car."

The second thing: When they predict these sales rebound they are almost always right. If they are right, one of the big issues then is what size of car is going to rebound? We talked about that earlier. There is a big disagreement in the automotive industry right now as to whether there is going to be a return to the "normal," the Malibu or Zephyr size or the intermediate compact, whatever you want to call it; the full-sized Chevy, which is now down to the size of a 1978 Chevelle; whether we are going to see a tremendous subcompact surge.

I suspect that the price of oil and the federal tax on fuel, in Canada at least, may have an influence on the kind of car purchased, I am not so convinced it will have any influence on the numbers of cars purchased because I am satisfied that the ratio of 1.8 people per car in Canada right now—is that right?—will be reduced. We are pointing to a shorter and shorter life cycle and we are having more and more cars per capita. I sense that the downturn we are in now is cyclical, but as always in the past we will see an upturn before too long. I am not trying to be a pie-in-the-sky optimist, but I believe that is generally the case.

Mr. Laughren: Do you think the deficit is cyclical too?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well sure. They are very painful things.

Mr. Laughren: Even though we are not building small cars?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member was talking about imports and, heavens, I suppose all of us have driven one or more in our lives. But what I worry about with some of the imports is the pricing of them. I think we as parties have some right to ask those who watch the price of imported products to make sure they are being sold at a fair price relative to the home market.

Mr. Laughren: I know what's coming now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'd hate to say that the Lada was selling at a fair price relative to the home market, because the communist countries for a long time have made a point of selling their products to get foreign currency, not to make a profit.

Mr. Laughren: Does the minister know that for a fact?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, I do know it for a fact. I think it was $30,000 versus $4,000, if the member wants the exact figures.

I'd even go and say I think a case might be made—and I will qualify it by "might"—on the Volkswagen Rabbit in North America even.

Are you 046? Is that your licence number?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is the minister addressing the Chairman?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No. No.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The Clerk generally doesn't take part in the debates of the House.

Mr. Nixon: The Chairman, does he drive a Mercedes?

Mr. Ruston: He is laughing, though. He is right.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's you is it?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If it will save the Clerk any embarrassment, I'll accept the responsibility.

Hon. F. S. Miller: A red one at that. Oh well, I have uncovered one of my allies.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, the minister will find I have a nice little Citation now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: A Citation, that's fine. But there has been some argument, for example, that the pricing in North America is inconsistent, that if we look at the price in the US versus the price in Canada, there's an imbalance. The reason I point these things out is we have gone through the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations. One of the basic parts of it all was that products must be sold at fair prices and since the tariff barriers are coming down there must be some protection against dumping, unfair pricing et al.

I think we have to make sure that if these products are being sold unfairly, our home market has a right to be protected and I suspect that I get some support from those of you opposite us. I am talking about a bare car price. One of the things that continues to worry me—and the member touched upon it—is about buying foreign products. He said the proportion was 50 per cent in California. Certainly California has a lot of foreign cars. I saw our figures; I can't recall. It was about 25 per cent of sales are imports, something like that. I always worry about this belief that you have to buy something foreign to get something good.

Mr. Bounsall: Who said that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No one in this House, but I don't think a lot of people purchasing products take enough time to recognize where it's made. I feel that's one of the responsibilities we as politicians have from time to time. You will hear somebody bitterly complaining about the lack of work and see he's using foreign products, no matter what they may be, when Canadian products are available.

The last thing the member touched upon was pollution abatement equipment and the effect upon the cost of the car. I don't want to get into an argument about pollution abatement. The objective is fine. What worries me is that pollution abatement has been a tradeoff against fuel economy. In a fuel-hungry world I have to wonder which of the social objectives is the more important and how can we trade them off so that the consumer doesn't get bankrupted in the process?

Mr. Bounsall: I just have one overriding major concern I would like to mention to the minister. I sat here this afternoon and listened to various of my colleagues in the House talk upon the problems in the auto industry. I am very concerned, hearing the minister's low-key replies which indicate to me a lack of concern, over getting in place immediately some transitional assistance benefits.

The minister can talk about a rebound coming in the very near future. If that rebound takes place in the employment of auto workers in Ontario or Canada, fair enough, then the transitional assistance benefits will not be in effect. But I just want to very quickly run through with the minister the situation the Windsor auto workers are in.

There are more than 2,300 on indefinite layoff from Ford. Those people will not get back to work until the new engine plant in Windsor is complete. There is now in excess of 2,200 laid off from Chrysler; another 850 are to be put on indefinite layoff as of January 2; the whole of assembly plant 6 is to be shut down on December 17, so in fact the layoff of the 850 starts next Monday. Of those roughly 5,000 workers directly in Chrysler and Ford, 2,000 of them have run out of their supplementary unemployment benefits, of course. They have run out of all unemployment insurance benefits. At the end of this month or early in January, 2,000 of those 5,000 will be on the welfare rolls essentially awaiting the going back into production of the Ford plant and Chrysler bouncing back.

If there ever was a need for transitional assistance benefits and if there was a meaning to that actual phrase, it's in Windsor at the moment while they await the coming on stream of that engine plant at Ford and the bounce-back of Chrysler, which I firmly believe will occur. The minister made mention earlier this afternoon of a lack of confidence in Chrysler surviving as a corporation. I don't believe that at all.

There's a world of difference between the feeling around Ontario as I have seen it with respect to Chrysler products and the feeling that was around in the last couple of years of Studebaker, particularly because Studebaker in those times was making a product the consumers did not trust. This is not true with Chrysler products. They happen to make a very good product, but a product which in many people's minds is not the product they wish to buy at this particular moment.

Certainly the press has not been helpful in calling the Cordoba or the Cordoba Mirada a gas guzzler. In fact, they are getting rather excellent mileage. They certainly are getting better mileage on those new vehicles than I am getting on my 1977

Volare wagon. It is an eight-cylinder engine but in a small Volare. The wagon is not very big, but the new cars produced in the assembly plant in Windsor are getting, I would think, five to seven more miles to the gallon than I am getting from my Volare; quite respectable in this day and age in terms of consumption.

So there is a problem with respect to educating the public as to what the gas mileage the cars being assembled in Windsor are getting. I think Chrysler will surmount that. I think they will have enough time to survive if the funds from the US and Canadian governments come through. They will survive and will, under the new management they have, produce a range of cars which will be bought by the public. But until that occurs, there is a very desperate need for the workers in Chrysler to achieve some additional benefits. There is a very definite need for the workers at Ford to have those benefits while they wait around for that engine plant to become operational.

The term "transitional assistance benefit" fits their situation exactly. I am concerned this Treasurer seems so lackadaisical or off hand with respect to pressing the federal government to get those transitional assistance benefits in place. This is what is desperately needed now. Within the next two to three weeks, 2,000 workers will go on the welfare rolls of Windsor, their unemployment insurance having completely run out. It is just the start of those numbers which will accrue over the next year or two until Chrysler regains its situation and Ford gets the new assembly in operation.

What concerns me is your attitude; not appearing to be at all forceful or really all that aware of the need to get these in place now and being very firm with the federal government about that need. If, as you predict, there is a bounce-back in six months' time, the way the transitional assistance benefits are written will take care of many of those workers desperately in need of the receipt of them now, so that is no argument for not getting into it and not having those transitional assistance benefits in place.

This afternoon I phoned UAW Local 195 in Windsor which deals with all the auto supplies, the amalgamated local that deals with auto suppliers. They have 1,000 persons on indefinite layoff in the auto feeder plants around Windsor now.

Again, in a few short months many of those will be out of unemployment insurance benefits, quite apart from the very intermittent nature of their work which means two weeks at work, three weeks off, with this sort of pattern occurring right across the auto parts industry. There is another 200 to 300 suspected indefinite layoffs rumoured in the very near future in those plants covered by UAW 195 for those auto parts workers. That transitional assistance benefits program is desperately needed in place now, because the provincial government is going to end up paying 80 per cent of the welfare costs in any event.

Let me say to the minister this is a very serious transitional situation we are going through at Windsor. Last week in Windsor I talked to the manager of the bank I deal with. He indicated he had no more than a handful of applications for mortgages come through his particular branch since June. He has a file so thick he didn't want to pull it out of his desk to show the number of mortgages in very great danger of being called.

That's the economic situation in Windsor and all for the sake of having some transitional assistance benefits in place to carry them over to the time when they will be returning to their normal work. It's very desperate in the Chrysler situation and in the Ford situation.

This government should be doing everything it can, not just for the normal revenues that will benefit this provincial government by having those workers receive some sort of benefit, but for those very great personal problems which will arise in the Windsor area as a few more months go by and no assistance of the kind I speak of is forthcoming. There are numbers of families whose houses are going to be lost because mortgage payments cannot be kept up and numbers of families will be evicted for nonpayment of rent because they do not have the money. They will find themselves wanted for work and back at work in a year and a half to two years' time.

If the predictions are correct and the financial arrangements are forthcoming from the US and Canadian governments these workers will be employed in a couple of years at the very latest. Even the workers with the least seniority will find work. However, this government refuses to become serious with the federal government in urging it to provide some transitional assistance. It's very difficult to look ahead with absolute clarity as to what's going to be achieved but one could predict that this need for transitional assistance is a situation which will be completely cleared up in two years time.

These benefits should be in place now and this government should be urging the federal government to take this situation very seriously. There is not much point when one sees the personal tragedy in family after family going through this very lean period, losing their homes only to return to the job in a year and a half or two years' time and making sufficient money to get back into the housing market but unable to do so because they had to renege on previous mortgages.

That's going to be the plight of 2,000 or 3,000 home owners in the city of Windsor because of this government not urging the federal government to get into the transitional assistance benefit schemes which have worked in the past and can work now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I have been intrigued in the last hour and 20 minutes of the debate—

Mr. Laughren: We're not finished yet, either.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I recognize that—to realize how neatly the ruling of Mr. Speaker has been circumvented because most assuredly what you've had this afternoon has been the emergency debate on the topic. I suspect once the speeches were written to show the great flexibility of the members of NDP, they have been delivered.

Mr. Laughren: What is wrong with that? We happen to think it is a very serious problem and you don't.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not arguing that and I think quite frankly—

Mr. Laughren: Then what are you making those snide comments for?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Are you ever that way?

Mr. Laughren: No.

Mr. Breaugh: He is too short to be snide.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Listen, don't attack him on that basis. I'll stand and rise in his defence if I can.

Mortgages were touched upon and the number of mortgages issued. I'd like to point out that if one looks across Ontario one will find a sudden slump in the demand for mortgages and not just in the city of Windsor.

Funnily enough, very recently one of the members of the NDP in questioning me about the housing market in Windsor and the Ford assistance was complaining about the increased price of housing due to the recent increased demand and the fact that the basic price had gone up by—I think somebody quoted 10 per cent to 15 per cent—

Mr. Laughren: Forty per cent. If a man has an existing mortgage he has to make payments on it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Forty per cent in the last few months. In other words, when it's good you complain and when it's bad you complain. I have a great deal of difficulty understanding which you want.

Mr. Bounsall: Very briefly, on that. Sure. Because of the rumours of the Ford plant coming in and then the announcement, housing prices did jump over a three- or four-month period to 40 per cent greater than they had been. But it then became very clear after only about six or eight months of that those jobs would not be in place until late 1980 or early 1981. From what was happening in the other parts of the Ford Motor Company, it was there would be no net gain in total employment in Ford in Windsor and the prices levelled off immediately and started to decrease slowly.

The Chrysler situation has made it such that we're back to what I would call normal prices for Windsor, prices that would have pertained in the summer of 1978. But that's nothing to what is going to happen to the prices when there is mortgage default on top of mortgage default over the next two or three months if this government and the federal government don't get serious about transitional assistance benefits.

If the governments don't do so I will ask the Treasurer if he is not at all concerned about the numbers—it isn't going to be just handfuls, we're going to be talking in the hundreds, in Windsor—of mortgage defaults that are going to occur if there are no transitional assistance benefits.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Of course I am, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Laughren: I wasn't going to speak in this debate this afternoon, but the Treasurer has provoked me. Perhaps he understands now and other members of this assembly will understand why it is we felt so strongly about having an emergency debate this afternoon in this chamber.

The response by the government to all the issues we raised around the auto pact and the resulting deficits and layoffs had to do with the concern for the future of Ontario. The Treasurer doesn't seem to understand what is happening.

There were four main reasons why we wanted to have the emergency debate this afternoon and every one of them is reinforced by the Treasurer's performance this afternoon.

One, 27,000 layoffs across Ontario in November; 13,000 indefinite layoffs currently in effect;

Two, record high deficits in 1979 pushing us towards the $5 billion deficit which the economists are now predicting;

Three, we have learned indirectly—the Treasurer would never be so honest as to admit that, or the Minister of Industry and Tourism—the government of Ontario has opted out of all the negotiations with Chrysler with the aid the federal government is considering to give them. That means there go the guarantees for Ontario in any aid that is given to them.

Finally, there is the certainty we're not going to get our share of the new investments, particularly in small cars and small car parts that take place by the Big Three in the years to come.

Those are the reasons why we're very concerned about it.

The Treasurer doesn't even seem to understand it's the investment in the auto industry today that guarantees the jobs tomorrow. His own Ministry of the Treasury in 1978 produced a very good document called, Canada's Share of the North American Automotive Industry: An Ontario Perspective. It was a very good report. If I was working in the Ministry of Treasury and went through all the work of producing a document of this calibre and then saw what the Treasurer did with it, I would no longer be working for that Treasurer.

I don't know how the Treasurer or the ministers over there think they can employ high-calibre civil servants who have produced good documents with good analyses and then merely sit on them or throw them in the garbage can. That's basically what the Treasurer has done. I think of the work and the research that must have gone into this document and we have had no evidence at all since then.

Do you know what the government's response has been when we raise the question of the auto pact? Do you know what the Minister of Industry and Tourism said? He said if we were asking him to go after a fair share, he didn't know how to define fair share.

Maybe if he had picked up this document and read it he would have found a very neat definition of fair share telling him exactly what the Ontario perspective on fair share should be. When we tell him to get off the sidelines and into the game he says, "We're very deeply involved in all the negotiations with Chrysler," and so forth. Then we pick up the Financial Post and we find out Ontario has opted out completely to the federal government because of a strange kind of relationship between the federal minister and somebody in the United States. That's the kind of response the Ontario government makes. It's getting very hard to take.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism also stands up and proudly trumpets the investments by GM in Ontario. He's happy with their investment plans. Is the Treasurer happy with their investment plans?

One day the Minister of Industry and Tourism tell us he's happy with them and the next day he tells us he is not happy with them. The Treasurer, of course, doesn't say anything at all, but by every measurement you want to use, we are not getting our fair share under the auto pact. You can use any measurement you want, any benchmark, and we're not getting it. The Ontario government report says that very clearly.

Mr. Craig, the chief negotiator for the federal government with Chrysler, has put it very succinctly. My colleague from Downsview raised it. He said it's a branch-plant operation. They don't care what goes on here. Decisions are not made here; it's a lot of nonsense. When I see the Treasurer sitting there and giving us these half-baked responses to what I consider to be very serious questions, it makes me very angry.

I would only ask that the Treasurer go back to that 1978 document. It just happened to be a Treasury document. It wasn't a Ministry of Industry and Tourism document. Maybe we need to return to the days when the Treasurer of Ontario was more involved in what goes on in the manufacturing sector. This Treasurer has abdicated to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Either that or the Minister of Industry and Tourism has stolen that responsibility from him. It's one or the other.

We need to go back to the days when the Treasurer, who is supposed to be charting the economic future for this province, had something to do with long-range planning. This Treasurer has completely opted out of that. He's opted out to the wrong minister, too, I might add.

I would ask the Treasurer to go back to that 1978 document, even if he only reads the summary. Let him read the summary and get it very clearly in his mind that we are not getting our fair share. I would ask the Treasurer simply to go back over that document. It's too much to ask him to take some new initiative of his own. He's abdicated all new initiatives to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. I ask him why he is not involved in some of these things.

On motion by Hon. Mr. F. S. Miller, the committee of supply reported progress.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee.

Mr. Cunningham: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Again I notice there isn't a quorum here tonight. I am wondering if the government is able to provide more than two members for the debate tonight.

The Chairman called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

CROWN TIMBER AMENDMENT ACT (continued)

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act.

On section 5:

Mr. Martel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I begin by asking for the consent of the House to withdraw my amendment? I understand we need unanimous consent. I want to give some reason for doing so, if I have the consent of the House to withdraw the amendment. I will read it, just to remind you what amendment I am talking about. You will want to get the flavour.

The amendment I moved was that section 5a(1) of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, be amended by inserting after the word "agreement" in the sixth line, "shall provide for the yield to be sustained on the basis that at least two trees are planted for every tree cut under the agreement and to regenerating every acre harvested."

We all know where it came from. It is a good amendment, isn't it?

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member asked about unanimous consent. Did you want it now or at a later time?

Mr. Martel: I would like to ask consent, then I would indicate why I am withdrawing the amendment; or I can tell you why and then ask consent to withdraw it, whichever is convenient.

Mr. Breithaupt: Let's do it the last way.

Mr. Martel: All right. Mr. Chairman, you will recall several weeks ago when we were debating this bill I was not satisfied with the term "sustained yield." Remembering this famous Magna Carta that found its way into the last provincial election, I had no alternative but to support the Premier (Mr. Davis).

You will recall in item number seven of that magnificent charter—

Mr. Watson: That's a great number. I like a great number.

Mr. Martel: We could leave it in, but we will come to that in a moment too. It involved a commitment to replacing at least two trees for every one harvested henceforth in Ontario and to regenerating every acre harvested. Being naive I believed the Premier, so I moved his amendment. That amendment has a history, because it was my former leader who said one tree for every tree cut. In the middle of an election the government had to do one better so they made it two trees for every one cut.

Mr. Gaunt: Do I hear three?

Mr. Martel: I thought for a while the way the minister was responding several weeks ago that three or four, it didn't make much difference—what was the word you were using?

Mr. Young: The spirit.

Mr. Wildman: Symbolic.

Mr. Martel: It was the spirit, it was symbolic. Well if it is only symbolism then it is a lot of rot; but I believed the Premier where my friends over there wouldn't.

I wanted also to move that amendment for another reason. Several years ago when I was writing to one of your predecessors about reforestation in Algonquin Park, I was again taking the naive position that we should at least replace every tree that was cut with another one. Frank Miller, our present Treasurer, told me I didn't know what I was talking about, but it is interesting that the Premier, whom I trust, made it two for one; so obviously Frank didn't know what he was talking about.

I thought the best way to put it into focus was to move that magnificent amendment. Then I read an interesting report. Let me just quote briefly from a commission report. It says:

"When the extent of the resources to be administered and protected are reflected upon and the funds which have for several years been made available to the service considered, it is quite apparent that the forest service of Ontario has been treated quite as liberally, if not actually more so, than have other provinces and dominion. This fact notwithstanding, there is ample evidence the government of Ontario also has followed the practice of extracting too great a toll from its forest resources without returning thereto by way of protection and competent administration the amount which proper conduct of the forest business would demand."

That statement came in a Canadian royal commission report on pulpwood in 1924. What have we done since then? I thought I would rectify it by moving the Premier's amendment. So with Miller chastising me, with the Premier making all these grandiose promises, I went ahead. I must say I was soon shattered, to say the least, when we moved the amendment to read the minister's response, and through him the government's response, to the Premier's promise; and then to find the supporters of the government prepared to stand in their place, of all things, and vote against the Premier's amendment.

That was devastating. That is one of the reasons for my withdrawal. I felt that if they aren't going to support the Premier and make him credible, why should I? Why should I, if that side of the House is not going to do it over there. I was prepared to do it, but when I couldn't muster any support from that side of the House I had no choice but to reconsider my position, which I have subsequently done.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I hope the Premier doesn't come in before we get unanimous consent.

Mr. Martel: Well maybe he will support me; it would be something new.

A second factor entered into my decision to ask the House for unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. That was a statement prepared for the minister by some of the people in the ministry who apparently know something about forestry. Obviously the Premier didn't.

I would just like to read into the record a few extracts from observations of the experts in this field. It doesn't come from me, however, I want to say it doesn't lend any credibility to the Premier's words of wisdom back in 1977.

There were four points made about my amendment—and I want to substitute, if I might, as I go along, the name Davis for Martel and the name Brampton to represent a riding rather than that of Sudbury East. I just want to make those substitutions because I moved the Premier's amendment.

Mr. Foulds: In the absence of the Premier.

Mr. Martel: That's right; I wanted to do that. Anyway, if we make those substitutions I will tell members the four reasons why I withdrew. They convinced me that they were right.

I am quoting the memorandum prepared for the minister. It says:

"This amendment in effect redefines the same yield to mean the planting of two trees for every tree harvested and regenerating every acre that is harvested.

"This redefinition of sustained yield conflicts with the definition of that expression as set out in subsection 2 of section 5a, namely, 'a growth of timber that a forest can produce and that can be cut to achieve a continuous approximate balance between growth of timber and timber cut.' In our opinion, this conflict that is created in virtue of the amendment proposed by the"—member for Brampton—"must be eliminated."

Not shall or will, "must." Well it goes on, it says: "Legislation ought not to be contradictory, since the definition of sustained yield . . ."

Mr. Hennessy: You're using big words tonight.

Mr. Martel: That's right; ". . . since the definition of sustained yield set out in subsection 2 of section 5a conforms, generally speaking, with the understanding of that expression by the forest professions across Canada, the US and other countries, we are of the opinion that the proposed amendment redefining sustained yield ought to be withdrawn. It would be most undesirable to adopt in legislation the definition of sustained yield proposed by the member"—for Brampton, if I am allowed to make that insertion—"when it would conflict with the generally accepted definition of that expression and reflect unfavourably upon the Legislature and the forestry profession in Ontario."

Now I didn't realize I was doing that. I just thought I was putting into effect what the Premier foresaw for the province.

Mr. Wildman: Would Davis do that?

Mr. Foulds: The Premier was casting that reflection on the Legislature and on the forestry profession in Ontario.

[8:15]

Mr. Martel: That's the first reason I thought I had better withdraw. It makes sense, but you know who didn't make sense then.

Secondly, "We are advised that the amendment proposed by the member"—for Brampton—"would severely restrict the reforestation effort in Ontario." I certainly don't think that's what the Premier wanted.

Mr. Foulds: I think he did.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Port Arthur doesn't have the floor.

Mr. Martel: On past history, when you look at the thing I quoted from 1924 and realize now it's 1979 and we are going to get around to protecting it, maybe the Premier wanted to continue in the old way. A traditionalist to the end is Bill Davis.

Going on, this is still part two, "The amendment provides in part that the yield is to be sustained on the basis that at least two trees are planted for every one cut. This amendment restricts the method of obtaining regeneration to planting."

I wish somebody had said that in 1977, the night that the Minister of Natural Resources was in that audience that wildly applauded the Brampton charter. My friend from Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane) might have got up, knowing something about it, and contradicted the Premier as well, because obviously he was misleading us.

"We are advised that regeneration is obtained by planting, seeding and silvicultural harvesting systems. The choice of method used to obtain regeneration in any particular case depends upon many factors, such as the type of soil, the nature of the forest being harvested, the type of species to be regenerated and the objectives of management. It is reasonably clear that restricting the method of obtaining regeneration to planting would severely inhibit the reforestation effort in Ontario." I certainly wouldn't want to be accused of that, even if the Premier did. I wasn't prepared to accept that burden of responsibility and so I want to indicate that that was the second reason I was prepared to withdraw my amendment.

The third one is the best. It says, thirdly, "The amendment proposed by the member"—for Brampton—"also has implications that are simply absurd." Now I want to tell you, "simply absurd"; that being the case, I have to divorce myself from the Premier totally.

It further says, "The amendment states that the agreement shall provide that every acre of harvest is regenerated. The underlying word 'shall' means that this obligation is mandatory. However, we are advised that when a forest is harvested, about 10 to 15 per cent of its area is removed from forest production for haul roads, buildings and other permanent works." I wish somebody had told the Premier that sooner.

"The foregoing mandatory provision would require a company to regenerate the area covered by such permanent work." The Premier didn't think about that, did he? Can you imagine some trees planted on the roof of some building or in the middle of the road?

Mr. Foulds: In northern Ontario that happens, let me tell you.

Mr. Martel: Here's the final crunch. "A provision that leads to such absurdity should not, in our opinion, be legislated into law." You can see why I am prepared to divorce myself from the Premier now. That was it.

There was one hooker in there that almost caused me to change my mind and it was the fourth hooker. The fact that the industry might object was almost enough to get me to say the Premier was right. If they couldn't live with this amendment, maybe the Premier had something going for him after all. Obviously we reflected upon it; we met and we thought despite what the forest industry says the professional foresters who work for the ministry know better. Despite what the Premier says we can't go along, we have to separate ourselves from him.

I might indicate too, Mr. Chairman, there was one further reason for the withdrawal. That was the work of the minister himself. The minister, with his staff, is about to make a statement that I think is going to be pleasing to us from the point of view that it spells out very clearly what we are going to do. The proposed amendments that the minister is prepared to make are attractive to many of the people to whom I have spoken in that they will provide us with an opportunity to make the companies accountable. That accountability will be written into law. They will indicate what has been done in various reports which will be made available. It will be forthcoming in the minister's statement to us just where we can check, not aggregate figures but in fact area by area, agreement by agreement, what has been cut, what has been regenerated, how much has been successful, how much has failed. So for the first time in Ontario we will know through the reporting mechanisms what is going on; at least I hope that is the case.

I am also pleased with what the minister has had to say about how they intend to make this act work, to guarantee that in fact the companies will be held accountable, I hope the minister will explain the system, the mechanism for making them accountable.

All kidding aside, I am hopeful we are going to have a much better bill than we would have had if we had accepted the original bill presented to us.

Finally, I would ask the minister, and I have given him a copy of sustained yield, why it is indicated in the memorandum that the definition of sustained yield is the one acceptable in Canada and in the United States? I looked up the definition in use in the United States and it is somewhat different. I have a concern about that definition, because it deals primarily with timber. Maybe under this act that has been deliberately so defined because of the name of the act, the Crown Timber Act.

I would have hoped we might have seen that sustained yield means achievement and maintenance in perpetuity of high level annual irregular periodic output of the various forest resources without impairment of the productivity of the land. Maybe the minister could explain why they chose the definition for sustained yield they did. It seems to me that yours is restricted to timber. I would hope that we are talking about more than just timber. I would ask the minister if he would comment.

With those few remarks, I would ask if the committee is prepared with unanimous consent to accept my request that the amendment I placed be withdrawn.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Martel previously moved an amendment to section 5 of the bill. This, of course, was stacked to be voted on at a later time. He has now asked for unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment. Is there unanimous consent by the committee?

Agreed.

Are there any further comments on section 5?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This will come as a great surprise to everybody. I have a small statement to make and a couple of amendments to move.

Just before I do that, I would like to deal with the last matter the honourable member from Sudbury East mentioned. The reason we are using the definition of sustained yield that we are is because the forest management agreement, as the honourable member said, relates strictly to the production of timber. The matters of the other products of the forest are covered, or will be covered, in the land-use plans that will cover all the areas in which there will be forest management agreements. To simplify matters, to make the agreements deal strictly with timber management, we have adopted the definition which is in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, because some time has elapsed since previous discussion of this bill, I would like to make a few remarks. I appreciate there is some justifiable concern by members because the bill does not go into detail concerning forest management agreement and the processes and requirements concerning the administration and monitoring of its implementation. As has been mentioned, the draft copy of the proposed agreement has been made available to any who are interested. It provides the terms and conditions which would be entered into.

There is, however, an aspect of the agreement and its implementation which is relevant to the broader picture of forest management in Ontario. The areas which would come under agreement are part of the crown forest lands covered by the forest production policy of my ministry.

I might remind the House that this policy, adopted in 1972, has a target of producing 9.1 million cunits annually by the year 2020. Of this total, 7.1 million cunits can be expected to come from crown land. When compared to the 3.9 million cunits produced from crown land in the fiscal year of 1971-72, the time of initiation of the policy, the increase will be 82 per cent. The present annual cut from crown lands is 5.6 million cunits.

We are therefore involved in bringing about some very significant increases in productivity which must depend upon increased efforts by all concerned. I emphasized previously that the performance required by a company in respect of harvesting, regeneration and tending treatments will be set out in the ground rules of each agreement. Not only are the treatments prescribed, but so are related standards by which their success or failure is to be judged. It will be appreciated that these treatments must relate to the particular forest conditions of a company area.

For instance, treatment for black spruce forest on peat soils will differ from that for jack pine on sands. Our prime concern is that forest lands are regenerated and kept productive. On an annual basis, therefore, the treatments will be known and monitored yearly, because they must conform to the conditions of the agreement before payment of the invoices.

My ministry has developed a certification procedure for these treatments, we shall therefore have an annual documentation of what has been performed. This certification will be done by registered professional foresters from both the company and the ministry staff. In itself, the carrying out of a regeneration treatment, even though done to the best possible prescription, does not ensure that productivity is maintained. Whether the regeneration is from seeds or from planted trees, there is a period required for establishment.

We have determined that within five years from the time of regeneration treatment, the new forest shall be assessed to see whether it conforms to the specified standards and is acceptable. This does not mean after every regeneration treatment we just walk away and forget about it until the fifth year. There will be intermediate assessments. If the trees in the planted area were all to die in the second year after planting, for instance, it would be considered a failure and a retreatment would be called for immediately. Generally speaking, however, it is not until the fifth year that a final decision can be made as to the success or failure of an area.

Every fifth year, the sum of the effects of management practices relating to forest productivity, the harvesting or depletion, and the successful regeneration and new growth or additions to the forest during the past five years, are assessed. From these assessments the allowable cut for the next five years will be determined. This is the essence of what is meant by sustained yield. The actions or treatments for regeneration during each five year period and their success have an immediate and measurable effect on a company's allowable cut.

At the end of each five-year period, the performance of the company shall be reviewed and if its obligations have been satisfactorily performed the agreement will be extended a further five years; that is a company will have a 20-year agreement as it did when the agreement was initiated. This is why it has been termed an evergreen agreement.

However, if the obligations are not satisfactorily performed, the agreement will not be extended. The company will only have a 15-year period remaining, but will have to perform the obligations which were in default before the agreement can be extended, otherwise the agreement may be terminated.

A company's performance will therefore affect both its allowable cuts and its tenure or term of agreement.

Needless to say, the monitoring and information system required to ensure we are up to date on treatments and their results must be modern and efficient. That is why my ministry is actively developing such a system to be in place for these agreement areas as well as our own crown units. I believe the requirements we have already formulated for the silvicultural treatments of harvesting, regeneration and tending, and the reporting of these results in relation to the productivity of the area, are important enough that they should be reflected in the legislation.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, I will move an amendment to subsection 1 of section 5a of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, that will provide some legislative assurances in respect to some of the foregoing matters.

In particular, the amendment will provide that the forest management agreements must set out the silvicultural specifications that are to be observed and performed in respect of harvesting, regeneration and tending of the forest areas to which the agreements apply. In addition, the agreements will set out the standards of regeneration to be achieved. These provisions will provide the necessary yardsticks to assess the success of treatments that are performed to improve forest productivity.

In keeping with these assurances, I will also move an amendment to section 5a of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, that is aimed at keeping the House better informed on the progress being made under the agreements in regard to management of the forests.

In this respect, two reports will be tabled before the House. The first will report on the areas harvested, regenerated and tended under the agreements in each year of the period of the agreements by working group areas for each agreement. This will enable a comparison to be made between the mandatory silvicultural treatments specified in the agreements and the accomplishments achieved in these respects for the year in question.

The second report will report on the relationships between the harvest and growth, including successes and failures of regeneration of timber during each five-year term of the forest management agreements.

Members will appreciate that this relationship is the essence of forest management on a sustained yield basis, an objective that all members have indicated they support.

Finally, I will move an amendment to section 5a of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, that will require the tabling before the House of each forest management agreement and each amendment thereto. This disclosure of information and the statutory assurances in respect of the content of forest management agreements aimed at regeneration and productivity will keep the members of the House and their constituents informed in respect of this new approach to forest management in Ontario.

I understand there are two further amendments to come from the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden), which she asked me to comment on at this time.

Mr. Chairman: It might be better if you waited and replied when the amendments were put.

According to my notes, when we were last sitting and discussing this bill there was an amendment placed by Mr. Foulds, adding a subsection to section 5. The chair had not placed the amendment. I wonder what the honourable member wanted done with this particular amendment.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Chairman, in view of the information I have about the amendments the minister will be placing at this time, I would withdraw the amendment I put, but I would make two points in doing so. One is that the minister's amendment, to give him credit because he has better legal advice than I do, is actually somewhat better because he added the term, "not only to lay a copy of the agreement but any amendments to the agreement." I think it would be neater, legislatively, if I withdrew this on the condition that it's referred to in history from now on as the "Foulds-Auld" amendment, just as the amendment that has been withdrawn previously will go down in history as the "Davis-Martel" amendment.

Mr. Chairman: I take it, then, the member is withdrawing his amendment? I will now place the minister's amendments.

Hon. Mr. Auld moves that subsection 1 of section 5a of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(1) Subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the minister may enter into an agreement with any person for the management of crown timber on a sustained yield basis and for carrying out all operations necessary for such management and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing every such agreement shall set out,

(a) the silvicultural specifications that are to be observed and performed in respect to the harvesting, regeneration and tending of the forest areas that are subject to the agreement, and;

(b) the standards of regeneration to be achieved on the forest areas that are subject to the agreement and may provide for;

(c) the cutting of crown timber and the prices therefor;

(d) the cutting of killed or damaged crown timber and other crown timber that, in any other crown timber that, in the ministry's opinion should in the interests of economic forest utilization, be cut with such killed or damaged crown timber subject to such prices, if any, and to such terms and conditions as the minister and such persons may agree upon;

(e) the construction, reconstruction and maintenance of any road necessary to such management and operations;

(f) a reduction of the stumpage charges to be paid by such person for any increase in the volume of crown timber that was cut and is the direct of any silvicultural treatment applied at the expense of such person; the preparation of plans, rules and reports of any other documents to such management and operations; and

(h) such other terms and conditions as the minister and such person may agree upon that are not inconsistent with the regulations and, except in the case of a provision made under clause (b) or (f), any such agreement should be subject to the terms and conditions prescribed in the regulations.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, after long hours of negotiations between the three parties on this, I don't really have any problem with accepting the amendment as laid out by the minister, except that I wonder why it hadn't been brought forward in similar form to begin with.

However, I do have a problem relating to the comment that he made in introducing these amendments. I'm not sure whether my remarks come exactly under the amendment as put, but I want to make them, and the minister can take cognizance of them now because I don't believe they come up under the other two amendments.

In his remarks before he put the amendment to section 5, he spoke about the actions or treatments to ensure regeneration and growth during each five-year period and their success having an immediate and measureable effect on a company's allowable cut. I am not going to regurgitate and reiterate the argument we made the last time we debated the bill about the mere fact that if somebody does not live up to his regeneration agreement with the minister the minister, in his wisdom, whoever he or she may be, is going to say to company A, "You didn't live up to your agreement. You had five years and you didn't do enough silviculture, you didn't do enough regeneration, you didn't do enough aerial seeding and you didn't do enough tree planting; therefore we are going to cut down on your allowable cut."

The immediate effect of that is on the people in the immediate area; the employees of that plant are the ones most directly affected. The company is going to say, "All right, the Minister of Natural Resources has said we didn't live up to our agreement, therefore we can't produce X tons of pulp and paper or kraft or whatever it happens to be, and therefore you are all laid off."

My friends to the left and myself, as well as the minister's own members, would be the first ones breathing down his back or breathing down his neck saying, "Why are you doing away with their allowable cut? All you have done is created massive unemployment by doing this."

I say to the minister again, and I won't go through it all again, this does not solve the problem of them not living up to an agreement. He has to hit them in their pocketbooks, where it really hurts.

The second part of that equation makes no sense at all, and I say this with respect, perhaps, to the lawyer who drew this amendment up. It makes no sense, I would think, to anybody engaged in the forest industry. I find it hard to believe that the minister's advisers, some of whom are sitting in front of him, would agree to that, unless all the educational process I have been through in 12 years of talking about forests and trees is worth naught. He has told us, and I think my friends the members for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), and Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) would agree, that the allowable cut is based on the mature timber in the forest. One cuts out those trees that have reached a certain age, at which if they aren't cut they are going to die anyway. They should be cut, because like some of us in this chamber they are going to pass away.

Now is the minister saying that if they don't do the regeneration properly the government will cut back on their allowable cut so those trees that should be cut won't be cut? Is that the gist of what he is saying? That is certainly the way I read it. If one doesn't do one's regeneration, if they aren't good boys, if they don't live up to the contract, first of all the people who are going to suffer are the employees in the communities where these pulp and paper mills and timber companies are located.

Secondly, he is going to create a situation in which those trees, that supposedly are mature and should be cut, in the wisdom of the ministry and the wisdom of the timber management branch of the companies we are dealing with will not be cut because the company has not lived up to its agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to go on as long about this as I did before, but I would ask the minister to either reconsider or give us a couple of good reasons, tonight, why we should accept this amendment as is and why we should accept his word on the basis of the regeneration agreement not being lived up to. Why would he not use some punitive measures that are not going to affect the employees of the company, are not going to hurt the forest as such in terms of not using the mature stands that are there; but which would really put the onus and the punitive burden on the companies through some kind of monetary action if they don't live up to these agreements. That would get their attention a lot faster.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think the honourable member is forgetting what I mentioned previously, as I recall. First of all, the allowable cut is not measured primarily or only on mature timber, it is really calculated on all age classes of timber. The important thing to remember is that any decrease of the allowable cut in five years is going to be relatively small when you look at it in that light. The really effective part of this, in our opinion, is the board of directors of that company now finds that instead of a 20-year evergreen agreement they only have 15 years.

They still have the same investment in their operation. If I were an investor I would be wondering what sort of management there was in this company. I think there can be a very real or apprehended penalty on the part of the company and its board when it sees they still have this large mill, or whatever operation it is, but instead of a 20-year agreement they now only have a 15-year agreement, and if they don't sharpen up it is going to be a shorter one.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We have been through this debate before. We all know the history of regeneration in Ontario, particularly in the last 36 years. We know you haven't come down heavily on any company involved in the pulp and paper or the timber industry. We really don't expect you are going to do so now. They don't expect you are going to, so I really say to you again that when you say it is going to affect their allowable cut or their 20-year agreement, as it is they have been getting along on five-year agreements and it hasn't hurt them.

There is a psychological impact. I can understand the investor's concern when they only have a five-year contract, but you don't really mean to tell me you expect Great Lakes, for instance, to put $200 million in Dryden without some kind of guarantees, either out on the table or in the boardroom somewhere between yourself and them, or the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), or the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) or whoever. You don't really mean to tell me you are going to say to them, "If you don't live up to a regeneration agreement, Charlie, we will cut you back to 15 years. If you don't do that, we will cut you to 10; and by the way we want you to invest $400 million in Reed Paper in Dryden."

I know I still have a little bit of naivety and that sort of thing, but I don't think you really expect anybody here who has been involved with these things to really believe or agree with that argument, and nobody does.

Let us say Great Lakes doesn't live up to their agreement. In 15 years you come along and say: "That's it. You don't have an agreement any more. You have got to sell your $400 million investment to somebody." What if nobody comes along who wants to buy it?

It doesn't make any sense. We are not dealing in reality. We might be dealing with some nice theoretical situation somebody has dreamed up somewhere, but we are not dealing with the political realities or the economic realities, or certainly the historical realities of what has happened in the resource business, particularly in the forest business in the province.

I can tell I am not going to win this point with the minister. Perhaps I should put an amendment and hope my friends will support me. I really don't think what you are proposing in this amendment, and what you have said in your remarks to it, is going to affect anything a tinker's dam in really forcing these companies to live up to these kinds of agreements.

I can tell you, I will bet even money right now, that in five years we are going to have at least half a dozen timber companies which have not lived up to their agreements for one reason or another. The minister of the day is going to wring his hands and say, "Isn't that terrible. My God we have talked strongly to them, but do you people over there really expect us to put men out of work because they didn't live up to their regeneration agreements?"

He is going to say to the member for Sudbury East, for example, "Do you really want us to cut back on their timber limits so they have to cut down on production and 200 of your constituents will be out of work? Do you really want us to do that?"

We will then be in that same position as the people on that side of the House who have 36 years of experience—and they do it very well—of making all the mistakes and blaming it on the opposition. I just say one more time: "It isn't going to work; it isn't going to fly, Wilbur."

I think the government should change this aspect of it. There should be some monetary penalties in this whole thing, because what the government is trying to do by way of penalizing the company is only going to penalize individuals who work there and the communities they support; and it is going to have very negligible effects on the companies themselves.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I pointed out previously that this is really a new ball game. I don't disagree with the honourable member. In the past, and currently, timber licenses are on a 21-year period subject to renewal for another 20 years. Up to the present time if somebody was not performing it involved the crown itself as the responsible agency. We discussed that earlier. There is a great change in this approach.

I would agree that nobody is going to walk into any company at the end of the 21st year and say, "Well fellows, you haven't done anything, you are out of business tomorrow."

Mr. T. P. Reid: Even in 10 years it's not going to make any difference.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That's right. The pressures that will be exerted on every member in this House from the public and everybody else might not be as great in Cornwall where there are other industries as well as Domtar, as they certainly would be in those communities in other parts of the province where pulp and paper or whatever kind of timber industry involved is the economic base of the whole area.

I believe with the combination of things we are doing in these amendments to foster regeneration we will have a much better lever. We will not be going into court trying to collect damages and trying to prove what those damages are because of a short-fall in regeneration in four or five years.

I think pressure is exerted on the company in the area by those people in the area. Pressure on the boardroom of that company will be really quite significant. In the event it turns out we are wrong, then this Legislature meets frequently and there may well have to be some further amendments, but I think it's worth a try. Of course there is no argument, the companies will all enter into an agreement.

Mr. Foulds: I have a couple of comments I would like to make. I am not quite as cynical as my friend the member for Rainy River in saying that these agreements won't work, although he has been in this Legislature four years longer than I have, and four years from now I may be as cynical as he is with regard to these agreements.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Wait four more years.

Mr. Foulds: Exactly, I can understand that. I prefer to think of myself as a happy and hopeful pessimist, but I share some of the concerns, because as I said at some point in the previous debate we are in danger of putting all our eggs in one basket and seeing this as the nirvana of the forest management process. I am not sure, even with the amendments the minister has presented, which admittedly strengthened the bill considerably, we are going to reach that. I hope you received my note and that one of your people is considering the question.

Hon. Mr. Auld: You didn't sign it so I didn't respond to it.

Mr. Foulds: Sorry; I was the one who sent you the note asking how you felt about adding the words "in perpetuity" in your definition of sustained yield on page three.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Normally I don't respond to anonymous letters but in this case I will.

Mr. Foulds: I'll sign it. It would be after the word "balance" in line three of the new section 5(a), subsection 2 of the act, and before the word "between"; so that at least we have the idea in legislation that sustained yield carries on forever, in an evergreen way just as the agreements will be evergreen agreements, in fact permanent agreements if the conditions are met by both parties.

I don't think that interferes with what you are trying to achieve and the flexibility you want in the legislation. I would like you to consider that seriously, because I have some worries about the continuity of funding. As I read through the draft agreements between the minister and whatever companies will sign them, I was reminded of something I had forgotten. The agreements do not have to be lived up to either by the crown or by the companies involved if—and I am looking for the—well I will just read the two sections that concern me. Section 27(a) in the draft agreement says: "Where an assessment that has been made under subparagraph one indicates that the said parts not stocked in accordance with the ground rules, except where such parts have not been treated with the treatment by the company in virtue of the lack of an appropriation by the Legislature of Ontario, the company at its expense agrees to then reforest such lands in accordance with the ground rules." Over on section 32(1): "The obligations of the minister to pay moneys under this agreement are each subject to the condition precedent that moneys are appropriated therefor by the Legislature of the province of Ontario . . ."

Now I can accept, with faith, hope and charity, that those things are going to happen, but in fact in treating the crown forests since 1962 we haven't appropriated enough money in the Legislature for the government to carry out the reforestation. We in the opposition, even though we are the majority today, cannot increase that appropriation, and that gives me some concern, because it's the continuity of funding that I think will be important for the continuation of silviculture in the future, in perpetuity.

I understand, for example, that Manitoba has established a trust fund; I think it's $9 a cord they charge for all woods cut. The fees go into a trust fund for silvicultural purposes. I know it has not been the practice of this government to designate funding. It has always put those returns into general consolidated revenue and I have some sympathy for that, however I really do think we have to seek in legislative form some way of saying there should be a balance between growth of timber and timber cut in perpetuity, so that we genuinely do have sustained yield.

There are a couple of other points not related to that which I would like to make. I think they have been met by the minister's statement. One is it is clear now the annual statement will be for each individual agreement, although we will get them compiled so we have both a summary and an evaluation of the success or failure. I think it was important for the minister to underline that would be for each agreement.

I have a suggestion I would like to make, although I am not going to make it as an amendment at this point I think it should be considered seriously. The five-year audit the minister mentioned, the five-year review, should be done by an independent group. It should not be done merely by a company forester and a ministry forester, but perhaps by bringing in a professional forester from outside of the province and one from the academic community. That way, that audit which is tabled on a five-year basis will be seen to have the stamp of approval of professional foresters other than those who frankly, have a vested interest here in Ontario.

I know when we discussed this with the minister's officials I actually wanted to introduce an amendment in legislation which would indicate that the agreement—actually, I'll wait until we get to the next amendment before I go into this one.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman my advice, through my legal adviser who is sitting in front of me, is that in perpetuity is redundant, because the definition of continuous or sustained yield in the current jargon really says it all.

Secondly, and it seems to me the Treasurer mentioned this in the House not too long ago in connection with something else, one government cannot bind the succeeding government. Anything the Legislature can do in a statute it can undo in a subsequent statute. The point about guaranteeing a sum of money in perpetuity for reforestation just could not happen.

Mr. Foulds: I understand that. That's why I wanted the legislative format for the sustained yield.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Anything the Legislature can do the Legislature can undo. You can produce a format for a sinking fund and a subsequent government can come and amend or repeal that act.

Mr. Martel: We are trying to guarantee some money to work with so the chairman of management—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Some Chairmen of Management Board of Cabinet have been very generous. Some, I know, wish they knew which ministry they were going to be in after they were in the management board post.

In connection with the five-year audit, frankly I would think that is not going to be done as an arbitration board exercise. Our foresters and the company foresters will look at the results and the report will come to the ministry. The ministry will then say to the company it is doing a great job or it is not doing a great job. I would say I would prefer it this way, rather than in effect conceivably having a two-to-one split on some factor affecting the performance.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Did the member for Port Arthur want to finish a point? If it was a different point, the member for Nipissing.

Mr. Bolan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to raise several points with respect to this amendment, in the nature of comments and questions I will ask of the ministry.

The longer we seem to struggle with this bill the more apparent the deficiencies of the reforestation program which this province has undertaken, or failed to undertake, over the past number of years become. I think it's an axiom which is accepted by many in the forest industry today that 15 years from now Ontario won't have any trees.

If you were to walk out on the street and say that to somebody, or if you were to address a bunch of school children and tell them that the province of Ontario is running out of trees, they'd cart you away in a strait-jacket until they started looking at some of the facts, and at some of the people who are very much involved in this. It becomes very apparent that given the mess we're in right now we are running out of trees.

In 1973, after finally realizing that the ad hoc policy this government had was simply not getting anywhere as far as reforestation was concerned, the government introduced what is called the forest production policy. It sought to intensify forest management and sustain the forest industry with an annual cut of 9.1 million cunits of industrial roundwood by the year 2020.

Since then we have been deluged with a number of statistics on the amount of regeneration which has taken place in Ontario. For example, it was said that in 1977 173,000 acres were treated for regeneration; in 1978 the government had planned to treat 185,000 acres; in 1979 the government treated 193,000 acres.

But these statistics, Mr. Chairman, are really meaningless; they mean absolutely nothing unless the survival rate of trees is reported to us as well. What I would like to know, as I'm sure many of us would like to know, is how many of the acres being regenerated are judged to be successfully regenerated? Just as important, if not more important, how many of these acres are judged to have regenerated forests? How many of the acres which were treated by the ministry, let's say in the year 1979, have been treated a second or even a third time because they may not have judged to have been satisfactorily regenerated after their original treatment?

In other words, the ministry's treatment acreage may be going up but how much of it is repetitious? It's fine for the minister to say the program is treating more today than was treated two or three years ago or five or 10 years ago or whatever the case may be, but how much repetition is there in the acres which are being treated?

We could not find this in any published statistics. All the statistics the ministry puts out respecting regeneration do not include an assessment of the rate of failure. By finding out the rate of failure we can get to know that much more about regeneration.

I think it should be mandatory that the government include in its reports dealing with reforestation a separate category listing the percentage level of failure for every acre planted. This will increase the level of knowledge for the general public but will also aid in the plans for reforestation of cutover lands. I cannot stress too strongly that knowledge of the survival rate is vital to the regeneration program.

In an article by Professor Hearnden called Regeneration in Ontario, Professor Hearnden reported that in the cutover area many trees were planted without any form of site preparation, and I will have more to say about that later. They either died from moisture stress shortly after planting or were later suppressed by competing vegetation.

Hearnden also suggests that a part of the high failure rate was due to the fact that a very large program exhausted Ministry of Natural Resources manpower and supervisory capability, resulting in poor handling and planting practices.

He then goes on to state that nursery and field cold storage units are being installed at all major production and planting centres to reduce handling and storage problems. What I would like to know is, how can this end the overextended aspects of the planting program that resulted in the exhaustion of MNR personnel capability?

This information does not come from the government report but rather from an article in the magazine called Pulp and Paper Canada. Yet Hearnden is a ministry official and the Ministry of Natural Resources simply must be aware that this information exists. If it does, why is it not published by the ministry and why is the ministry consistently only reporting information which it feels is favourable to the government?

This type of information should be available to the public. There are many things which came out of the first conference on regeneration. I was sad to see that some of the constructive ones which did come out have not been adopted, or for that matter even considered by the government.

One of the speakers who took part in this conference was Professor Hearnden from one of the northern universities. He stated there were two major aspects that must be overcome before regeneration in Ontario forests will be successful. If the minister thinks that flogging this bill before us as the end-all and cure-all of the reforestation problems this province has, he certainly has another think coming. Believe me, it's only the beginning.

Professor Hearnden identified the two broad groups of problems as institutional and natural. Those are the two types of problems which he identified and said must be overcome if the regeneration programs in Ontario are to be successful.

Under the natural group, he believes there is a great difference between soils and site conditions which produce different forest growth rates, yields, rotation ages and species suitability. The result is that there is a great need to develop a number of different silvicultural activities that can be applied on a relatively small scale. Until these diversified conditions are recognized, any reforestation program based on simple large area clear-cut and plant routines will continue to have large failure rates.

[9:15]

A second major natural obstacle to silviculture following logging, according to Hearnden, is the "incredible volume of residual wood in cutover areas."

The residual wood includes the stands of species not wanted or tree lengths or portions left in the extraction process.

A study conducted by someone involved in it has found that full utilization of stands in typical operating areas would increase the yield by 23 to 72 per cent.

The second group of problems is probably the most crucial for the regeneration problem and this falls under the category of the institutional problems. The institutional deterrents are the provincial government and the forest industry itself.

As far as the provincial government is concerned, I think it's quite clear that over the years the government has lacked a comprehensive forest policy, together with no statutory commitments to the principle of the sustained yield.

The bill, and the amendment to the bill which is being presented by the government tonight, will go some way in solving the statutory commitment but it by no means is even starting to bring us to where we really should be had we followed good reforestation programs over the years.

One of the other problems is that crown management units overlap regions and districts. Additional company management units and Forest Resources Inventory based map units are all directed towards the protection, the sale and the disposal of land, timber and natural resources rather than towards sustained-yield management.

Another problem is that almost all administrative regions are totally unrelated to any natural or geographic aspect of the land upon which the regions have been superimposed.

The government has also allowed a system of tenure which has enabled a few large companies to control major portions of crown land, which has created for all intents and purposes a monopoly situation. The effect of this has been to create a major psychological deterrent, because the sheer signs of licences held provided the feeling that an unlimited amount of timber exists.

Also, the unit forester-manager should be a key person in forest regeneration. However, it's been found that few of the foresters today reveal any continuity of management experience.

There is also a total lack of accountability in the forest-management program. It's impossible to identify the person responsible either for designing or implementing programs. In fact, as Professor Hearnden mentioned, the faceless committees appear to be the protective means of ensuring that no one can be expected to perform effectively.

The second group generating institutional problems is the forest industry itself. There are three main points I would like to bring out on this.

First is the lack of commitment. Industries hold a short-term perspective. That short-term view translates into a cut-out and get-out mentality; go in, get the timber cut and get it out. Again, this approach has been created by the views of the industry in this regard.

There is another interesting report by Professor Ken Armson called Forest Management in Ontario. He devotes a fair amount of space to the discussion of the need for a single system of documentation for regeneration and its assessment.

He reports this is absolutely necessary for management decision-making. A regeneration assessment is a form of inventory so that we know what we have. In itself it is not a productive exercise, but the information it yields should be in so far as it improves management decision-making. In the same report Armson recommended that an assessment of planting stock be made within one or two years of planting.

I realize the bill does have something to do with that. Armson suggests also that standards be developed to determine the survival rate of the seedlings. Then he sets out certain percentages which should be considered with respect to the type of survival one would expect.

There is another very important question which is raised in this report. It is the question of pre-cut and post-cut surveys. Should these not be undertaken for all cuts? Before you go in with a cut and level, is it not wise, if we are going to make sound decisions with respect to regenerations and the treatments of those areas which are cut, that we have a pre-cut survey?

Our decisions as to the type of cutting and subsequent regeneration treatments have been made without appropriate prior knowledge. The cost of such pre-cut or post-cut surveys would more often be offset by the far more costly failures which can occur in regeneration because of the improper judgements which are based upon sparse or faulty knowledge.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I wonder if the member is going to proceed much longer? As you know we are dealing with an amendment here. This sounds more like a speech that might be given on second reading of the bill. I know the bill has been altered considerably and it may be a good speech, but I am trying to relate it particularly to the amendment we have before us.

Mr. Bolan: I am relating to the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking of regeneration, I am speaking of silviculture, I am speaking precisely of amendments which the government is bringing in now, amendments which should have been brought under a bill about 30 years ago. I feel very strongly that the remarks I am making now are all directed at the amendment. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment had not been brought in by the member for Sudbury East, followed by the amendments which the minister has now brought forward in substitution for that, I wouldn't even be talking about this. The whole question would have been handled by two-for-one. However the door has been opened again, and as far as I am concerned we can take another kick at the cat. That is precisely what I intend doing, subject of course to the ruling of the chair.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am not going to argue too much with the member—the member is not going to sit down now, is he? I didn't mean him to be that brief, but I would appreciate it if he might just limit his remarks to the section which he says he is covering.

Mr. Bolan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing my appeal. If we are going to get into this question of sustained yield and the question of regeneration and reforestation, I think it is only fair to examine other jurisdictions. What we might try to do, even as we are debating this amendment right now, is to consider some of the good features which other jurisdictions have. I get the impression it is something which this ministry hasn't really got into to any great extent. It could very well be that Ontario should incorporate into its forestry policy some of the best ideas from other provinces.

For example, in British Columbia 95 per cent of the productive forest land is held by the crown. It is managed for sustained yield. Most of the areas are managed either as tree farm licences or as public sustained yield units.

The tree-farm licences are areas in which the annual cut has been reserved exclusively for the holder, usually for renewable periods of 21 years. In exchange, the licensee must operate in accordance with a working plan to treat forest lands that must be approved by the forest service.

These forestry treatments can be recovered as an offset against stumpage, providing stumpage rates don't go below their predetermined minimum. Then there is the public sustained-yield unit, which is another method of management.

Alberta has a very comprehensive forest regeneration program managed in accordance with the principle of sustained yield. All harvesting in Alberta requires forest-service approval, and the companies must fulfil certain guidelines.

For example, it requires that no more than one-half of the forested area in a watershed can be cut at a time. The area reserved from the first cut cannot be harvested until regeneration of the first cut has grown to at least 1.8 meters. All forest management agreement holders are required to reforest their cutover lands, and quota holders may elect to pay a fee and have the forest service do the regenerating.

All site preparation must occur within one year of logging. By preparing the seed bed the chances of a fire hazard on harvested areas are reduced. All regenerated land must be surveyed for success every seventh year after logging. Private companies may receive preplanting stock if they first supply the necessary seed. These are some of the methods used in that province.

Saskatchewan also has a very aggressive reforestation program, as has Quebec. I think one of the most interesting programs is that of Sweden, where forest owners are required to ensure that forests are regenerated after clear cutting by harvesting in a manner which will encourage some natural regeneration and by artificial seeding or planting.

About 60 per cent of the land is artificially regenerated, mainly by planting. Seeding is used only to a limited degree. It is anticipated that in Sweden 75 per cent of the cutover land will be planted by 1990 rather than the current 60 per cent.

One aspect of forest treatment that occurs in Sweden, which either does not occur in Ontario or certainly is not emphasized, is drainage ditching. Between 1971 and 1974 an average of 4,000 kilometres of forest-drainage ditches were dug each year. In addition, $1.5 million is spent each year on the maintenance of existing ditches. I think this might be an interesting point, because the forests in Sweden are mainly coniferous—37 per cent scotch pine and 46 per cent Norway spruce, with some white birch.

In Ontario the black spruce requires damp soil to grow in. When large areas of trees are harvested the watertable is drastically upset because the trees are no longer there to draw the water up from the soil. When the trees are harvested by machine—another area which is causing very grave concern in the reforestation programs—those machines leave large ruts which fill with water, which means spruce are unable to regenerate. Perhaps drainage ditches in areas with large concentrations of black spruce would go a long way in alleviating the problem.

Another very interesting thing in Sweden is that commercial thinnings are a major portion of the forestry industry activity, especially as a source of pulpwood. Between 1956 and 1961 alone, 58 per cent of the harvested material came from thinnings and only 42 per cent from the final crop itself. That is a healthy percentage. Perhaps Ontario's pulp manufacturers should take note of this.

I want to deal with one more country by way of comparison, and that is Finland. In Finland there is a private forest act which regulates forest practices on private land. Incidentally, private land in Finland amounts to about 65 per cent of the productive area.

In practice it means that a regeneration plan must be prepared and approved before harvesting commences. Before they even start to cut there has to be a plan in place for all to see. Usually the plan provides that sufficient funds will be set aside from the sale of the timber to regenerate the site. As a result of this accepted practice, reforestation is a part of the harvesting cost. The farmers, that is the landowners, must deposit money in a regeneration trust fund before undertaking a clear cut; this is only refunded when a new crop has been successfully established.

I point out these programs in other parts of the world, and also in other parts of this country, because we are obviously not getting anywhere, in spite of the many efforts we have made at reforestation.

One of the big problems is the question of planting, the planting operation itself. The number of trees planted in 1972 was something like 76 million. In 1977 that number was 45 million. I realize there are other regeneration treatments to supplement tree planting, but perhaps the minister could answer why there has been such a drastic cutback.

The Ministry of Natural Resources, as the minister knows, maintains seed collection areas, seed production areas and seed orchards. However, only 10 per cent of the seeds used in Ontario come from these areas. The origin of the other 90 per cent is identified only on the basis of broad, general regions. This can be one reason for the high failure rate of seedlings. Soil types are different all over the province and often will not support seeds gathered from other regions. It is important to plant seeds from the same area, a fact that is recognized by other provinces.

For example, in British Columbia seeds are normally returned to the area in which the seed was collected. In Alberta the use of seeds is restricted to a radius of 80 kilometers and an elevation difference of 150 metres from the original source. In Manitoba there are designated seed zones from which young stock is grown for planting back in its respective zones; and seed is obtained from best natural stands, some of which are already reserved exclusively for this purpose. New Brunswick has encouraged the establishment of cone selection programs, seed regeneration and the reservation of seed production areas.

What I would like to know is what plans this government has when it talks about the money from DREE that will be allocated to nurseries? What plans does it have for that money?

On the minister's own admission, Mr. Chairman, the black spruce tree has not put out good seed crops for 11 years. Generally, black spruce generation from seed is rather difficult, but it's easy through the vegetative propagation. Where logging is done manually, natural regeneration of black spruce is easily established prior to the cutting by deciding to do a commercial clear-cut. Where the trees are harvested mechanically, natural regeneration is difficult because a thick layer of moss forms a seed bed and damages the seed bed for both natural regeneration and artificial seeding and planting. One solution to this is strip clear-cutting, followed by soil scarifying.

As you know, Mr. Minister, jackpine seldom regenerates satisfactorily after cutting. The seed beds usually must be prepared by scarifying. The control-burn is a successful and inexpensive way to promote natural regeneration.

Clear-cutting in blocks or strips can be used in old jackpine stands for regeneration. When you are doing this strip-cutting or clear-cutting, you might want to look again at the way they do it in Sweden where they checkerboard it. This has a secondary effect, which I think your wildlife people will tell you about. It's not only secondary to what we are talking about tonight but also of vital importance. This experiment was carried out in Sweden and the moose herds jumped tremendously as a result of this checkerboard pattern type of cutting.

So it was also a benefit and break for the moose as well as practicing good and sound regeneration programs.

Mr. G. I. Miller: You're giving a lesson to the minister tonight.

Mr. Bolan: Many of these solutions are set out in various reports; they were covered in the second conference on regeneration of 1979 and the timber revenue task force of October 1975. Several suggestions were made by Professor Hearndon at the Black Spruce symposium in September 1975. I think one of the biggest areas where we are failing is in the question of research. I think research in this area is crucial. How can we develop plants that will grow faster in specific regions, and how can we develop machines that are designed solely to accommodate the Canadian northern climate and soils as well as determine and develop the most effective methods of harvesting and regenerating naturally areas best suited to what trees if we don't have research. This is an area which should be stressed and it's an area where the ministry should be very much concerned.

Another point I would like to mention again is on reforestation and concerns seed collection and dispersement. This can be tied in with research, but it is important for its own sake. Ontario collects seeds then disperses them. The ministry will proudly state that it has dispersed several hundreds of thousands of bushels of seeds; but it's useless. It's useless because seeds will not just grow anywhere. They require specific soil conditions.

I would urge the ministry to consider some kind of a system which is similar to that of Alberta, where seeds are moved no further than 80 kilometers from where they were originally collected.

There is no question we could go on and on about this. I have 10 more pages which I would proudly read, however I have to respect those others who would like to speak on the matter tonight.

I want to leave you with these final words. What once was to be an heritage of bountiful trees and unlimited resources in the forest industry, is left as a legacy of a few scrubby, burned-out bushes. That, to me, is synonymous with 36 years of the type of rule which this province has received. I think the condition of your government is as bad as the reforestation program of this province. The bill is going to help things somewhat, but believe me it is not a panacea for the lumber industry and for the pulp and paper industry. We would hope to see more measures brought forward to alleviate the problem.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Chairman, I have two specific comments on the actual amendments before us. I might add I have consulted with both Professor Hearnden and Professor Armson about the amendment before us.

One point about which I wanted to get some clarification is that in this specific amendment before us, I noticed clauses (b) and (f) are exempted from the prescription and regulation of the amendment. To some extent, I can understand the necessity of that with (b). I am not sure I understand it in relationship to (f), because (f) relates to the reduction of stumpage fees. I can understand you might want some flexibility in terms of a formula there. I would make a very strong plea in that you can argue back they should be prescribed in regulation because of the rigidity that might give you, but both those, particularly clause (f), should be public knowledge.

Mr. Chairman: Order. There are a number of private conversations which are very distracting. The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it is really important that if there is a reduction in stumpage fees as a result of the conditions outlined in clause (f), that should be public knowledge tabled in the Legislature so we can get an idea of whether the cost benefit is worthwhile.

I have one other point. I want to make it very quickly, simply because it had been my hope, if not the hope of others, that this bill be completed tonight. Why is it necessary, and forgive me if this is one of my hobby horses, to use the word "may" for the last set of clauses, that is clauses (c) to (h)? Why can't it be "shall"?

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could address himself briefly to the question we discussed privately. That is the question of agreements. I would like him to address himself publicly to the question of the kinds of agreements we are now discussing in the bill. It is my understanding the ministry eventually hopes to get the 10 major pulp and paper companies into these kind of evergreen agreements. The concern I'd like the minister to address is why we cannot make them mandatory over a series of years, phasing them in. If that is not possible, what are we going to do in the interim to cover those areas that are not covered by these agreements, and therefore we have no assurance there will be regeneration. In short what are we going to do to catch up with the 20 per cent or more that will never be under the terms of these agreements?

[9:45]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I wonder if there are any other comments on this section.

Mr. Chairman, the member for Nipissing has left, no doubt to—

An hon. member: He is here.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Oh, I'm sorry; I thought you'd gone to restore your tissues.

There are a number of matters he touched upon. In the interests of brevity, I might indicate that some of those matters were touched upon in my opening remarks tonight, having to do with annual reports on the work done and the invoices paid, which will be tabled. He spoke of some of the problems of regions and so on. Those were addressed in the first forest regeneration conference, and pretty well answered in the second last year at Kapuskasing.

As far as staff and the number of people doing reforestation is concerned, what we will have in these agreements is the staff of the companies doing a great deal of the work, aided and abetted by our own relatively modest staff, which will be involved more in supervision.

As far as the methods and some of the problems to which the honourable member referred, about using mechanical equipment and so on, those are addressed in either the operating manual or the ground rules to which I referred in one of the previous meetings of this committee on these amendments. This includes the fact one of the bases of these agreements is that the best regeneration work is done by the harvesters so that he combines the two and does not create unnecessary work for himself.

I should remind the member the forest management agreements are the result of Dr. Armson's work. The Armson report has been referred to. He is sitting here in front of me, as he is now on our staff. His recommendations were modelled to a great extent on the agreements in Alberta and BC, along with experience, visits and reports on the Scandinavian countries, where there are some similarities and some great differences.

I don't need to go into seed collection, which is highly regulated, and some of those other matters. The main thing the forest management agreements will provide is a commitment that will provide a sustained yield as we had mentioned. Going back to those regeneration symposia which were held in Thunder Bay and Kapuskasing in the last two years, they were specifically designed to outline our problems and also get input from the industry on theirs.

There is provision in the agreements to deal with programs like DREE. Of that $71 million, of which roughly $60 million-plus is for roads, $5 million of the remainder is for nursery expansion and improvements to increase efficiency.

The member for Port Arthur wanted to know the reason for the exemptions (d) and (f) subclauses. I won't try and paraphrase this, but it has to do with certain provisions. I'll read it so there is no misunderstanding.

"In the absence of any exceptions, the regulations under the act will apply to a forest management agreement. One consequence of such an application is that the price for crown timber, determined under the regulations must be paid by the company which has entered into a forest management agreement. This consequence is not wanted where killed or damaged crown timber is to be salvaged, and the price for such timber is less than the price determined under the regulations."

I think I mentioned this, in a previous meeting of this committee, when somebody asked me about the prices paid for salvage. I think I mentioned it was everything from two or three cents, or 10 cents on one occasion, up to something like 35 cents or 40 cents.

"(b) Where a company which has entered into a forest management agreement harvests a volume of crown timber that is equal to a volume of crown timber that it produced at its expense, and the price for such timber is less than the price determined under the regulation—that is, 10 per cent of the regulation price—this is the improved production per acre.

"Consequently, the general principle of the regulations under the act will apply to a forest management agreement and must be qualified by excepting the provisions of the forest management agreement that are made under clauses (d) and (f) of section 5a where-by a price for crown timber that is less than the price determined under the regulations is agreed upon. In the absence of the exceptions, a conflict would result, namely the regulation would oblige the company to pay the price for crown timber determined under the regulations, and the agreement would oblige the company to pay a price for the same timber that is lower than the price determined under the regulation."

The exemptions are aimed at avoiding this conflict. I see the honourable member understands it clearly. If he reads Hansard again and then reads the regulations—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That was my experience and I think I understand it now.

Mr. Foulds: The minister does not persuade me as easily. As I read the exception underneath, the provisions made, under the regulations mentioned—the very last words—"apply only to these agreements", I don't see why the regulations cannot include clauses (d) and (f), from the minister's explanation. I might be able to accept clause (d); clause (f) does not address the question I asked. If they cannot be in regulation we're not talking about the general crown management unit, we're talking about these specific agreements.

I am particularly anxious that we have the knowledge of the reduction of stumpage fees as a result of whatever deal is made between the ministry and the company as a result of these agreements. I think it should be mandatory that the reduction the minister agrees to, as a result of the silvicultural treatments supplied at the expense of the company, is made public so we can evaluate whether the cost-benefit has been to the benefit of the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Auld: To try and sum it up briefly, we're talking about two things in the agreement. We're talking about the charge that will be made for the timber which is produced per acre in excess of the previous yield, the incentive to the company.

The second part is the price that will be paid for salvage. Depending on its location and its condition, it could be any one of a number of prices. I think the member accepts the necessity for that. I can assure him that information will be part of the reports which will be made having to do with the annual work done and returns received. I will undertake to provide him and the House with a report of how this will be done and how it will be done by regulation, so there is no misunderstanding. The information will be made available to the House.

Mr. Foulds: If I could make this, as someone in recent history used to say, perfectly clear—if it is perfectly clear the reduction in the stumpage charges under clause (f) will become public knowledge as a part of the reporting mechanism, then I will be satisfied and let the point go.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is right in the agreement. I can't put my finger on it. Do you know which section it is? It may vary from company to company or from area to area. We'll find that in a minute.

Mr. Wildman: Like my colleague, I had hoped this bill would be passed or be close to being passed this evening, but it appears since the debate has been somewhat protracted, it will not be.

There are some specific things I wish to raise with the minister. In relation to his amendment, I must admit I came prepared this evening to speak to and to support the "Davis-Martel" amendment. I don't think I'd be betraying any caucus secrets when I say I was a little bit less than enthusiastic about withdrawing that amendment, despite the government's abhorrence of its own leader's proposal.

Mr. Chairman: It's withdrawn.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, it is withdrawn. I wish to speak to the amendment put in its place by the minister.

When I was speaking on second reading I said I was rather sceptical about the effectiveness of this bill. The amendment proposed by the minister makes it clearer and gives us a greater access to information about what is going to be required of the companies, but it does not deal with my scepticism.

The member for Port Arthur said that after another four years he might be as cynical as his colleague from Rainy River. Frankly, I haven't been here as long as the other two and perhaps I'm more cynical than the two of them put together about this whole process. When one considers that in Finland the government charges the companies $35 a cord for pulpwood stumpage and the onus is on the operator on top of that to ensure adequate regeneration at his own expense, one wonders whether or not this approach being used in Ontario is really an effective one or one that really deals with the requirements for sustained yield.

In this province companies put up a real clamour when stumpage is increased from $2 to about $5.30, even though that includes ground rent and fire protection fees. If that's the case, I wonder how much effort and financial resources they're going to put into producing sustained yield.

That really leads me to the concerns raised by my colleague from Rainy River about what happens if and when it is found the companies, after five years or 10 years, or whatever, with the inspections and the reporting, have not done what they had agreed to do under the forest management agreement. I agree with him, frankly, that we will all be put under tremendous pressure because of the effects on jobs in one-industry towns if the allowable cut is reduced. When you reduce an allowable cut, you reduce jobs.

The amendment as proposed doesn't deal as adequately as I would like to see with those concerns. Even in other provinces of this country, such as British Columbia or Alberta where, I think, the legislation has more clout, it has been questioned.

For instance, Toovey suggested in BC that public opinion, rather than industrial performance in terms of regeneration, will have a greater effect on the security of tenure for the cuts in the province. In other words, if it is popular to reduce a company's allowable cut if the company doesn't fulfil its obligations there, then that will happen. If it is unpopular, if there is a clamour raised about the effects on jobs, then that probably will not happen.

I wonder what assurance the minister can give us. I don't think his reply to the member for Rainy River really dealt with that adequately.

In Alberta, where the forest service handles the planning and approving and inspection and the industry does the job on the basis of sustained yield, they have a requirement, I believe, that the industry have these measures in place and be well on the way to regeneration within two years after harvest, rather than the five years suggested here. I wonder whether the minister can explain why he prefers the five-year period to the two-year period.

As I said, I am concerned about these penalties under the proposed bill for undercutting or, for that matter, overcutting and unsuccessful regeneration. What happens if bad weather has made it impossible to regenerate? How is that going to be determined? I am still a little sceptical.

I am particularly concerned about the black spruce because, coming from the north, the black spruce really is the most important species we have. It is 40 per cent of the total productive forest in the province. In terms of volume cut and value to the economy, it is the most important. It is being consistently depleted and we face a crucial need for regeneration.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I have been informed by foresters who are in the know that if even less than 10 per cent of the current peat land cutover had been planted in 1977-78, it would have taken all of the provincial nursery production in black spruce in that year. I would like the minister to comment on that. Is that correct? Would that be a correct projection? If not, can he tell us where we stand right now in terms of nursery production and our ability to produce the requirements?

It required seedlings and seed. Is it correct to say that even if we were to use all of what we are now producing in nursery stock for black spruce we wouldn't be able to regenerate or plant more than 10 per cent, or not even that much, of the cutover peat land? If that is the case, I wonder how he thinks his amendment and the agreements he is proposing are going to change that situation.

Obviously, we have to develop successful techniques for natural regeneration and for direct seeding. I would like to know when, in these agreements he is proposing in the report, it is going to be done. How much of the further research required is going to be the responsibility of the company and is that going to be incorporated in the agreements?

Mr. Chairman: Is the member for Algoma finished?

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, I don't have much more to say, considering the length at which other members, particularly one member, went on. I don't think I am wasting the time of the House.

I am concerned also about what emphasis is going to be put on advanced growth as a potential component of regeneration in the various forest-management agreements, because conventional clearcutting really tends to destroy seed trees and much of the advanced growth. So we end up in a situation of having to collect seeds for seed production and for the production of planting stocks.

I think we have to preserve advanced growth and retain adequate seed sources. In order to do that we are going to have to have better methods of creating acceptable seed beds and better methods of harvesting. Because if we are not going to harvest adequately, or if we are going to destroy the advanced growth, then we are going to end up having to have more and more artificial reseeded.

When you talk about mechanized harvesting, I would like to know what provisions are going to be made in the agreements for ensuring that we preserve advanced growth.

Conventional harvesting methods also eliminate seed sources and produce cutovers that are susceptible to extremes of heat and drought and leave potentially good seed beds covered with logging debris, which in many cases precludes adequate regeneration.

I would like to know if the black spruce stands we have will be assessed for advanced growth prior to harvesting, in order to plan and implement effective harvesting and regeneration methods. Also, will the logging slash be removed? Will it be part of the agreement to require that the logging slash be removed from cutovers, preferably during harvesting, to expose potential seed beds and facilitate site preparation?

Obviously, in order to preserve advanced growth and to deal with the question of slash, I think we are going to have to emphasize winter operations because that would seem to be the best way of dealing with that in terms of preserving it by working in deep snow cover.

I would like to know what attempts will be made, or what emphasis will be put, on the use of bulldozers equipped with shear blades to slice off the living moss layer to create receptive competition-free seed beds for black spruce when the ground is frozen.

Those are the specific questions I have. I say again, Mr. Chairman, I remain sceptical, even with the amendment, which is a great improvement on the previous bill. I think all of us in this House and in the province owe the member for Sudbury East a genuine vote of thanks for bringing the Premier's ludicrous and contradictory proposal to the floor of the House in order to ensure the minister would bring forth an amendment which would specifically state the kinds of approaches that are going to be used by the ministry.

In bringing forward that amendment, I would like the minister to be able to explain to us what specifically is going to be required under the forest-management agreement in terms of site preparation, adequate harvesting and research for silvicultural advancement.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, am I now winding up on this section, because I find a number of questions have been asked several times? I am not really anxious to take up the time of the House to answer them several times.

Mr. Chairman: This is committee; we understand, go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the member for Algoma, first of all I have to tell him he was not correct in citing Alberta as having a two-year period of assessment, compared to five years. As I understand, in Alberta, the seeding or planting has to be done within two years of cutting, but it is not assessed for seven years. In Ontario, we will, as I mentioned earlier, be dealing with annual reports and assessments every five years.

The honourable member brought up a number of very good points about harvesting. One of the reasons we are in the forest management field is because it is accepted by foresters everywhere that the best way to operate a forest is to integrate the harvesting and the regeneration. A great deal of time and money and effort is saved and a better result is achieved. As I have mentioned several times, there will be as part of the agreements in effect, a method practice manual, as well as the ground rules. A number of the practices which have been mentioned by the members for Algoma and Nipissing and others in this House will be covered in those documents which are prepared by the staff. They will, in effect be, as much as is humanly possible an assurance of good, consistent practice around the province.

There is one other thing; about the backlog. The agreements are based on two things. One is the regeneration of the cut from now on, and the second is about 10 per cent a year of catch up on what is called not satisfactorily regenerated areas, of which there are a number in the province. To achieve this I think it's fair to say we will need a variety of things; an increase in nurseries, seed collection and so on, which have been started and will continue as the agreements are entered into and as the program expands from the figure we have this year of $4.3 million. Unfortunately, I don't think we will expend that completely because we will not have the act in place as soon as we had anticipated when the budget was put together about a year ago. This will go, in today's dollar, to something in the order of $20 million or perhaps $25 million a year as we phase it in. It's a major program.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned earlier I have a further amendment to section 5.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Auld moves that section 5a of the act as set out in section 5 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(4) If the assembly is then in session, the minister shall:

"(a) within five days after entering into an agreement under subsection 1, or an amending agreement, lay before the assembly a copy of the agreement or amending agreement as the case may be;

"(b) after the end of each year of an agreement entered into under subsection 1, lay before the assembly a report in respect of the areas harvested, regenerated and tended under such agreement in the year it is ended; and

"(c) after the end of each term of five years of an agreement entered into under subsection 1, lay before the assembly a report in respect of the relationship between the harvest and growth including regeneration of timber during the said term on the areas subject to the agreement, or if the assembly is not then in session, at the beginning of the next ensuing session."

Any comments? The member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, we certainly will support this amendment. From listening to the minister tonight and in the past weeks when we have been dealing with it, I am of two minds. One is that the minister is well intentioned and indeed perhaps regrets the sins of the past Conservative administrations in this regard. Or, second—and sometimes I feel this most strongly—he really doesn't know what he's doing and is bringing in some necessary legislation, unbeknownst to himself and his colleagues as to what he's really doing.

We are happy to see this. We are happy to see that the information will be laid before the assembly. We think that information is of vital interest and concern, not only to the members but to the public at large. We welcome this amendment and hope for a speedy passage.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment considerably strengthens the bill and I am very pleased by that.

There are three points I feel I must make. One is I really would feel comfortable if the report mentioned in clause (b) and the five-year report mentioned in clause (c) at some process was clearly signed by a certified professional forester.

I understand and we discussed in private the difficulty of having the report that is presented in the Legislature signed by a certified professional forester because the minister has to sign any reports presented to the Legislature. But if in the course of the accumulation and the finalization of the data that is presented it was clearly shown even as an addendum to the report, that a professional forester had signed a statement which said, "I have gone over the information in this report and to the best of my knowledge"—or some wording like that—"the facts as stated in the report are accurate," and so on, I think that that's not asking too much. I would like that incorporated as part of the report.

When we had our discussion it was mentioned that the management plans presented by the companies for the ministry were signed by a professional forester, but when I was rereading the draft agreement over the weekend I did not find at any point a clear statement of the report of the success and failure of the areas harvested, regenerated and tended is actually to be signed by a professional forester. It was my understanding from a private conversation, which I would like to get on the public record, that there is going to be a professional forester designated for each of the agreements that is entered into, partly to solve this problem where the agreement lands may encompass more than one district and partly to overcome the problem where the district manager, good fellow though he may be, may not be a professional forester. He may have come up through the ranks of another branch of the ministry.

So I think it is important for two reasons. One, that we are assured in the Legislature that a professional forester is putting his reputation on the line, as a professional forester, in certifying the silvicultural accuracy of the information that we have presented to us.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is included in the manual. The yearly accounts will show the work done and the payment therefor, which I mentioned and which is one of the two things that will be tabled as a result of that combined amendment, the Auld-Foulds amendment. The certificate having to do with the forestry treatment will be made by a registered professional forester, although the report submitted to the House, of course, will be also signed by the minister.

Going back, if I may, Mr. Chairman, to the question the member for Port Arthur raised a few minutes ago and which I said was in the agreement, if he looks at page 13, section 23—I won't take the time to read it but it is there, "as the treatments and increases are certified in detail" and so on. I think that is the reference I was trying to find a few minutes ago.

Mr. Foulds: One of the things that bothers me frankly—and you will forgive me for being just a little cautious on this—are the words "signed by a professional forester on behalf of the company." The reason that I want the accumulation of data signed by a professional forester is that it has clearly been shown to the public, if you like, there has been an auditing of it independently of at least by a professional forester within the ministry. Maybe we then have two guys on the line with their professional reputations.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That, of course, is done in the same way as a chartered accountant does really.

Mr. Foulds: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I mentioned, our people will be doing their own checking and audit so I would assume that that would take place. If there is any problem about it—and we cannot find any at the moment—I will deal with it. I don't think we are going to be finished tonight. I don't know what the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) is going to deal with in these amendments.

I think I can make that assurance.

Mr. Foulds: I have one further comment if I might and that is on another matter I raised previously. I understand legalistically why in clause (c) we cannot insert the word "before" instead of the word "after," the very first word, but I think what happened is in the minister's statement he said that during—if I could find the actual reference.

Why did I throw away your new statement and keep your old one? On what page do you talk about the two agreements?

Mr. Foulds: No, no. In your statement.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Which statement?

Mr. Foulds: The new one, the one you made tonight.

Hon. Mr. Auld: "The first report will report on the areas harvested"? Page nine.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, "will report on the relationship between the harvest and growth including success and failure of regeneration of timber during each of the five-year term enforced management agreements."

The problem I want to outline is how do we get a handle, or do we get a handle only after the fact, on whether the ministry has made an honest judgement about whether the company has fulfilled its obligation in the first five years? I guess it gets back to the problem raised by the members for Rainy River and Algoma. To use the vernacular, when the ministry has not had the guts in the past to threaten a company with enforcement when they did not meet cutting practices, how do we know they will not extend the agreement another five years?

If the ministry reduces the 20-year agreement to 15, instead of giving the extension of five years because of nonfulfillment in the first five years, and if a company doesn't fulfil in the next five years, how do we know the ministry will make the tough judgement that needs to be made to ensure the company does the reforestation, so the timber mining that has taken place in the past will not take place in the future?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I think we have to remember one of the bases of the forest-management agreement approach is it's of at least equal concern on the part of the company that there is a sustained yield so they can continue to harvest it.

It would seem to me that with the information which will be available to this House in terms of annual reports plus the five-year audit which will, I would assume, be like other audits and be produced towards the end of the fifth year and will be tabled, there will be public interest in the areas in which that company operates and there will be no shortage of both professional and amateur foresters who will comment on the progress. I made no comparison, Mr. Chairman, and I won't, but I don't know of any way we can give a better basis of information on which outside judgements can be made than what is to be tabled.

There are two key points. There is the basic interest of the company in having a continuing supply of material—otherwise a company loses a large investment and that isn't the purpose of their exercise—and secondly there is an incentive not just to regenerate but to regenerate and improve production per acre or square mile, or whatever it may be. I think there is a very big incentive.

Mr. Foulds: First of all, I'd like to make one comment about the diligence and co-operation of the staff of the minister and the minister himself, over the last couple of weeks over the matters arising because of the amendment of my colleague from Sudbury East. I believe they are dedicated to making these agreements work.

I guess that brings me to the three biblical things; faith, hope, and charity. We have to have some faith that what has not happened in the past will happen in the future. I would put that, in my case, at about 40 per cent. You have to have some hope it will occur; that's at 100 per cent. And we have to have 120 per cent charity with regard to what has not happened in the past.

Motion agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Auld the committee of the whole House reported progress.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. G. I. Miller: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out that the apples on the members' desks today are compliments of the Norfolk apple growers. As a matter of fact they were provided by Tom Haskett of Vittoria on behalf of the apple growers in Norfolk county.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FISH STOCKING PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, there has been some concern expressed recently by outdoor writers and sports fishermen groups about our fish stocking program in Lake Ontario and particularly about that part of the program which involves coho salmon. I would like to bring the members up to date on the coho stocking situation. First of all, I would like to talk about the stocking we have been doing in Lake Ontario over the past few years.

In 1976 we planted 194,000 yearling lake trout; 108,000 yearling rainbow trout; and 165,000 yearling coho salmon. In 1977 we planted 287,000 yearling lake trout; 109,000 yearling rainbow trout; and 312,000 yearling coho salmon. In 1978 we planted 200,000 yearling lake trout; 120,000 yearling rainbow trout; 201,000 yearling coho salmon; and 392,000 fingerling chinook salmon. In 1979 we planted 201,000 yearling lake trout; 110,000 yearling rainbow trout; 151,000 yearling coho salmon; and 147,000 fingerling chinook salmon.

This level of effort in Lake Ontario compares very well with what we are also doing in Lake Huron, where we stocked 600,000 yearling splake last year, and in Lake Superior, where we stocked 500,000 lake trout yearlings. We hope to continue this program and to improve it as our capability expands.

In Lake Ontario our program tries to do two things: work towards the re-establishment of strong, naturally-reproducing populations with species such as lake trout and rainbow trout; and to provide some needed immediate fishing opportunities with the put-and-delayed-take stocking, using coho and chinook salmon, as well as the lake trout and rainbow trout. We are hoping to be able to add brown trout to the species and numbers in two or three years.

This year we have encountered a disease problem in the coho stocks which are scheduled for planting next spring. Some of them are infected with a viral disease called IPN, which means infectious pancreatic necrosis. We have had to keep them out of our regular fish-culture facilities in order to protect the healthy stocks of brook trout, lake trout, splake and rainbow in those facilities, so we have kept them in a separate, temporary facility near Uxbridge.

Although we did have considerable mortality, strangely enough, the coho themselves seem to handle the disease fairly well. However, when the virus is transmitted to other species such as brook, lake and rainbow trout, as has happened at a fish-culture station, it becomes much more serious. Naturally, we have been concerned about what might happen in other fish species in the wild if we plant coho that carry IPN. The discussion among our ministry biologists and fish health specialists has been: Should we plant or not plant the coho this year?

The put-and-take fishery we have created in this end of Lake Ontario has been popular and certainly it has partly filled a need. It has also given rise to a nice, modest new industry, the charter boat industry. We intend to continue the put-and-take plantings, at least until natural self-sustaining populations are re-established and that will take many years.

I hope the honourable members can understand my concern that by planting this particular coho—a small part of the put-and-take plantings, by the way—we may do damage to other native species and/or to the other fish we are planting. We just don't yet know all the answers to that question. Would the planting provide the fishing opportunities needed, or would it actually reduce them?

If we were the only agency planting coho salmon in Lake Ontario I would have no problem deciding to destroy the infected stock, to control the disease and protect our native fish and other species involved in our planting programs, but that's not the way it is. Some of the state agencies on the US side are planting coho which carry the same virus and the fish they plant don't know about international boundaries. Even if we decide not to plant we may have the problem in our waters anyway.

Seriously—and I think this is a serious matter—there is an international agreement under the Great Lakes Fisheries Commission which commits all agencies to work towards eradicating fish diseases such as IPN. Some agencies are working harder than others to implement this agreement.

As an item of urgency and serious concern I will be pressing our federal government and the Great Lakes Fishery Commission to convene a meeting of senior fisheries people from all member governments to address this international problem.

A few final points; first the IPN virus is not known to be a problem of human health concern. It apparently only affects fish. Second, I wish to further explore the science, the law, and other agencies' intent before deciding whether or not to plant the coho stock next spring.

Finally, we intend to continue and expand the plantings of fish in this end of Lake Ontario to support the fishery which has been established.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST POLICE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, today I will be introducing a new bill to be called the Metropolitan Police Force Complaints Project Act, 1979. The bill establishes a pilot project for Metropolitan Toronto which is designed to improve the processing of complaints by the public regarding the conduct of police officers. The project will be of three years' duration.

I emphasize that it concerns Metropolitan Toronto only. It will be evaluated to determine if changes should be made and whether similar procedures can be used for other areas of the province which may wish to implement them.

The legislation was prepared only after extensive consultation with the Metro police commission, the Metro police association, the police chief and other interested members of the community. Indeed, after a meeting earlier this year with the Metro mayors, I was impressed with their desire for a review system which contains a greater civilian component and is equally fair to citizens and police alike. We think this bill clearly accomplishes that objective.

The bill provides for the establishment of a new independent procedure to deal with public complaints of police officers' conduct.

A new public complaints commissioner would be appointed by the government and his office would be totally separate and distinct from the Metro Toronto police force. He will have broad general powers and adequate resources to enable him to perform his function in a completely independent manner.

The complaint of the citizen will be dealt with initially by the public complaints investigation bureau of the Metropolitan Toronto police force. Procedures are established for the making of complaints and the reporting, investigation, resolution and disposition of complaints by the Metro force. This process is monitored throughout by the public complaints commissioner.

If a citizen is not happy with the manner in which his complaint has been dealt with, he may request that the public complaints commissioner review the matter. It shall be an offence for any person to obstruct the commissioner or a person appointed by him, to make an investigation or withhold, conceal or destroy any books, papers, documents or other things related to the investigation.

After reviewing the citizen's request, the commissioner may order a hearing which will take place in public before a new independent police complaints board which will be established for this purpose. He can order that a hearing take place before a three-person panel.

The board will be made up of 15 citizens appointed by the cabinet. Five will be legally trained, five will be appointed on the joint recommendation of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Association and the chief of police and five on the recommendation of Metropolitan council.

If the hearing takes place before a single board member, it will be one of the legally trained members who conducts it. If it is a panel, one from each of the three groups will be selected and the legally trained member will be chairman. Both the police officer and the complainant would have a right to counsel as the public hearing is conducted.

Mr. Speaker, the new board will have disciplinary power and may impose a penalty within the range of penalties currently prescribed in the Police Act. The board's decision will be provided to the citizen, the police officer and the public complaints commissioner.

I wish to emphasize again that the bill which is being proposed establishes a pilot project only, and the consultation process will continue. I know this is a matter of some urgency to Metropolitan Toronto officials and it is my hope that the bill will draw the support of the members and receive a speedy passage into law.

I want to repeat at this time that I have nothing but the greatest respect for, and confidence in, the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department, which force is undoubtedly one of the finest in the world. This legislation is being introduced at the request of their own governing body. We believe this new law will help to maintain the high level of confidence the public holds in its police force.

OCCUPIERS' LIABILITY AND TRESPASS REFORMS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will be introducing for first reading today two bills, the Occupiers' Liability Act and the Trespass to Property Act. These bills are designed to reform two different but related areas of law—the law governing an occupier's liability to those who come on to his land and the law protecting an occupier from trespass to his land.

In May of this year I tabled a discussion paper on these topics in the Legislature. Following its tabling, it was distributed throughout the province for public comment. Hundreds of letters have been received and 75 per cent of those responding indicated general support for the proposals contained in the discussion paper. The letters and other submissions have been carefully analysed and the bills I am introducing have been improved as a result of this public participation.

To serve adequately the needs of Ontario residents, the law must take into account the diversity and complexity of this province. The law must meet the needs of residents of wilderness regions, agricultural communities, areas relying on the tourist industry and urban centres. These bills are an attempt to meet the needs of all Ontario residents.

CANTRAKON CONFERENCE CENTRE

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring the House up to date on a subject which prompted much discussion several months ago in this very House: namely, the construction of a multimillion dollar conference centre by a company called Cantrakon.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Harry, I win. I figured I couldn't get through that far.

At my request, Cantrakon has spent literally the past year trying to find a site less contentious than the site they had originally chosen in the town of Caledon, yet possessing all of the same general criteria, such as proximity to the Toronto Airport, an attractive natural environment and so on.

Mr. S. Smith: At your request? I thought we were going to have an election on that.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The Leader of the Opposition has no opportunity of ever suggesting to any of these firms what they should do. He can yak a lot but that's about the end of his ability to do anything around here.

This morning at a meeting with the chairman of the regional municipality of Halton, Mr. Jack Raftis, the mayor of council of the city of Oakville and members of his council, Cantrakon announced that after much study and negotiation, including seriously considering staying out of Ontario altogether—

Mr. Nixon: That was a close one.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Very close, let me tell the former Leader of the Opposition—they have chosen a site in Oakville adjacent to, and part of, the property known as the Glen Abbey Golf Course, owned by Genstar Limited.

Needless to say, I am personally delighted with the decision of the company to remain here in Ontario, as I am sure are all of my colleagues in the House. The facility will cost in the neighbourhood of $15 million to construct and upon completion will employ over 150 staff members on a full-time basis.

Mr. Roy: It's called retreat. It's not walking backwards; it's called retreat.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: If the member for Ottawa East would be quiet for a minute, rather than yacking constantly, he might hear something. When he appears in the Ottawa press one certainly wouldn't think he had ever heard a thing around here.

Like the proposal for Caledon and Cantrakon's current operation in Quebec, the architectural design for this project is such that the complex will blend into its surroundings. It is located about 20 minutes from the airport and so meets that essential requirement.

I am sure the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) will be disappointed that his area will miss the income and job opportunities, but I am equally sure the riding of Oakville, represented by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), will welcome that employment.

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' RIGHTS

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, on November 22, 1979, I introduced a bill entitled An Act to provide for Rights of Handicapped Persons, to protect handicapped persons from discrimination in relation to a broad range of matters, including employment, the provision of services, goods and facilities, accommodation and other matters.

As I said when the bill was introduced, the protection of the handicapped is and was an important priority for this government. In deciding upon separate legislation it was my hope that the rights of the handicapped could be protected without unnecessary delay and, more specifically, without awaiting broad revisions to the Ontario Human Rights Code which are still under review. I must frankly confess my disappointment in the negative reaction by a number of groups representing the handicapped persons and by both opposition parties.

The essence of the objections which I have received since the introduction of the bill are twofold. First, it has been contended that in substantive terms the bill does not go far enough in ensuring that the handicapped are protected from discrimination.

Second, it is argued that the handicapped, rather than being singled out for special attention in a separate piece of legislation, should be afforded protection along with other minority groups under the Human Rights Code.

As to the first ground of complaint, I have met with some handicapped organizations and have received representations as to ways in which they believe the bill might be further strengthened. Most of the suggestions made to me were useful and I have indicated to those groups that I am quite prepared to respond favourably and to introduce appropriate amendments on second reading.

However, it has been made quite clear by those groups that even if I were to respond affirmatively to all of their substantive objections, they would still strenuously oppose the legislation on the second ground: namely, that they are being singled out and somehow stigmatized in a separate piece of legislation.

In my meetings with them I have attempted to reassure them that there is no intent on the part of the government to treat the handicapped in any prejudicial fashion by enacting separate legislation. Indeed, if their rights were to be protected under general revisions to the Human Rights Code, it is almost inevitable that some separate sections of the code would have to be enacted and that alone would set them apart from other groups.

Moreover, a number of jurisdictions in North America have recognized this and prohibited discrimination against the handicapped under separate legislation. I might mention in particular the United States Rehabilitation Act of 1972, a seminal and extremely progressive piece of legislation that was enthusiastically supported by handicapped groups when it came before Congress. A similar approach was taken in the province of Quebec, in the neighbouring state of Michigan and in other state legislation, without apparent objection.

All of this was pointed out to the groups with whom I met, but I am sorry to report that so far I have been unable to persuade them of the need to proceed expeditiously to afford protection to the handicapped and that this need should transcend any concern about the separate legislative treatment. Their objections remain, even in the face of my undertaking to treat Bill 188 as an interim legislation to be incorporated in the provisions of the Human Rights Code when the broader revisions to the code are introduced in the Legislature.

I regret as well that both opposition parties saw fit to express their opposition to the bill, by way of press releases, without first availing themselves of the opportunity to discuss the matter with me to see whether any accommodation could be made along the lines outlined above. Had it not been for the precipitate action on behalf of the opposition, to which both parties are now apparently irrevocably committed, I remain convinced that a compromise could have been found which would have ensured protection for the handicapped population of Ontario in this session of the Legislature.

As a result of the objections taken to the bill, it is now apparent to me that our goal cannot be achieved before prorogation. I hope those in opposition appreciate the consequences of the rigid position they have so far taken and the effect it will have on the handicapped population of this province.

However, in view of the stand taken by those in opposition to the bill, which I regard as one of the most progressive pieces of legislation I have had the privilege of presenting to the House, I can see no purpose in proceeding with second reading. While I am prepared to continue to meet with organizations representing handicapped persons and to receive and seriously consider their representations, I am unable to say at this time how the government may decide to deal with the problem at the next session of the Legislature.

It is argued by some that the only acceptable solution is to include the handicapped in the full-scale revisions to the Human Rights Code. While this is certainly a possibility; I do not yet know when those revisions will be forthcoming. There are a number of serious and important questions relating to the code revisions still under review, not the least of which is the difficult question of discrimination relating to age, a matter which requires and is receiving the most careful and detailed analysis, here and elsewhere.

Moreover, it is clear to me that once the code revisions are introduced, there are a number of matters which will provoke considerable debate. It is only realistic to recognize the legislative process will be protracted and that it may be some time before revisions become law. My hope has been that in the meantime there could be all-party agreement on the need to protect the handicapped and agreement as well upon the substantive features of legislation which could immediately be put in place.

Accordingly, between now and the next session of the Legislature, I will be reassessing the matter carefully and will continue to consult with handicapped groups and with my colleagues in both opposition parties in an attempt to pursue the initiative commenced on November 22 in a way which is acceptable to all concerned—recognizing always that my overriding obligation is to the individual citizens of this province who suffer from disabilities and who are being unjustifiably denied the rights to which they are entitled.

EMERGENCY SITUATIONS SEMINAR

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I would very briefly like to inform the honourable members about a seminar taking place on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week at the downtown Holiday Inn.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Since the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) wants to hear this statement will everyone be quiet, please?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: This course has been organized and co-ordinated by my ministry to cover the topic of contingency planning in emergency situations. It is being attended by approximately 100 individuals representing the RCMP, the OPP, various regional municipalities and fire departments, as well as Environment Canada, the ministries of Labour, Solicitor General and Attorney General and the fire marshal's office.

The course is being taught by instructors from the Hamilton Fire Department and I would like to thank Mayor Jack MacDonald for his co-operation in this venture.

Because of the importance of this kind of training for all authorities involved in the handling of emergencies, my ministry is investigating the possibility of setting up similar sessions on a regular basis around the province.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DUMPING OF LIQUID WASTE

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Given that he knows as well as I that millions of gallons of liquid waste from outside Hamilton have been illegally dumped in the Upper Ottawa Street dump over the last several years; given the fact that members of his own ministry knew what was going on and decided, for their own reasons, to take no action on the matter; and given that his method of dealing with the situation by laying charges based on waybills has now been thrown out of court, will the minister now accept my suggestions for dealing with this matter which is to have a judicial inquiry to bring the facts to light, even if they implicate people in his own ministry?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I certainly don't agree with a large portion of that statement. I think it's a little ironic that on this particular week we should make comments about how well the courts are dealing with an environmental issue, particularly in the light of the debate that may happen on Thursday of this week; it rather surprises me that the member would abdicate.

Let me tell the member that we're going to appeal that decision and I think he would have been wise to have perhaps questioned whether that wasn't the logical first step. I would hope he might agree to appeal the decision is the logical first step. I hope, also, he would accept that is the way to deal with the environmental matters of our province. If he does then he might wish to reconsider his bill.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister must surely realize that the weakness of his laws is one of the reasons my bill is required in Ontario.

Supplementary: Given the fact that the minister intends to appeal the charges based on these waybills, which in my view were fundamentally a smokescreen in the form of charges, can he tell the House two things? Can he tell us on what grounds the ministry hopes to be able to appeal this particular decision and whether there are going to be any changes made in the law in order to plug any loopholes that may exist? Can he tell us whether if his appeal fails he will then have a judicial inquiry to bring the facts to light in Hamilton to stop the process of covering them over?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The facts of the matter are simply as follows: We were well into the investigation long before the leader of the Liberal Party raised the issue in a public way. I think that is now on the record.

Mr. S. Smith: That doesn't convince anyone.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The member wants to say the opposite, but he happens to be wrong.

Mr. S. Smith: You lost again.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am afraid he happens to be wrong on two accounts. The second account is there has been absolutely no suggestion by the police force of the regional municipality that the ministry staff were either incompetent or covering up, as he would be so apt to put on the record without foundation in fact. He has put no evidence forward.

Mr. S. Smith: I have proved it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition takes such exception to the facts. I don't think he was in court. Am I in error in that regard? Did he go to the court and put all this evidence on the record? Maybe I have missed something, because he hasn't put it forward to the ministry.

Mr. S. Smith: At a judicial inquiry I will put evidence forward.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The member has so much faith in the court system. Why didn't he avail himself of it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That wasn't a part of the question. It isn't within your province to ask questions; it is yours to answer them.

Mr. Isaacs: Supplementary: Will the minister assure this House that the necessary amendment to the regulations and possibly the legislation will be made to ensure that all parties involved in the transportation of liquid industrial waste and other hazardous compounds are equally responsible for correctly filling out the waybills?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think it is necessary to amend the legislation. Quite frankly, I don't know how I can say this without being in contempt of court and I will try to frame it in the most delicate of ways, but I disagree with the court and its interpretation.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Attorney General is wincing.

Mr. Martel: I will come and visit you in jail.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: With respect, I would sooner take my advice on the courts from the man to my immediate front and left, rather than from across the way. I have far more faith in him. But I think the court in this particular instance didn't see the legislation—I think it is section 101—and interpret it the way we expect and hope it will be interpreted in the higher court. We have full faith in that higher court to make that appropriate interpretation.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: For almost a year now I have been asking the minister to give us the site inspection reports for the Upper Ottawa Street dump. Why does he continue to keep those secret? Why will he not put those on the table so we can see what has been going on at the Upper Ottawa Street dump, instead of trying to cover it over with these charges based on waybills and instead of dealing with what actually happened at the dump? Why can't we see the site inspection reports?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the Leader of the Opposition knows we considered that material that should be put before the court and would at the appropriate time, and we are prepared to do so. If he wanted to join in the action and take a position before the court, he was free to do so. That seems to be his approach to dealing with things in the environment, but he chooses to take that role only when it is convenient, not when it is logical.

Mr. S. Smith: You are still keeping them secret.

TEACHER-BOARD NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Education. Given that the trustees in the borough of North York are now threatening to close the schools if no contract is signed before the end of this calendar year, will the minister now admit that she is going to impose some form of arbitration on the two parties? If she is going to do that, why is she waiting and creating the bitterness, the division and the strife that exists now? Why is she extending that? Why does she not move now rather than wait until what might be seen by her as a more politically appropriate time to move? The minister is going to bring in arbitration at some point, she surely knows that, why doesn't she do it now?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no.

To the second question I would remind the honourable member that I did not create the strike and, indeed, the students of North

York have been providing a model of rationality and sense which I trust the two parties to the negotiations will follow.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Do I understand the minister to say that she has no intention of introducing and will not introduce binding arbitration? If that is what she is saying, do I take it she is going to let the entire matter run its course and then have this Legislature called back some time in January perhaps, to legislate the matter back to regularity? Is that what her intention is and if so, isn't that being awfully cruel to the children who are suffering under the present regime?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that is not what I said. I answered the first question of the honourable Leader of the Opposition factually and honestly.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: I understand the Education Relations Commission has not yet reported that the students' education is in jeopardy. Can the minister tell me how they can reach that conclusion, given that they have not spoken to the trustees and they have not spoken to the director of education?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that is correct. Indeed, the Education Relations Commission has made that report. Yesterday I inquired of the Education Relations Commission concerning the mechanism that was utilized in order to reach that conclusion. I have not received it as yet. When I do I shall report it to the House.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the minister not agree that the nature of a work to rule is that the process of education is continuing as it should, and will she not inform the North York Board of Education that for it to close the schools in January would jeopardize the education of children in North York, whereas those schools have been operating for seven weeks and the students are much better with the schools open than with the schools closed by the board?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I could agree whole-heartedly and totally with the assessment made by the honourable leader of the third party. I am attempting to do some monitoring of the situation on my own and I shall undoubtedly report to the House about that in due course as well.

FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the Treasurer relating to the federal budget which is coming down tonight.

In view of the commitment of the new federal government to increased consultation with the provinces, would the Treasurer tell the House what consultation has taken place with this province with relation to the forthcoming federal budget? Does that consultation differ in any material way from consultation under the former Liberal government and can he say whether we can expect any positive results from any consultation that may have taken place?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker, there was consultation, perhaps in the form that Ontario has practised for a long time. In advance of a budget in Ontario, the province invites people in to offer advice. Ontario does not, in return, offer opinions as to what will be in the budget.

That kind of interchange did take place. I have been asked to offer certain advice, opinions on the way the economy is going. I have been glad to answer the specific questions in confidence, as they are in other cases. Whether they will be listened to, I will know tonight.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I haven't heard the minister say that the consultation differed materially from the former government. Given that the federal excise tax being proposed tonight is expected to take about $1 billion away from Ontario taxpayers, and given the estimates made by the province itself that the proposals on the excise tax on oil and gas will increase consumer prices by 2.2 per cent next year and will cut real growth by a full percentage point in 1980, does the province have any plans to offset the destructive economic impact of that federal budget on the Ontario economy?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the question is still hypothetical.

Mr. Martel: Sounds like energy all over again.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable member have a supplementary?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since the province has termed the excise tax proposals "a retrograde step" and since the province has stated specifically that the excise tax would undermine the extension of Canada's national market and would expose our economy to further import penetrations as well as bearing particularly hard on poor families and on people in rural areas, what good is it to have a Conservative administration in this province and Tories up in Ottawa if they can't agree about anything and if the policies that come out are so destructive for the people of Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will be able to tell whether any of the insinuations made in the conclusions are right. All of the first parts of the honourable member's statements were correct.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: Given the unemployment figures that are out today indicating an increase of some 26,000 or 27,000 in the unemployed in this province, and given this certain whack that the federal Treasurer is going to give to the economy of this province tonight with higher interest rates, higher oil prices and everything else, what plans does the Treasurer of Ontario have to offset that program which is going to be introduced tonight? What is he going to do to stimulate this economy? What is he going to do about the unemployment in this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am not sure where the honourable member gets his figures, but the actual number of unemployed in Ontario during November was 12,000 fewer than a year ago.

The actual rate of unemployment dropped from 6.6 per cent last month to 6.1 per cent. The decline in unemployment of the young people dropped from about 12.3 per cent to 10.8 per cent. Those figures are encouraging and, to some degree, surprising.

INDEPENDENT GASOLINE DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. In view of the announcement by Gulf Canada Limited that it is going to cut back gasoline supplies to independent distributors who buy from Gulf over the course of the winter, is the minister not concerned that this may represent an attempt by Gulf to use oil shortages and gasoline shortages as a means of cutting independent distributors out of the gasoline market?

Is the government investigating this action by Gulf? What action does the government intend to take to protect these independent dealers and the consumers who have benefited from the competition they have brought to the market?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, knowing that the NDP research would dig out this information from the morning paper, I was attempting to get some information in time for the question period today. I have been advised initially and it's my understanding that the company is simply going to hold its independent dealers to the actual amount of their liftings, I think they call them. It is what they have been actually picking up, rather than necessarily cutting them off completely. But I have asked for some more information on that subject.

The honourable member will also know that about a week ago he drew my attention to his concerns in connection with the independents; and I have been following up on that. I have an appointment in my office, I think a week yesterday, with a new organization of independent petroleum marketers of the province that's being established. I will have an opportunity to discuss with them, first hand, the concerns mentioned by the honourable member along with those expressed in the correspondence he sent along to me following that question period.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since Gulf has invoked force majeure in its contracts with the independents, which effectively now gives Gulf the power to cut them off completely from obligations they thought they had assured in writings through contractual arrangements, would the minister not agree that the situation potentially is much more serious than just holding them to their deliveries of last year?

In addition to the meeting he has promised, what action will the government take in order to prevent multinational oil companies from squeezing independent distributors or shutting them out of the market completely using as a pretext the current oil supply situation?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I wonder if I could just repeat, for purposes of the record, the information I have received. I am advised that the action taken by Gulf, the company referred to in the original question and the supplementary, was to control the liftings of the independents to their average over the last 18 months. It was felt by that company such a move was fair in that it reflected a normal or a more normal growth situation.

That's the information I received when I directed the question. If either the honourable member or the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) has other information, obviously I want to have it, because in response to the second part of the supplementary question I agreed with the honourable member when he raised this question a week ago that the activities or the involvement of independents was very important.

During the course of meeting with chief executive officers of oil companies I have specifically raised questions with respect to their relationships with their independents. In no case have I found any company admitting they were doing anything except honouring their contracts with the independents who have been shopping around and who didn't have what would be defined in the markets as firm contracts because at that time the independents did not find it to their advantage to tie themselves down to firm contracts and thus not be able to shop around as far as prices were concerned.

It may be—and I underline the word “may”—that some independents now find themselves in a prejudicial position because they were not involved in firmer type contractual relationships with companies. Hopefully, next Monday when I meet with the organization representing the independents I will have the benefit of more up-to-date information from them on the basis of their own experience.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Since looking into this matter we have learned the force majeure refers to about 2,000 cubic metres per day which Interprovincial Pipe Line Limited has now had to reserve from Gulf. Instead of giving it to Gulf, it is now giving it to three independents, one in Toronto, one in Quebec and one in Montreal, the three divided equally.

Would the minister look into this situation to see whether it may have happened that oil which previously was reserved for Ontario has now, as a consequence of this decision, in some measure been reserved for another province? If so, would he be able to report to this House on the reasoning behind that and what the impact is on this province?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I have no evidence of that being the result but I will be very glad to investigate the matter as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Cassidy: Wouldn't the minister agree Gulf is setting a very dangerous precedent when they say they will hold their independents down to the supplies of the last 18 months and therefore reserve any market growth, albeit, modest, for their own company stations? Wouldn't the minister agree that once Gulf starts to discriminate between independents and its own stations in that way the stage is set for further discrimination to the point where the independents can be driven out of business?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think the final part of that supplementary would be an unfortunate result. As I pointed out, the government was very quick to respond affirmatively to the recommendations in the Isbister report which saw the involvement of the independents as a very healthy part of the activities in the marketplace in so far as this area was concerned. I made it quite clear in talking to the companies that I attach a great deal of importance to that as well.

I will perhaps be in a much better position to have a first-hand account of what is actually going on once I have had a talk with the independents themselves, now I have completed conversations with the oil companies.

OPP SERVICES

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. I keep wanting to say acting Solicitor General, but I guess he's decided it's full time in both.

My question relates to a matter which I am sure has been brought to the minister privately by the member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger). Given that the Solicitor General made the statement last May or June that he intended to increase the complement of OPP officers in this province by 150, and given that in response to some of my colleagues recently he has indicated he did not increase the number of OPP officers, would the minister look at what I consider to be a very serious situation involving the OPP detachment in Rockland? This detachment, as the Solicitor General knows, has a large part of eastern Ontario under its jurisdiction and has not had any increase in complement since 1977, in spite of the fact the number of calls made to the detachment increased in 1978 by 60 per cent and in the first six months of 1979 has increased by 80 per cent.

Would the minister look at that problem and advise us whether he intends to increase the complement of officers in that area, in view of the fact, as well, that there is a very serious traffic problem, not only on highway 417 but still on the old highway 17?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was almost tempted to say I would be delighted to reply to the acting member for Ottawa East, but I thought that would be unkind.

Mr. Roy: I tell you I am not an acting member. Look at the majority I get there.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will certainly be happy to look into that matter because it concerns me. I will review it and discuss it with the Treasurer.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: Would the minister, as well, consider the fact that not only has there been the increase I discussed with him in the original question, but under the jurisdiction of the OPP in that area there is also the township of Cumberland which has had one of the highest urban growths in the area? Would he consider that, as well, when considering the additional officers needed in that area?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am quite happy to do that. My concerns with respect to OPP resources are well known, and I will continue to express them.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: Concerning the hiring of new OPP officers to police certain municipalities, would the minister reconsider the policy of the freeze on OPP officers, in the light of the fact that there are some municipalities, specifically the municipality of Colchester North in my township, that would pay directly for the services of the OPP? Why can't the minister keep his promise of hiring the 150 OPP officers he made grand statements about some time last year?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I never made any such promise. I indicated that these additional officers are needed. The member's own leader belittled the statement. His own leader showed total contempt for the OPP in his response on that occasion.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Withdraw that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. A provocative statement like that is deserving of some kind of reply.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: On a matter of privilege, I would ask the Solicitor General to withdraw the comment, since he knows the comments I made at the time showed contempt for his attempt to grab headlines in asking for officers the cabinet had not even given him and did not give him later. My comments in no way indicated contempt for the OPP. I have a high regard for the OPP, but very little regard for the minister's headline-grabbing tactics.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I stand by what I said.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Thank you. All I can say is if the Leader of the Opposition supports the OPP, he has a very strange way of expressing his support.

REFUGEE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, you will never know how painful it was to have been away. (Laughter)

Mr. Lawlor: I thought of all of you at least once a day.

I have a question for the Premier. While I was away the Clark government reneged, as I understand it, on its promises with respect to the Vietnamese boat people. What is the Premier's policy and the position of his government with respect to doing something to alleviate the deplorable conditions, particularly in those camps in Hong Kong?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the government of this province has encouraged a number of people in the voluntary agencies in those areas of the province where people have expressed a very legitimate and personal concern, and we will continue to do so. The government of Canada, in what is a difficult area, has had a policy whereby support and encouragement has been given, probably on a scale greater than most other jurisdictions, including the United States.

Mr. Bolan: Would the Premier give assurance to the House that further roadblocks will not be placed in the way of individuals within this province who wish to assist families coming from southeast Asia?

Just to give the Premier a brief example, because this is what people are expressing concern about, those individuals are now required to pay their air fare—initially, they didn't think they would have to—and there's a complicated situation concerning who can act as a backup family. These are matters people are genuinely concerned about. Would the Premier assure us these roadblocks can be removed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Obviously I can't give that sort of assurance. We don't control that part of the program in any way.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Premier will at least extend the province's present program, which includes only children 13 years and over? Will that program be extended to bring over refugee children under the age of 13, who have been identified in many camps in various parts of southeast Asia?

Hon. Mr. Davis: On a matter of this kind I can't give, on this particular occasion, any such commitment. This government has demonstrated genuine concern on this matter, as I'm sure all members have. It is primarily a matter for the government of Canada, I'm sure we all appreciate that, but we have been supporting those individuals and groups who are anxious to help in this very difficult situation.

FISH STOCKING PROGRAM

Mr. Bolan: To the Minister of Natural Resources: Could the minister explain to this House why some of his ministry officials are going around Ontario making speeches to gain public support to stop the stocking of salmon in Lake Ontario? I refer specifically to a speech made by John Byrne, head of the hatchery program to the Conservation Council of Ontario. Is he not aware this salmon-stocking program is a program of significant importance, unlike the splake program which has been going on for 20 years in Georgian Bay and has resulted in not one single splake being reproduced successfully anywhere in the Great Lakes? Should he not be intensifying the stocking program instead of having some of his ministry officials attempt to dismember it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think the honourable member was here when I made my statement earlier. As far as I am aware, Mr. Byrne is not going around making speeches such as the honourable member suggests. I believe he did appear before the conservation council, or perhaps the Federation of Ontario Naturalists and several other organizations, to in effect point out the dilemma which we had in the case of the coho salmon with IPN.

I think I made it quite clear a few minutes ago that we're looking at it very carefully and by no means have come to any decision. I think if we had, I would know about it.

Finally, as far as splake are concerned, if the honourable member hasn't been there recently he ought to go to Owen Sound and hear how well—at last, I may say—the splake are biting up there. The fishermen are shoulder-to-shoulder in the snow.

Mr. Bolan: Supplementary: How long has the ministry known of the IPN problem? Is the minister not aware that other jurisdictions with salmon-stocking programs such as New York state and Michigan state, are continuing and expanding their salmon-stocking programs and do not regard IPN as a serious disease? IPN existed in the Great Lakes prior to the current salmon-stocking programs and the US states will continue with them regardless of whether the minister's program is discontinued or not. Is he not aware of this?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I hope I have enough time, Mr. Speaker. I am told that infectious pancreatic necrosis or IPN came from Atlantic salmon. Nobody knows exactly how it got into the Great Lakes. I know the salmon we would like to import for brood stock, the coho salmon from the Pacific coast, cannot be certified as disease-free because they have another disease—K—

An hon. member: KLM?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, not KLM. It's a kidney disease and it's endemic apparently to the coho salmon from the west coast. The two states the honourable member mentions, New York and Michigan, have indicated that they are in sympathy and think that the idea of stocking only disease-free salmon would be a great idea, but they propose to continue stocking the ones they are now stocking which are not disease-free. That's the reason I said that it seems to me if we're going to do something about this, it's got to be a joint operation because the fish do not observe international boundaries and it's very hard to stop them from not observing international boundaries.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Can the minister report to the House whether or not three groups have taken out injunctions against the ministry concerning destroying the stock of salmon they now have that are diseased? Can he give us any indication about whether or not the disease is communicable?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The answer to the first part is that I'm not aware of any injunctions. I don't know who would be served with the writs, but I'm sure I would have heard about them, providing such events had taken place.

I'm sorry, I've forgotten the second part of the question. I've been getting a good deal of advice over here.

Mr. Foulds: Is it communicable?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is communicable between eggs and brood stock in the hatchery. We do not know how communicable it may be among other salmonoids, which include lake trout, speckled trout and brown trout.

Apparently it is a disease primarily found in that species.

Mr. Worton: Serve them in the dining room and let's find out.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It won't hurt you.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: I'm glad to hear the splake are biting. More importantly, are the things reproducing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Particularly at this season of the year I wouldn't want to be considered sacrilegious; on the other hand if they aren't reproducing then there are stars in the north, south, east and west.

ALGOMA CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services resulting from the publication yesterday of the October 31 telegram to him signed by the executive director and the assistant director of the Algoma Children's Aid Society.

Can the minister inform the House how he responded to their contention, based on their professional judgement, that the CAS could not provide minimal level service to high-risk cases and that immediate action was necessary to "avoid potential disaster?" Further, what connection, if any, did his response have to the subsequent resignation of the assistant director?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'll answer the second part first. To the best of my ability I know of no connection whatsoever between my response and the resignation of one of the employees of the children's aid society there.

In terms of the response, we have been in communication with the director and the chairman of the board of the society. In fact I trust my staff have been in further communication with them today, assuring them, as we have up to this point, that we will continue to make efforts in the immediate future to improve the support we are offering to that society so it can continue to maintain at least minimum levels of service and ensure minimal risk to the children who ought to be being served by the whole society.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the executive director, Mr. Hayes, has stated they are at least two people short of the required staff to provide minimum care and that he does not know what, if anything, the ministry's figure of 11.5 people required means?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I haven't had that specific discussion with Mr. Hayes, although there have been ongoing communications. As I said, I trust there has already been communication with him today to assure him the ministry will provide whatever degree of support is necessary to ensure the safety of the children involved.

FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Premier. In view of the fact there are only a few hours left before we hear the federal Conservative budget, would the Premier take this last opportunity to inform Joe Clark that this government is strongly opposed to the increase in the excise tax, in view of the fact that the federal Treasurer said some time ago—while the Ontario Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) was sitting right next to him—he had heard no complaints about the proposed increase of 25 cent per gallon in the tax on gasoline?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I didn't hear the latter part of the question. The honourable member might like to repeat it—television isn't here any more—I would like to hear the latter part.

Mr. Mancini: My question was will the Premier take this last opportunity available to him and inform Joe Clark that this government, in no uncertain terms, opposes the proposed increase of 25 cents per gallon in the excise tax on gasoline which we're going to hear tonight from the federal Conservative government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling the budget is printed and very little will change between now and eight o'clock this evening.

I can only say to the honourable member that we have used every opportunity to register our objections to an increase in the excise tax, which was initiated by the member's former friends. We made our point when they introduced the concept of this excise tax several years ago and our point of view has not changed.

Mr. Mancini: Could the Premier table in the House—if he would only listen to the question I wouldn't have to repeat it—correspondence he has had with Charles Joseph Clark about the excise tax and his opposition to it? Will the Premier stop trying to protect his friends in Ottawa and start protecting the consumers of this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the honourable member has already read the submissions we have made, including the presentation to the first ministers' meeting of some three weeks ago. If he will look about halfway through that presentation he will find it. If he would like to reread it before eight o'clock this evening, he should feel free to do so. My advice to him, though, is to fill up the tank of his car before this evening in any event.

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Is the minister aware of the recent activities of Ultramar Canada Limited, namely its claim that it does not now have the expected six-month supplies of crude for its Quebec City refinery and that it can no longer provide the expected amounts of petroleum products to suppliers?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Would the honourable member repeat the question. I didn't hear the first part of the question.

Ms. Gigantes: I'm asking about the operations of a company called Ultramar Canada Limited and the statement by that corporation that it does not have the expected supplies of crude for its Quebec City refinery.

I'm asking the minister about this to know if he knows what implications this will have for Ontario suppliers of gasoline and heating oil.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I must admit I don't have that information. Within the last few days I have had an opportunity to meet with the president of that company and he didn't share with me any serious situation such as the one to which the honourable member makes reference.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Could I ask the minister then, whether he will ask specifically, when he is having meetings with the independent suppliers, about the results of Ultramar's activities; and perhaps take the opportunity to speak once again to the president of Ultramar?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'm sure it hasn't gone unnoticed that the member has now, in her supplementary, changed the question to talk in terms of the independents who may have been looking to Ultramar. That's not the way the original question was framed. She talked with respect to supplies available to the company for its own operations. We have to have some consistency with respect to the question and supplementary question here.

TOLEDO SCALE DIVISION

Mr. Ruston: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Is he aware of the recent announcement by Toledo Scale Division that they're ceasing the manufacturing of scales in the city of Windsor and are going to import highly technical electronic American scales? Is he doing anything to encourage Ontario and Canadian industry to use the electronic capacity of Ontario and Canada instead of importing from the United States?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't happen to have the information on Toledo Scale with me. I have a fairly recent update on layoffs and terminations. I will be pleased to look into the situation with regard to Toledo Scale and report to the member.

Mr. Ruston: I have a supplementary of the Minister of Labour. Would he satisfy himself that those being laid off at Toledo Scale will have their pensions protected and have been given adequate notice of the layoffs?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'll take the question as notice and report to the member.

CHRONIC-CARE CHARGES

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Health; it concerns the chronic co-payments charge. When the minister introduced that plan earlier this year he indicated his desire to do so in all fairness to all concerned. I am wondering, in light of a number of instances which have come to my attention, whether discrimination exists in relation to a portion of his announcement; I quote:

"For exemption purposes, spouses receiving old age security, spouse's allowance or benefits under the Ontario Guaranteed Income Act are not considered as dependants." That disqualifies the two-member family in the senior citizen category. Will the minister review that and equalize the treatment so any discrimination against senior citizens caught in this particular situation ends?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have ensured that the system right across the whole spectrum of long-term care—homes for the aged, nursing homes, where the charges have applied now for seven or eight years, and chronic care—is applied the same, although in the chronic-care units, because in the main we are dealing with shorter stays in many cases, there are provisions for various other exemptions to be applied for through the administrator of the home regardless of the source of income.

At this point we only have about six months experience. I think it would be premature to say we're going to change it, but we are keeping it under very close scrutiny to try to make sure that it is applied as fairly as possible. However, to suggest that we would move away from the principle of eliminating the double subsidy, I certainly wouldn't want to leave that impression at all.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: The minister must clearly understand that there is discrimination at present among those two-member families in so far as the $15,000 of aggregate annual income is concerned. Surely in the interest of fairness those people who have a dependant qualifying under the senior citizen categories enumerated deserve the same treatment as those who do not qualify in that area; surely he must be aware that this is having a very serious and negative effect upon a considerable number of seniors in this province. Can he further indicate whether or not it is his ministry's intention to tell the people involved in this category they should sell their homes to meet the requirements?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I remind the member of the rationale, which was explained and discussed at length in the select committee and elsewhere before the introduction of this measure; and that was the concern that incomes are provided to maintain certain individuals in the community, but these individuals from time to time, in effect become residents of long-term care facilities. The principle, which I believe he supports, is that the state shouldn't be paying twice: first in the form of an income to maintain the individual; and second to pay what can in the chronic-care hospital be anywhere from $70 to $100 per day, and sometimes more, to maintain them.

As the member knows, the provision is that taking the bare minimum income—OAS, GIS and Gains—and deducting the comfort allowance, we also then provide to the spouse still in the community the full senior citizens' tax credits, along with the various other benefits that accrue to senior citizens, which are all designed to help the individuals stay in their homes.

We also look to the families to carry their responsibilities, since they ultimately will be the beneficiaries of the homes to which the member refers, and any estates attaining thereto.

WINDSOR HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Bounsall: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Is the ministry aware that local district Ministry of Transportation and Communications officials have asked the city of Windsor to indicate which phase, 1C or 2C, has a higher priority in this coming year for ministry funds? Would the minister confirm that both phases will be funded in 1980, as planned, so that both of these very important sections can be constructed on schedule?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I will not confirm that, because yesterday I wrote a letter to Mayor Weeks advising him that both contracts would not and could not go ahead next year on the west end of the E. C. Row Expressway.

As I am sure the honourable member knows, there are several major contracts to be carried out on the east end of the expressway. I believe the tenders close tomorrow for one. There are two major contracts to be awarded there very early in 1980, probably in February or March. With those three contracts alone, that will mean there will probably be over $20 million-worth of construction work to put in place in that particular section of the E. C. Row during the 1980-81 fiscal year.

In addition to that, one of the contracts at the west end will be proceeded with during the year. It has been in our plans for a number of years. The second contract will have to wait until 1981.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware how necessary both those west end pieces are? One will service the traffic between the bridge and the new Ford engine and casting plant, which starts to operate in early 1981. The other services the new Maple Leaf Monarch mill, one of the few plants to come into the city not associated with the auto industry. One of those two plants is going to be seriously disadvantaged in truck traffic not being able to get to it if both phases are not completed.

It is very difficult, if not impossible, to choose which of the two industries the ministry is going to discriminate against in terms of not building one section of those two phases.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't think there is anything more I can add. Over $30 million of additional road construction work has been carried out in the Windsor area in this 1979 season, and the jobs I mentioned will continue in 1980. That is in addition to the one contract at the west end that will proceed. It will proceed in rotation, as has been planned, to extend the expressway in a rational manner. There are just not the funds available to do any more.

Many other projects in the province are in the same position. I could give the member a list as long as his arm, or maybe even as long as mine, of other projects that have had to be delayed in the same way.

CHICKEN QUOTAS

Mr. Rid'dell: I have a question of the Premier. Since the chicken producers of Ontario are appealing the provincial quota allocation, which is most inequitable, and is one which was set up in the early 1970s with the former Minister of Agriculture favouring Quebec and its quota allocation as a compromise because of the chicken-and-egg war going on at the time, could the Premier tell me whether the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson), if he has recovered from his illness, is going to go down to Ottawa to support the case that is going to be presented by the chicken producers to try to get that quota at the 314-million pound mark, rather than the 278 million pounds which they have been allocated, and which I say is very inequitable.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, just so the record is abundantly clear for those who read Hansard carefully, the member was referring to the former federal Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Riddell: No. It was the provincial minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on, it was the federal ministry which did it.

Mr. Riddell: It was the provincial minister who did it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Huron-Middlesex may not think I know much, but I know a little bit about this, and it was the federal government who made this determination. Don't try and clothe it any other way, it was the former federal Minister of Agriculture.

With respect to the question asked, I will consult with the Minister of Agriculture and Food and we will have an answer for the member on Thursday.

Mr. Riddell: I have a supplementary, and I would also like to clarify this matter for the Premier. It was the former minister, a good friend of mine, Bill Stewart, who was quite prepared to accept the Ontario allocation at that time because there happened to be a price war going on with Quebec in connection with eggs.

My supplementary is: Since there is a move underfoot to combine Quebec and Ontario into one market area, which Ontario is very much against, does the Premier know whether the Minister of Agriculture and Food is going to object to one market area for Quebec and Ontario and keep Ontario in one market area of its own?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know anything about moves underfoot. I must confess the honourable member is always closer to those things than I am. I can only repeat what I said: I will discuss this with the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I really think he may be here on Thursday. I am told he is recovering and I expect he will be here Thursday. I know the member in particular will be delighted to see him.

BLUE CROSS STRIKE

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour with regard to the Blue Cross strike, now in its eleventh week.

Is the minister aware that last week the company granted all the employees who are crossing the picket line the full wage and benefit increases in the last company offer before the strike began, and posted the jobs of the striking employees in the premises?

Will the minister bring in amendments to strengthen our labour laws to outlaw this kind of unfair strike breaking against employees who are simply trying to assert their democratic rights to organize and bargain collectively?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I would submit to the member there is already a mechanism for parties to make submissions about unfair bargaining or unfair labour practices to the Labour Relations Board. She has seen that demonstrated very effectively last week in the Radio Shack case. It is now possible to determine those issues before an appropriate judicial or quasi-judicial body.

Ms. Bryden: I understand the labour law is not specific in outlawing this particular kind of practice of giving the benefits during the strike. In addition, does the minister know the company at the same time has advertised unlimited clerical opportunities in the paper. Those presumably are the jobs of the striking employees? I don't believe that is outlawed by the law either.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I will be pleased to review the matter the member has presented and report.

GAS AND OIL PRICES

Mr. Bradley: A question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact the present Progressive Conservative government in Ottawa appears to want to give in to the oil companies at every turn, would the Premier assure us he would use his good offices as the Premier of Ontario to help persuade the oil companies not to charge an additional 25 cents, if that is the price, excise tax on those supplies of fuel that are presently in the service stations? Would he also use his good offices to attempt to persuade the oil companies not to use this increase that is coming tonight as an excuse to put on an additional two or three cents a gallon and rip off the consumers of the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really can't believe the member for St. Catharines would advise me to counsel the companies to break the law. If a federal excise tax is imposed, whatever hour it is imposed, people have to pay it. That is a reality, that's something I hope even the honourable member will understand. I know it's hard, but that happens to be the fact. I can't advise anybody not to pay a tax and I would advise the member not to advise anybody not to pay the tax.

With respect to the second part of the question, which has a little more logic than the first part of the question, if there is a price increase in crude oil my guesstimate—and it's only a guesstimate—will be that that price increase will be as of January 1, as per the existing agreement. If that is the case, if it is a dollar, it means the price of gasoline per gallon related to a price increase of crude, will take place on March 1, and that figure will be approximately four cents. That has been the traditional pattern and I would expect that will continue.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Considering the fact that at least one oil company at the present time has announced an increase, supposedly because of increased costs, and other oil companies are now saying they may be doing so in the near future, perhaps before January 1, would the Premier not agree if this is implemented this week or next week it is a case of taking advantage of a situation as an excuse to increase the prices unnecessarily?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am the last one to defend the oil companies, but I hope the honourable member understands—

Mr. Warner: Usually the first one.

Mr. S. Smith: You are prepared to let them have the first two dollars as their share.

Hon. Mr. Davis: My correspondence would indicate they are quite aware—

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What is the honourable member interrupting about?

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was just asking what he was interrupting about, I didn't ask him to say anything.

Is it really true the honourable member has a full length mirror in his office to practise for television at three o'clock? Is that really true? Is it?

I would be upset if January 1 brought more than one dollar and I know nothing about what is going to be in the budget, but I think it will be one dollar for January 1.

What was the question?

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

REPORT

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HYDRO AFFAIRS

Mr. MacDonald from the select committee on Hydro affairs presented an interim report on the safety of Ontario's nuclear reactors and moved its adoption.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before I move adjournment of the debate, may I inform the House that I wish to be able to table, on behalf of the committee, another report on another topic of Hydro affairs on Thursday of this week. I understand from my House leader, that the debate is scheduled tentatively for a week from Thursday night on both of these reports.

On motion by Mr. MacDonald, the debate was adjourned.

MOTIONS

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEES

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the estimates of the resources development policy field be withdrawn from the standing resources development committee and be referred to the standing social development committee.

Motion agreed to.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that on Thursday, December 13, the House will meet at 10 a.m., with a luncheon interval from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. and with routine proceedings to be called at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that private members' balloted items scheduled to have been debated on Thursday, December 6, be debated on Thursday, December 13; and further that the present ballot schedule be continued during the fourth session of this parliament.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the time allocated for private members' public business on Thursday, December 20, be used for the consideration of government business.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE COMPLAINTS PROJECT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 201, An Act for the establishment and conduct of a Project in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto to improve methods of processing Complaints by members of the Public against Police Officers on the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force.

Motion agreed to.

OCCUPIERS' LIABILITY ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 202, An Act respecting Occupiers' Liability.

Motion agreed to.

TRESPASS TO PROPERTY ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 203, An Act to protect against Trespass to Property.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Elgie moved first reading of Bill 204, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, honourable members will recall that the construction industry provisions of the Labour Relations Act were amended in 1977 to introduce province-wide bargaining in the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of that industry. Since then we have had a major round of collective bargaining in 1978 and we are looking forward to a further round in 1980.

The amendments being proposed are the result of recommendations made to me by the construction industry review panel. That group is comprised of senior representatives of labour and management in the construction industry. They have analysed the 1978 bargaining experience and have made their recommendations with a view to facilitating and stabilizing future bargaining in the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of the construction industry.

The bill being tabled contains three basic provisions and these, I believe, reflect a balanced trade-off between labour and management.

First, it provides for the extension of the bargaining rights of the various unions to which the provincial bargaining applies. As a result of this amendment, an employer who is currently bound by a provincial agreement in a portion of the province will be bound by the provincial agreement throughout the province. This will only affect employers and trade unions which are obliged to engage in provincial bargaining, and only in the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of the construction industry.

The remaining two provisions deal with the conduct of provincial bargaining. The first provision prohibits selective strikes or lockouts. In certain situations selective strikes were used during the 1978 round of bargaining and proved to be disruptive to good-faith bargaining.

The second provision imposes a 30-day limit on the ratification of memoranda of settlement and is intended to provide increased certainty as to the status of the bargaining relationship following completion of the negotiations.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answers to questions 366 and 367 on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 5395.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Parrott moved third reading of Bill 24, An Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act, 1971.

Ms. Bryden: I have a few comments on this bill as we consider it for third reading. This legislation was originally introduced in December 1978 in the form of Bill 209, and we had high hopes that it would solve the problems of the victims of polluters who were not getting adequate compensation and of society which is not getting cleanup, either enough or as rapidly as desired, due to weaknesses in our law and in the common law, and due to lack of a clear statement as to liability of the person who was the owner or the person in control of the hazardous substance.

We were hopeful this bill would solve problems such as what happened in the case of the PCB spill at Dowling or the gasoline leaking into the well water at Port Loring, and many other instances where the victims of pollution had not been compensated and society or the victims had ended up paying the bill. We hoped the bill would fully embody the principle that the polluter must pay, and that there would be strong incentives in the bill for those who use hazardous substances to take the responsibility for their use and liability for the risks that accompany such substances.

In March 1979 a new bill was brought in, somewhat revamped from the earlier one but still containing what were the basic principles of putting responsibility for cleanup and for rehabilitation of the environment on the owner or the person in control of the substance, providing for the ministry to move in if the cleanup and rehabilitation was not done, to charge the polluter if he could be identified and finally to put liability on the polluter for compensation for loss or damage from spills.

On the second reading debate, I indicated, as some of my colleagues did, areas where we would like to see improvements in the bill. We were particularly concerned about use of the word "direct" when stating compensation would be provided for damage incurred as a "direct" result of the polluter's actions. We thought the word "direct" unduly limited the liability. We also thought the scope of the bill was somewhat limited by the exclusion of heat, noise, sound and radiation. We didn't like the very broad regulatory powers given to the minister under the bill, without adequate provision for some public input.

We didn't like one significant change between Bill 209 and Bill 24 which reduced the time limit for initiating an action for compensation from six years to two years after the person became aware of the damage. We also didn't like the lack of protection for farmers who may be handling farm wastes since it appeared as though they might be improperly covered by the terms of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, during the past eight months since the bill was introduced and referred to the resources development committee it has been radically changed. The minister has brought in many amendments and this has prolonged the process of dealing with the bill greatly; in fact the last amendments just came forward in November.

The amendments that came very late were the ones that required new submission from the people who were concerned about the bill; we had to have many of the people in two and three times because there were so many changes. It's unfortunate that because of this prolongation of the process the bill was not in place at the time of the Mississauga derailment. It might have strengthened the rights of claim there considerably; at least we hope it would have.

However some of the changes give rise to considerable worry about the strength of the bill and whether the principle that the polluter must pay has been departed from. For one thing, the minister has now added a compensation fund to be financed out of the consolidated revenue fund to the bill. The fund will not only provide compensation above a certain level to be specified by regulation, but it will also handle situations where the polluter cannot be found. While I support the principle of having an unsatisfied judgement fund I am somewhat concerned about the extent of the liability the province is taking on.

In addition, the bill does not contain any limit to the period over which the consolidated revenue fund will finance the compensation fund, even though the minister had indicated it would be limited to one year. When I moved an amendment that the limit should be written into the bill and that there should be provision for setting up some sort of contribution process from polluters and industry to finance the compensation, both those proposals were voted down by the Conservative and Liberal members of the committee.

Mr. Sneaker, other changes that occurred during the eight month period appear to me to water down some of its liability sections, and this gives great cause for concern. First there was the removal of liability in the event of war, insurrection, terrorism, or from events that are due to a natural phenomenon or to the actions of a third party over whom the owner or person in control has no control. Some of these exemptions from liability can be supported, perhaps, because of the difficulty of determining the liability and the difficulty of determining insurance rates. However, they also lend themselves to considerable differences of interpretation—just what is terrorism, just what is a natural phenomenon of an inevitable nature; therefore I'm somewhat reluctant to see those exemptions written into the bill as a sort of afterthought until we've had some experience as to what the courts would consider liability and what they would consider defence.

Another change in the bill that may weaken the liability placed on the polluter is the adoption of a phrase which was virtually proposed by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Association representatives spoke several times to the committee and were very concerned about the liability imposed by the bill. One can understand this. They use a great many hazardous substances in their operations and are interested in keeping the liability as small as possible.

But as many people in the committee said, they reap the benefits of using these hazardous substances and they make the choice of which ones to use. The public has little or no control over those decisions, which is an argument that they should be liable.

The clause the Canadian Manufacturers' Association would like to have added would say that the polluter is not liable if he has taken all reasonable care to avoid the particular event. The minister's amendment virtually says the same thing. It lets the polluter off if he "establishes that he took all reasonable steps to prevent the spill."

I moved that this last clause be struck from the minister's amendment, but both the Conservative and Liberal members of the committee voted against my motion. The inclusion of this phrase greatly weakens the liability clause in the bill. We'll have to see how the courts apply this, how they interpret that phrase. If my misgivings are well-founded we will have to consider tightening amendments very soon.

The bill has been further watered down by striking the word "absolute" from the original clause in the bill which says, "liability under subsection 2 is absolute and does not depend on fault or negligence."

In my opinion, that clause was the guts of Bill 24. It was the chief section of the bill required to put liability on to the owner or the person in control, and it was the clause which would have provided the incentive for users of hazardous substances to take the utmost precautions, to develop safe methods of transportation and handling and to use the least hazardous substances. Without the word "absolute" the section is much weaker, in my opinion.

According to the minister, the addition of the exemptions for war and terrorism and so on I mentioned made it improper to use the word "absolute" when defining liability. We do have a precedent in the federal Fisheries Act which says "the liability of any person"—I'm dropping out some words—"is absolute and does not depend on proof of fault or negligence, but no such person is liable"—and I drop out some words—"if he establishes that the occurrence giving rise to the liability is wholly caused by an act of war . . ." et cetera. In other words, it's possible to state in the legislation that the liability is absolute except for specified exemptions mentioned in the legislation.

If the word "absolute" is retained, a much greater emphasis is put on the nature of the liability you're trying to establish when it comes to the courts for interpretation.

Unfortunately, my amendment to the minister's amendment striking out the word "absolute" was voted down by the Conservative and Liberal members of the committee. I had moved that the minister's amendment striking out the word should itself be struck out. We lost a signal to the courts about how tough we wanted them to be on the question of liability generally, except for the exceptions mentioned in the bill.

Other amendments which the NDP members of the committee moved to improve the bill included the following: first, one calling for a provision for class action against polluters to establish liability for compensation—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I don't think anyone wants to restrict debate, but surely these matters have been gone over. We have had a committee on this; we have had the hearings. I really don't think it is appropriate on third reading that we go over everything all over again.

We have a procedure here by which we deal with these matters if there is something that perhaps was left out or forgotten, but to regurgitate all over again what happened in the committee and pound our breasts and carry on I don't think is appropriate. I would ask for your ruling as to whether or not what the honourable member is speaking about in fact is in order at this time.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, if I could speak to that point of order, we had a precedent last night on one clause of a bill. A member of the Liberal caucus spoke for approximately an hour, and some of us felt that speech should more appropriately have been delivered on second reading or on leadoff to the estimates.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You could have gotten up on a point of order and suggested it.

Mr. Foulds: I would have thought that in the last few days of the Legislature a certain goodwill would permeate the benches on all sides.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Port Arthur is referring, of course, to something that took place in committee; it did not take place in the House. The member for Rainy River makes a good point, and I know the member for Beaches-Woodbine will confine her remarks.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I'm simply trying to indicate the difficulties I have in deciding whether to vote for third reading, because the improvements I had hoped to see in the bill are not there. There is no provision in the bill for class actions, and my amendment to add them was defeated by Conservative and Liberal members on the committee.

Another amendment calling for pre-publication of regulations and a 60-day period for public comment on them was also defeated by the Conservative and Liberal members, although I will concede that the minister did give a commitment to do just that.

He seemed reluctant, however, to have it written into the legislation, although the Ontario Securities Commission now goes through that process and both the United States and Britain do have pre-publication and public comment on regulations.

Another amendment we were disappointed was not accepted was the return to the original clause in Bill 209 for a six-year limitation on actions.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a point of order. I can only repeat what I said before. The member who is speaking has been on this now for almost half an hour. She is repeating exactly what has already happened and what we've gone through in regard to the bill. If she likes, we will all admit her concern about this bill. Lots of us have concern, but I say to the Speaker that the member's remarks are completely out of order and I think the question should be put.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I wish my friend would learn something about the rules of the Legislature. The standing rules say that people can comment on third reading, in fact that more than one member can comment on third reading. If my friend is prepared to study the rules and make a legitimate point of order then we're prepared to listen, but if he isn't prepared to listen to the rules, or learn the rules, then I suggest he shuts up, because we sat in here last night—and I heard him intervene on my colleague twice—we sat in here last night and went through a tirade from the member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) for an hour on what should have been a second reading speech which he didn't make, but which he delivered on an amendment to a bill last night when he spoke for an hour.

We didn't object. We thought it a little funny that he would make his speech in that way, but now I'm sorry we let him go. We had a legitimate complaint about that but we didn't make it. The member doesn't have a legitimate point of order according to the standing rules, so I suggest he should refrain from interfering, because all he is going to do is take a lot more time of the House than is presently occurring.

Mr. Eaton: You fellows would never do that, would you?

Mr. Martel: I didn't say that at all. I'm prepared to take as long as the member wants in discussing this matter. But my friend will recall last Thursday that it was he who refused to give this House permission after an agreement to go back to committee of the whole with this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Eaton: And I will say to the member I am proud of it, or we would be having every one of those amendments over again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: Well, we got my friend up in a hurry didn't we. I might indicate that the House leader was prepared—

Mr. Eaton: Just going through what she's going through now, repeat and repeat and repeat—

Mr. Martel: I might, for my friend, suggest to him that he should refrain from nonsensical statements, because his friend, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), brought three bills in today and the member is going to need all kinds of time and co-operation to get those bills through. That sort of approach isn't going to get him anything.

Mr. Eaton: What are you trying to do, threaten?

Mr. Lane: Does the member threaten?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I remind my friend—

Mr. Martel: Do you never use them? Oh! Go home.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I would remind my friend who never adds any kind of reasonableness, rationality, and certainly no respect for the rules of this House when he rises to speak, that statements like "sit down and shut up," I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, do very little for the dignity and decorum of this House.

Mr. Martel: Oh! Don't hand us that nonsense.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I often wonder about that member who used to be a school teacher and has classes in the gallery listening to that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would draw your attention to the standing rules that deal with it.

Mr. Foulds: Cite the standing order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: "In a debate, a member shall be called to order by the Speaker, if he . . .," or she ". . . speaks twice to a question, except in explanation . . .," et cetera.

Number three under standing order of rules of debate 19: ". . . persists in needless repetition or raises matters that have been decided during the current session."

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, we all try to be fair, but I think we've been more than patient with that particular member. I would suggest to the member for Sudbury East—

Mr. Martel: Will Mr. Speaker rule the member out of order?

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, the member has now taken 25 minutes.

Mr. Martel: The member doesn't even have a point of order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —who knows less about the rules and certainly applies them less than anybody else here—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —that he, in fact, read the rules of the House.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. I think the member for Rainy River has just defeated his case, because the rule that he cited says the member cannot engage in needless repetition.

There has been no speech on third reading whatsoever, and every one of the points that my colleague, the member for Beaches-Woodbine, is making are new points in this debate on third reading and are absolutely in order.

Mr. Riddell: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. These amendments that the member for Beaches-Woodbine is referring to have all been debated at some length in committee. She is bringing them up again on third reading, which is certainly unnecessary. This business of making reference to opposition members, or the Conservatives and the Liberals voting against such amendments, to my way of thinking is completely irrelevant in this discussion on third reading. I say she is repeating herself. It has all been gone through in committee and I don't think we should be wasting time listening to this on third reading.

[4:00]

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A point of order has been raised and there has been considerable discussion. The question before the House is shall the bill be read a third time. The honourable member for Beaches-Woodbine will continue her comments and remarks and I hope keep them within that context.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, there is one more question regarding the third reading which should be considered by this House, and it arises out of something that has happened since the bill was introduced for second reading and debated in this House, the Mississauga derailment.

We discussed in committee the question of whether waivers should be outlawed. I think the members, in considering this third reading, should very seriously consider the refusal of the committee to outlaw waivers. In spite of the Attorney General having expressed considerable doubts about the necessity of the Canadian Pacific requirement that people should sign waivers, the Attorney General came before the committee and suggested that members vote against my amendment proposing that waivers be outlawed.

Mr. Speaker, I will now go on to the reasons I have come to the decision to vote for the bill on third reading, in spite of the failure to improve it as much as I would have liked.

First of all, we do want the cleanup provisions which will ensure prompt cleanup and the rehabilitation of the environment. The bill imposes this as an absolute liability on the owner or person in control, and I think that is a step ahead. It also authorizes the minister to move in, if the polluter does not act or cannot be identified, or to designate local government or others to move in and charge the costs to the polluter if he can be found.

I hope that the act really strengthens the rights of victims to compensation beyond what the common law now provides. We will not know if this is really the fact until we get some judicial rulings on it and have some experience with the settlement of claims generally. I am prepared to monitor this working of the act and I hope it will be advantageous for the victims of pollution.

I am disappointed that it isn't as tough as it started out to be and I am worried that the consolidated revenue fund may be stuck with the costs of the compensation fund for more than a year if the minister does not get his proposed alternative method of financing the fund.

I am concerned about the number of people who may sign away their rights to future compensation in Mississauga when receiving out-of-pocket evacuation expenses, because I feel that evacuation expenses are in a somewhat different category to ordinary compensation. I think evacuation expenses should be covered by the polluter or by the person who caused the spill, but that they should not be given with a condition that one signs away all other rights to compensation for the effects of the spill, which may not be evident at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the bill will prove to be a useful addition to our environmental legislation; for that reason I will vote for third reading, but I hope it is not just another piece of window dressing like the Environmental Assessment Act.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, in recognition of the constraints of time and the workload before this House to be completed before it prorogues, I will be brief. I would like to convey the regrets of the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), who was unable to remain in the House to participate in this third reading; he is chairman of the social development committee which is meeting this afternoon.

I know the member for Huron-Bruce was greatly involved in this most important bill; I believe the minister has a great deal of respect and listened very carefully to the reasonableness of the member for Huron-Bruce. Together, I think they have brought in a very important bill, although it is a compromise to a certain extent, between what the environmentalists groups wanted, and of course what the industry wanted.

It was a very lengthy hearing. Industry presented a very strong case, particularly in connection with the absolute liability section of the bill; the environmentalists presented equally as strong a case; therefore I think until we give the bill a chance to function we did have to reach a compromise. I believe both industry and the environmentalists groups are quite satisfied. If the bill doesn't work to our satisfaction, we can always amend it at another time.

I was a little disturbed with some of the things that happened in committee. I know Dr. Landis was the one who you might say masterminded the bill. I am sure he had the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) well briefed. I think the minister handled himself very well in committee, but this was a bill that showed the work of Dr. Landis.

Dr. Landis sat and listened to industry present its case in connection with absolute liability, and he wanted to talk to the committee and convey some of his thoughts. We had such a meeting set up. I was a little disturbed when the Conservatives cut him short. I don't know the reason. I was certainly prepared to listen to him to see what he had to say in favour of absolute liability, because there is no question there were many of us on the committee who were a little concerned about deviating so much from what we have accepted as common law, that is that a person or party is innocent until proven guilty. Here we were making parties guilty and really not giving them a chance to prove their innocence, which I say is quite a deviation from common law.

That is why I was concerned, and I know all of the Conservative members on that committee were most concerned about this particular aspect of the bill.

I felt we should have given Dr. Landis an opportunity to convey his thoughts to us about the absolute liability, but he was cut short. There was one Conservative member on the committee who I felt reprimanded him for really no apparent reason. I was a little disturbed that he was treated in this respect. The member may have something to say about it. I think it was a little unfair to a man who was so intent on seeing the bill pass in its present form, because as I say he was the one who masterminded the bill. I really think it was our responsibility to listen to what he had to say, but we didn't have that opportunity.

We have reached a compromise position on the bill. We have absolute liability as far as immediate cleanup is concerned, but we have resorted to strict liability or reverse onus as far as compensating victims of a spill. I think this was the only thing we could do at this particular point in time. As I say, if we find that isn't working and we have to go to absolute liability in respect of compensating victims of spills we can always amend the bill, but I think that has the makings of pretty harsh treatment.

I can never understand the members to my left and their philosophy on anything. They are the first to holler whenever people are put out of work, but they don't seem to mind putting hardships on the very employers who are providing these jobs. If we are going to continue to impose hardships on industry in Ontario then we aren't going to have it operating here. Companies will leave and we will have these people put out of work. I think we have to look at all sides of this, and if we want industry to carry on then I don't think we can be imposing such things as absolute liability on these companies, which may be completely innocent as far as the spill is concerned, but are guilty according to the way a bill is formally written.

I think it is a good bill now. It is an important piece of legislation passed in connection with environmental matters. We certainly support the bill on third reading.

We in the Liberal Party are happy to see there is light at the end of the tunnel. I have wondered since we started this bill whether we were ever going to see it come into the House for third reading. I am sure the minister has wondered many times whether or not he should withdraw the bill. I am glad he stuck with it, and I commend the minister for listening to the amendments put forth by the committee members representing the Liberals and the NDP; and of course I think the minister brought in some important amendments of his own.

I think the committee worked well and brought in a bill that is workable. I would like to see it get third reading and be put into effect, so when we have another spill such as the one in Mississauga we have some legislation on which we can lean.

Mr. Kennedy: I rise to commend the minister, his ministry and the committee for bringing forth this legislation. As the previous speaker indicated, I am aware how hard and diligently they worked, listening to many representations in great detail.

I was sorry not to be able to participate in that discussion. Although any member can go, I don't happen to be on the resources committee. We all know there are other responsibilities. The chairman also worked very diligently to bring this bill through to third reading.

The issue of the derailment in Mississauga was brought up by one of the members and if the minister is going to respond when other members have spoken, I would ask him to comment on how this bill might have applied in that situation.

And could he tell me, if this bill is put in place now, would it be considered retroactive in relation to that derailment? Would it be pertinent to the issue of cleanup, what with the ongoing inquiry taking place to resolve that problem?

I note the act comes into force on a day to be named by proclamation following royal assent. Could the minister give some indication of when this bill will be in place?

Again I want to commend the committee and the minister on their work on this landmark piece of legislation. It is long overdue and we welcome it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I am pleased to see the House is going to support this bill. We are, I think, justifiably proud that it's going to be law here in Ontario before the festive season.

I too share the views of at least two of the previous speakers, that the committee worked extremely hard and well.

I do want to clear up one or two misconceptions. First, when the bill was introduced we had high hopes, as one of the members said, that we would see payments to innocent victims, uninvolved victims.

Second, we hoped to see legislation which would allow the ministry to very effectively clean up the results of spills in the environment.

I am pleased to advise members that both those original objectives have been met, without being watered down as I think someone said. They have been met unconditionally.

Perhaps we are meeting them in a little different form than was originally proposed, but the very basic principles of the bill have been maintained.

[4:15]

I was concerned that there was some question about whether or not we would put more of the regulations into legislation. I made a commitment in committee, and now I am also pleased to put it on the record here in the House, that I am quite prepared to put regulations into the Ontario Gazette prior to their approval. In other words, they will go into part one and there will be notice of intent, and then they will be put to the committee for discussion.

There comes a point in time when, after you have had eight months of debate and after you have gone to the extent of publicizing the regulations, you have to get a little discouraged when some people say they still want more discussion; I don't know how much is enough, in other words, I can't imagine we can do more than we have done on this bill. I guess it boils down to this. The House, it appears, is going to unanimously support this legislation, and for that I am pleased and thankful.

I also want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that many of the decisions in the committee were made with a great deal of care and consideration. I should say all of them were made with a great deal of care and consideration. Frequently they were moved by members of the various parties. In fact, it was not uncommon for an amendment that I may have had printed, as a result of the work of the staff in the ministry, to be moved by someone from other than my own party.

I thought that committee functioned as well as any committee I have ever had the pleasure to attend and be part of. There was genuine debate and it was over two or three major issues of the bill. More particularly, now that the committee has met and had all of those deliberations, now that they have spoken and come to a consensus, and although I am proud of the bill on a personal basis and on behalf of the ministry, I hope we will find that the members of this House will be proud of that bill and not say, "Well, I agree with most of it but not that little section." The committee system has worked; it has functioned. Surely now we should go forward and say that is our bill, one in which all of us had an opportunity to actively participate and we are proud of having done so.

I can't answer the question of the member for Mississauga South as to when the bill will be proclaimed. As it says, obviously, in section 6, "This act comes into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor." I would like to have the regulations gazetted first and then go back to the committee at least. If I thought that would unduly delay it, then I would, of course, ask Her Honour to proclaim it. I am sure my cabinet colleagues would agree to proclaim it earlier than that. I would hate to unduly delay it.

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't wait for another disaster.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I agree. That's one of the concerns. Let's get it on here. If I hear the member say, "Proclaim the bill and do the regulations later," then I am quite prepared to proclaim it at the earliest date. I am not sure whether the member is suggesting that.

Mr. Kennedy: Obviously we need regulations.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We do, to make the bill fully effective. Therefore, I must press. We are pressing and I hope to be back to the committee with the regulations. Again, it was sort of a milestone in committee discussions. The give and take in that committee, I think, exceeded the give and take in most committees.

I would be absolutely wrong, in conclusion, if I didn't say two things to you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say a very sincere thanks to members from all sides who participated in that debate. I would find them still discussing it after hours. It wasn't a piece of legislation about which the various members came in and said, "Let's get it over with"; indeed, they became caught up in this legislation and the importance of it. I just want to put on the record as clearly as I possibly can that that committee functioned well. They made joint decisions and I think they should be proud of a piece of legislation that I honestly believe will go down in the annals of our environmental law as one of the premier bills this province has seen and this country has seen. Indeed, it's legislation that breaks a lot of ground in this country. Not only are we proud of this legislation, but I am very proud of the way the committee deliberated on this bill.

Motion agreed to.

THE CITY OF TORONTO ACT

Mr. Renwick moved second reading of Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

THE SOUTH RUSSELL HOLDINGS LIMITED ACT

Mr. Eaton, on behalf of Mr. Rotenberg, moved second reading of Bill Pr30, An Act to revive South Russell Holdings Limited.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

House in committee of the whole.

CROWN TIMBER AMENDMENT ACT

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act.

On section 5:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 5a of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, be amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(5) Each agreement entered into under subsection 1 with respect to the lands to which the treaty known as Treaty No. 9 applies shall be subject to any aboriginal rights which may exist at the time the agreement is entered into and to any rights which may exist under the said Treaty No. 9.

"(6) Without limiting the generality of subsection 4, the said subsection 4 applies to every agreement entered into under subsection 1 with respect to the lands within which the communities known as Poplar Hill, Deer Lake, North Spirit Lake, McDowell Lake, Slate Falls, Aroland, Webequie, Lansdowne House, Summer Beaver, Long Dog Lake, Hawley Lake and Fort Albany are located."

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I distributed copies of this amendment yesterday to all parties concerned. Members will recall that on second reading of the bill my colleague, the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman), raised the question of protecting the position of the Indian communities residing in the named 11 areas spelled out in subsection 6 of the proposed amendment. I have had some concerns for a long time with respect to the status of Treaty No. 9.

I specifically refer to Treaty No. 9, and not to that part of the lands covered by Treaty No. 3, nor to the Robinson-Lake Superior agreement, both of which fall into different categories, I refer specifically in this amendment to Treaty No. 9 because it is a treaty to which, in substance if not in precise technical law, the province of Ontario, along with the federal government, the Dominion of Canada as it then was, is a party with the Indian communities which are parties to that agreement.

I've spoken on other occasions of my concern about Treaty No. 9. Since that time there has been a significant development in the legal concept with respect to aboriginal title and aboriginal rights. Therefore, I wanted on this occasion to make certain that nothing we do in the Crown Timber Act is going in any way to affect whatever the rights may be of the native people with respect to the lands in Treaty No. 9, and more particularly the specific 11 communities.

The development of the law with respect to aboriginal rights is sort of a hallmark of this last decade. We are all quite aware that the encroachment of industrial society on tribal groups has been a feature of a colonizing policy of all of the European nations which came here to Canada and which took over and encroached upon the lands previously occupied by the native peoples. Many legal problems have been created as a result of the encroachment, but the law remains, as has been said, curiously imprecise as the rights of aboriginal peoples and the status of their treaties is obscure. Most jurisdictions have been slow to develop a coherent doctrine of aboriginal rights.

Let me refer in my remarks to an article which appeared in The Review of the International Commission of Jurists for June 1979 by Mr. Gordon Bennett on Developing Law of Aboriginal Rights. A portion of the conclusion of that article, I think, expresses the reality within which we live at the present time.

"The discovery of mineral wealth, expanding communications and the advances of industrial technology have already combined to deprive most aboriginal communities of the autonomy they once enjoyed. It would be idle to pretend that this process could be halted, still less reversed, by the enactment of laws.

"Political and economic considerations are the real determinants of the fate of native people, but the invasion of tribal land, hitherto almost invariably a lawless phenomenon, can be subjected to legal restraints and the intervention of indigenous and non-indigenous societies controlled within a legal framework."

It is my personal opinion, which I've held for a long time, that properly prepared and properly submitted to the courts Treaty No. 9 would likely not withstand a positive attack as being a document which would stand up under the scrutiny of the circumstances under which that treaty was entered into. At some point in time I expect that challenge will be made.

Again I reiterate, the point of my amendment is simply to ensure that those rights, whatever they are, are not going to be affected in the interim by actions taken by this assembly under these agreements in which we are about to authorize the participation by the government with the various pulp and paper companies.

It is a long time in coming, but as recently as November 15 of this year a decision was given by the federal court in a matter, not within this province, related to Baker Lake Inuit Tapirisat of Canada versus the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and others who participated in that lawsuit, which clearly outlines and delineates the conceptual basis applicable to Canada on which claims for aboriginal rights can be based.

I'm not suggesting for a moment that question is open and shut on any of the issues that are involved in specific claims in specific areas. What I am saying is that the development of the law, or the clarification of what the law is with respect to the rights of the Indian communities with which the province is involved under Treaty No. 9, are matters which must at some time be clarified in law.

It is a long time since 1763 and the time of the royal declaration which spoke about the Indian peoples outside the province of Quebec and outside what were then known as the lands of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the preservation of their rights. It is a long time since there has been any clear understanding as to whether or not under the common law of England there was an aboriginal right of aboriginal peoples to their land with respect to countries that were colonized by England in the days of the Empire.

It is sufficient to say that as late as 1973 at least three of the judges in a seven-man court held there were such rights. I reiterate that in the recent case of November 15, 1979 those particular rights are much more clearly indicated. It is now quite possible for lawyers to frame the kinds of issues which must be answered to establish whether there is aboriginal title or whether there are aboriginal rights and what the nature and extent of those rights may be in any particular circumstance with respect to any particular tribe or settlement.

The minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) is probably quite aware that the Grand Council Treaty No. 9 has been very much concerned about this whole question of the status of the particular communities to which I have referred by name in the proposed amendment. As late as April 24, 1979, the whole question of the band reserve status was the subject of a paper by Fred Plain on behalf of the Grand Council Treaty No. 9, in which the very issues with respect to the title to those lands and the right to those lands is seen to be a matter of continuing negotiation with the government of this province.

Most of us recall—indeed the Speaker of this assembly certainly recalls—that the very lands included in Big Trout Lake, in that area, were finally resolved by joint order in council of this government and the federal government to establish the band reserve status of the Big Trout Lake settlements at that time. Since that time they have been engaged in negotiations, specifically with respect to Fort Albany, and those negotiations are stymied simply because this government has now said it is not prepared to grant any more lands and that all it is prepared to do is to sell them lands at something called “fair market value” or to exchange lands for other lands. That’s the kind of niggardly position I would anticipate this government would take, excepting this Minister of Natural Resources who has a degree of understanding of this problem which makes me believe the position of his government will at some time be reversed.

The Fort Albany negotiations are completely stymied at the present time because of this intransigent position of the government of Ontario and with respect to the fact that the other 10 communities have not even reached the point where there is any significant progress being made. I may say that behind the whole question of the validity of Treaty No. 9 lies the question of these particular 10 reserves, or 10 areas, or 10 communities—whatever one wants to call them. There are 11 communities if one includes the Fort Albany negotiations.

Let me just quote briefly from the paper to which I referred: “Through the research work done by Grand Council Treaty No. 9, by Jim Morison and the work done under the land-use study, it is clear that these so-called satellite communities did not just spin off or separate from a parent body. The government would like to convince us that this is what happened. The position paper that was submitted to the government of Canada by the people of Webequie, Lansdowne House and Summer Beaver clearly stated the fact that these communities pre-existed the 1905-1906 treaty signing at Port Hope. The fact is the same at all the other so-called satellite communities.”

I’m quite certain I need not go on at great length. This is not the proper forum to explore all the aspects of the concerns which I have about it. It is the proper forum, I suppose, but this is not the proper occasion in this forum to press that. But I did want to let my colleagues in the House, from all parties, clearly understand what our regard to the status of these communities.

May I point out very clearly that the terms of the agreement do not inhibit entering into agreements with respect to crown lands for the purpose of regeneration, as has been discussed for some considerable time, both on second reading and in committee of the whole House. What it simply says is that any agreement entered into “shall be subject to any aboriginal rights which may exist at the time the agreement is entered into and to any rights which may exist under the said Treaty No. 9.” The purpose is to clearly preserve within the statutes, to give public notice that that reservation has been made by this assembly, in order that in due course of time I would hope these particular problems about these particular 11 communities will be resolved in a way which is satisfactory to the native peoples and which will clearly indicate this assembly reserves whatever rights the native peoples may have with respect to Treaty No. 9, with which this government is inextricably involved with the federal government.

If in due course, as I believe will be the case, the matter finally goes in some way or another to the Supreme Court of Canada, we will have a definitive statement with respect to the validity, which I think is distinctly challengeable, of Treaty No. 9, and what is the nature and extent of the historical background which may have led to an assertion of aboriginal title to solve the vexed question as to whether or not Treaty No. 9 operated to extinguish whatever aboriginal title there may have been and to determine to what extent the royal proclamation of 1763 affected the title of the Indian communities.

The division in the legal world, that has been trying to sort out, pretending that these rights always existed, but in fact trying to answer by way of the common law the very equity which is required, splits on the question as to whether or not all of the rights in that area flow only from the royal proclamation of 1763, or whether antedating that there was in fact a common law aboriginal title which must be respected so far as the lands now in the province of Ontario are concerned.

For those who are not aware of it, under Treaty No. 9 that great, vast land mass of the very northern part of the province was transferred to the crown in the right of the federal government and then transferred, in due course, to the province of Ontario for a pittance, in the negotiations which presumably took place. I may say, with great respect to the particular form of the Christian church to which I belong and to which the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) belongs, they had to use the bishop of the Anglican church in order to persuade the Indians that it was quite all right to rely upon the great white queen across the waters to look after their interests.

Somewhere along the line, the inequity of that treaty is subject to severe challenge, and I think this assembly at least has to do the minimum in this bill in preserving whatever those rights may be until such time as they can have a final and conclusive determination. I would therefore ask the support of the House for this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the minister wish to reply at this time. Sorry, I thought we had come to the end of the speakers. The member for Algoma.

Mr. Wildman: I rise in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague from Riverdale. I bow to him and his legal expertise in these arguments with regard to the question of aboriginal claims, aboriginal rights and the validity, or lack of it, of Treaty No. 9.

My concern, as the minister will recall I raised this whole issue previously during this debate, is the 11 communities and what effects the proposed law, and the provision under it for forest management agreements, might have on the disputed lands that are now occupied by the bands at Poplar Hill, Deer Lake, North Spirit Lake, McDowell Lake, Slate Falls, Aroland, Webequie, Lansdowne House, Summer Beaver, Long Dog Lake, Hawley Lake and Fort Albany.

When I raised it earlier, the minister argued that this didn't apply and shouldn't be raised under this section. Obviously some of those communities we're talking about are too far north to really be affected, but others could very well be affected by the forest management agreement. It seems to me that if we're passing a bill which will be providing for management of lands on which people are now living and to which they claim title, then it is very appropriate that we should be debating it at this time. Although it isn't central to the bill, it is certainly central to the lives and livelihood of the people living in those communities.

My colleague from Riverdale referred to the paper presented by Fred Plain to Grand Council Treaty No. 9 in April, 1979 with regard to the status of these communities.

I want to point out that whether you talk about the aboriginal claim or not, one thing that has to be considered in talking about Indian lands and Indian land claims generally, even in other treaty areas which didn't directly involve the province because they were signed prior to the formation of this province—such as the Robinson-Superior Treaty for instance, or the Robinson-Huron Treaty—often when those treaties were signed they were signed with communities which were thought to occupy lands but it was very unclear as to which lands were occupied by whom.

In fact there is a substantial claim in the Pic River area right now over lands claimed by bands that according to the federal government have somehow been formed subsequent to the signing of the treaty; they have just appeared and are now occupying and claiming lands that were covered by agreements with other bands. One argument is that these are spin-off bands, but in fact these could very well have been bands in the interior that the people at the time of the signing of the treaty knew nothing about. That's very unclear, it's something that has to be cleared up.

In the case of Treaty No. 9, where this level of government has a direct interest because the treaty was signed after the formation of this level of government. This government was given jurisdiction over those areas by the federal government, and was in a sense a third party to the agreement that is central to the discussion here.

I would like to deal for a moment with the whole argument that these are satellite communities. That is very unclear and it would be very convenient for both the federal and provincial levels of government if they could indeed be seen as satellite communities.

One could argue that the people living in those communities are already provided for by the treaty in the reserve land set aside for the people occupying the area, but the research indicates these are communities which were not developed latterly as spin-off communities. They are long-time communities which have been standing for some time. They are communities which have developed as the people established a less nomadic way of life. They are really communities which should be seen to have reserve status.

Obviously the people who live there must be given title to the lands they are living on, otherwise they will be subject to whatever developments take place in the area, without having any say themselves.

I think this government and the federal government have already set a precedent for dealing with these problems in the Treaty No. 9 area. The Big Trout Lake settlement, which was referred to by my colleague, certainly sets a precedent. It is indeed unfortunate that this government has not decided to settle these other claims in a similar fashion, or at least appears not to have.

In the Big Trout Lake situation, which was finally agreed to in 1975, eight band reserves were established where previously there had been only one recognized. They weren't reserves that were purchased by the people of the Big Trout Lake area but were transfers of title. I wonder why the government hasn't chosen to take that same approach in the negotiations that are now taking place.

In the meantime, while the issues are not settled it seems imperative that we must protect the people living in those communities who are now in the process, through Treaty No. 9—the Grand Council Treaty No. 9 that is—in the process of negotiating with the two levels of government.

I wonder if the minister will be able to tell us—he wasn't able to tell us when I raised this matter earlier in the debate on this bill—if the province will be prepared to offer the lands in fee simple as they did with Big Trout Lake?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Would the honourable member repeat that, I didn't hear it?

Mr. Wildman: Will the minister be willing to offer these lands to the people living in the area, as reserve lands, in fee simple? In other words, will he transfer the lands? Is he willing to transfer the lands and make an agreement with the federal government for these lands to be given reserve status?

The one thing I am very concerned about—the individuals to my right, or one of them, doesn't understand the situation in that we are talking here about lands that are under provincial jurisdiction, which were transferred to the province by the federal government; these are lands referred to in a treaty signed in 1905 after this province was established.

In fact this province was a third party to that agreement.

The federal government has to be involved if one is talking about giving them reserve status, because reserves happen to be under the jurisdiction of the federal government. What we are talking about is transferring lands, I suppose, from provincial jurisdiction to federal jurisdiction since legally, reserves are seen to be held in trust by the federal government for the people living on them. That is why both levels of government are involved.

I want to emphasize this isn't something to be just tossed into a tripartite committee for negotiations at some future date. It has to be resolved quickly and soon by negotiations directly with the people involved in the various communities through their representative, Grand Council Treaty No. 9, by the provincial Ministry of Natural Resources and the federal Department of Indian and Northern Affairs.

In the meantime, we must keep in mind how protracted negotiations between the two levels of government involving native peoples' rights have been in the past. One just has to refer, as the minister knows very well, to the so-called 1924 land agreement negotiations, which have been going on now for what—55 years? I certainly hope this matter will not take that long to resolve. It must be resolved quickly. Keeping in mind how long these matters can take, in the meantime we must give them some kind of protection against losing complete control over the lands on which they live.

I would urge the members of the House to support the amendment proposed by my colleague from Riverdale to give protection to the 11 communities of the Treaty No. 9 area which at this stage do not have reserve status.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I have a certain amount of sympathy with these amendments. I am not sure, however, that they fit into the scheme of things in regard to this legislation. Like my colleague who has just spoken and the member for Riverdale, I have some knowledge of these matters and a great deal of sympathy with some of the land claims put forward by the bands.

Not being as well versed in the legal aspect as other members, I would have thought some of these matters would already have come under other legislation and and other forms of protection. I don't know if they should be put in the law to underline, as my friend from Riverdale says, the concern of this House that those rights and obligations, and certainly the resolution of those problems, would be protected.

Much of this area, of course, is in a part of northern Ontario which will not necessarily be affected by these agreements. But if there is any chance at all that some will be, I think we need a guarantee from the minister that he will be there at the very least to protect those aboriginal rights in land I believe the member for Riverdale is talking about specifically, rather than in some other species. Perhaps the concept of the aboriginal rights in regard to game and fish and the impact that harvesting and regeneration might have on those should also form part of the bill. I don't know.

Could the minister tell us if he has given any consideration to the matters raised by the member for Riverdale and just where the situation lies? How does he see this legislation affecting or not affecting these particular problems in regard to Indian land claims?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I will deal with the questions raised by the member for Rainy River in connection with fish and game and whatever rights there may be on the part of the native peoples for trapping, hunting and fishing. This is one definition of aboriginal rights. It's by no means of legal definition, but it is one commonly used.

The land-use planning process now going on in the crown lands under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Natural Resources provides for land for timber, game and fish without straying too far from this bill. These are things I have mentioned previously in connection with the purchase of the Reed mill and existing licence by Great Lakes and the requirements we have in the memorandum of understanding which may be a part of that purchase.

I can assure this House we are very conscious of the need to preserve timber, game, fish, flora and fauna for everybody.

Going to the question raised by the member for Algoma, there is an existing provision that has been operative and used on occasion for the exchange of lands presently held by the crown in right of Ontario for lands now Indian reserves and held by the crown in right of Canada on an acre-for-acre basis. To my knowledge there has never been an exchange refused on that basis by the province.

On occasion a satellite or breakaway group has come to the province to ask for a specific piece of land. Such an incident occurred on land not too far east of the Lakehead, not too long ago. It is currently under negotiation. We agreed to sell—not exchange but sell—the land to the federal government for this group. I understand there are a number of satellite bands on crown land now in the right of Ontario and some reserve tracts owned by the crown in the right of Canada are vacant.

I have mentioned before, as has my predecessor, one of the reasons for setting up the original royal commission under Mr. Justice Hartt, now headed by Mr. Fahlgren, and setting up the tripartite process was to negotiate these matters, some of which are of great legal complexity.

I would like to comment briefly on the two amendments just moved by the member for Riverdale. I start off my comments by asking, what are aboriginal rights?

The member for Riverdale uses that expression in his proposed subsection 4. That use implies this expression is reasonably clear. However, I am advised by our counsel that the expression "aboriginal rights" is not a reasonably clear concept. It is reasonably cloudy, or I might even say, unclear, expression.

As I think all honourable members of the House are aware, the Supreme Court of Ontario has the Temagami case to consider and it is before the court at this moment. I understand one of the main issues before the Supreme Court of Ontario will be the nature and extent of aboriginal rights.

I believe it is our duty as legislators to employ in our legislation expressions that are reasonably clear, not expressions that because of their ambiguity are currently before our highest court for clarification. In addition, it strikes me as improper for the Legislature to propose legislation of the kind proposed by the member for Riverdale when the very subject matter is sub judice, that is, before the courts.

[5:00]

I am advised that some of the court cases in the context, as the member for Riverdale has mentioned himself, don't use the expression "aboriginal rights" but the expression "aboriginal title," as he used today. I understand the meaning of the latter expression is just as ambiguous as the former. Neither, in the absence of reasonably clear meanings provided by the courts, ought to be legislated into law, in my view and in the view of my counsel. To do so would be to legislate, in effect, ambiguity and uncertainty into our law. I think that result would tend to bring discredit upon this House.

The latter part of subsection 4 as proposed by the member for Riverdale provides in substance that the forest management agreement is subject to any rights under Treaty No. 9. My advice is that this provision is redundant by virtue of section 88 of the federal Indian Act which provides, in effect, that the laws of Ontario are subject to Indian treaties. Since this principle appears not to be well understood, I would like to read section 88 of the Indian Act for the information of all honourable members.

"Subject to the terms of any treaty and any other act of the Parliament of Canada, all laws of general application from time to time in force in any province are applicable to and in respect of Indians in the province, except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with this act"—that is, the Indian Act—"or any order, rule, regulation or bylaw made thereunder and except to the extent that such laws make provision for any matter for which provision is made by or under this act."

I reiterate that the laws of Ontario are already subject to the treaties. Consequently, it follows that agreements made under Ontario laws would also be subject to the Indian treaties. With respect to the member for Riverdale, the latter part of his proposed subsection 4 is redundant. However I am advised subsection 4 also appears to be defective on constitutional grounds. I am advised that section 91, head 24, of the British North America Act provides that the class of subject, "Indians and land reserved for Indians," falls within the exclusive authority of the Parliament of Canada. It is reasonably clear that Ontario has no legislative authority to deal with the rights of Indians and in our opinion subsection 4, as proposed in this amendment, purports to do what this Legislature cannot do. Putting this matter simply, to me the proposal appears ultra vires this Legislature.

Mr. Renwick: I don't intend to prolong the matter because, as I said, this is not the occasion to debate all of the intricacies involved in it. I would, however, like to dissociate myself quite gently and quite specifically from the minister's version of what the effect, both in law and in reality, of the proposed amendment would be.

I stand by the amendment. I think it is necessary and that behind it is a real reluctance by the province to recognize that there are significant things wrong with the way the native people in this part of the world are being dealt with by this government when it could very well, in co-operation with the federal government, effect very significant and substantial changes which would eliminate the legalities and speak to the social and economic realities of the problem involved.

It is only because of that failure that one must rely upon the technicalities and the extreme difficulties of arguing the legal cases that are involved in the questions related to these matters. None of it, I say, is clear but it's becoming clearer. Throughout the 1970s, it's significantly more clear than it has been at any other time.

However, I do not intend to pursue the matter. I will let the record speak for itself at this time.

Mr. Wildman: I do intend to pursue the matter for some time, not for too long a length of time, though. I just want to reply to a couple of things the minister said.

He said he was aware of the fact that these kinds of disputes can sometimes be resolved through trade of land. I mentioned that when I was speaking and, of course, it is true, but that is not what is being asked for.

Here is a situation where, let's say, you have two communities. One community is recognized to have reserve status. The people of both communities are recognized to be members of the band for which that land is reserved. The second community, which does not have reserve status, requests reserve status.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We can't grant reserve status.

Mr. Wildman: It involves negotiations, as I said, at both levels of government, because the province has the jurisdiction over the land on which they live. The province says to the federal government, "We don't want to give up any land." The federal government then says, "This group of people want reserve status; they want land." The province replies, "We are not willing to transfer land directly to the federal government so that they can be given reserve status, but we are willing to trade some land. We will consider that."

In fact, what they are saying is they want to go to the first community that already has reserve status and say to them, "Look, will you divide up your land and give us some of what you have so that this other group can be granted land so they can have reserve status?" That is what the minister is asking and it is completely unreasonable, because if they are separate communities and they have been established as separate communities for a long time, unless there is a tremendous amount of goodwill and they have more land than most reserves, the people on the reserve are not going to be willing to give up some of their land. In many cases, because of the increase in population since the early 1900s, the reserves are much smaller than they need to be.

The minister did not reply to what I had mentioned, in that the agreement on the Big Trout Lake area did not involve a trade of land; in fact, it was a direct transfer.

Mr. Renwick: That's right.

Mr. Wildman: If you could do it then, why can't you do it now?

As a matter of fact, if I refer to the paper that my colleague mentioned, at the time of the negotiations with the Big Trout Lake band the government maintained that the land originally granted would have to be enough to support the band. I quote here, "The government said the assets of the Big Trout Lake band, including land and capital moneys, must be divided on a per capita basis to the eight communities." That was the position taken by the government.

It was only after a referendum had been held requesting separate band status that the other seven communities were given band status and given land. It was a direct transfer as far as the Indians were concerned.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I think we have strayed somewhat from the amendment to the Crown Timber Act.

Mr. Wildman: All I am saying, Mr. Chairman, is that this amendment as proposed by the member for Riverdale would not be necessary, as I think it is, to protect those communities if the government was willing to make a commitment for a transfer of land to the federal government so that reserve status could be established. As a matter of fact, at the time of the negotiations on the Big Trout Lake situation, the Fort Albany people were petitioning for the same kind of reserve status, but it was refused. Why would the government give it to one but not to the other?

In 1975, the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier) said that a provincial grant of land for Fort Albany similar to the grant made at Big Trout Lake was not possible. In fact, they would only trade land. If the minister would simply stand here and state he is willing to negotiate a transfer of land to the federal authorities for band status to be granted, this amendment wouldn't be necessary. As long as he's unwilling to say that, we must pass this amendment.

Mr. T. P. Reid: As I gather, the purport of the minister's remarks was that these amendments were out of order. Was that what he was trying to say? If he was, then obviously the chair has to rule.

If they are out of order, I think the least we require in the Legislature this afternoon is some kind of commitment that the lands, particularly, of the Indian bands in the area who may be affected by these agreements, and their aboriginal rights—as I define them and as the minister indicates he does, although perhaps not sharply enough for the lawyers—but that their aboriginal rights in regard to hunting, fishing and trapping will be protected.

If these amendments are out of order—I'm not quite sure whether they are or not and I can't make the decision on that—I'd like the minister to tell us what guarantees there are going to be. He mentioned the Hartt commission, or the Fahlgren commission, the tripartite situation with Justice Hartt. I'm not sure, quite frankly, I have much faith in all of that. I think that whole northern environment commission was a con job. I think in many ways it did more harm than good. I'm not sure what they're doing, if they're doing anything at this stage.

I'd like something more concrete so the people we're talking about have some protection. Perhaps these amendments should carry if we can't get some kind of guarantee from the minister or if he can't tell us under what mechanism these particular people's rights, perceived or legal, are going to be protected.

First of all, was the minister trying to say that these amendments were out of order?

Hon. Mr. Auld: What I said was that, first of all, subsection 4 appears to my legal staff to be redundant because of section 88 of the federal Indian Act which provides that all our laws must be in accord with the treaties made with the native people. They are subject to the terms of any treaty and to any other act of the Parliament of Canada. So it is unnecessary, in the first place, to have this amendment. Secondly, it also appears to be defective on constitutional grounds, according to the British North America Act and what I read a few moments ago.

I am not clear whether the member for Riverdale also moved at the same time "that section 5a of the act as set out in section 5 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection: '(6) . . .'" Is that presently before us? It is. Then let me expand a bit on this. I'm afraid I was thinking we only had the first part.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on that point I nodded inadvertently. No, that is the second amendment. There's some confusion about the numbers. Because last night the minister moved an amendment to add subsection 5, and because the document which I had sent to him was numbered 4 and 5, we then had to number it 5 and 6. But the one I will move subsequently is actually a new subsection 7, and it's not before us at this time. [5:15]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Then I can go back to the tripartite process. I think I can say for this government that we are anxious to reach a settlement on a whole variety of issues with the native people of Treaty No. 9, Treaty No. 5, the Union of Ontario Indians, the Iroquois and allied groups and others within the province on a great variety of matters.

As I say, I'm straying a bit from the Crown Timber Act, which is only one relatively small part. I think the biggest single issue is not the question of hunting, fishing and trapping. By and large, the only way there is agreement is because of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision as to the limitations imposed on all status Indians as far as hunting, fishing and trapping are concerned off the reserves—and how far off might be questionable because there are different provisions in different treaties, purchases and so on.

The Supreme Court has ruled that status Indians' rights on the reserve are protected. Off the reserve, they are subject to the game and fishing laws, the Migratory Birds Convention Act, other federal statutes and those provincial regulations which are passed by the federal government at our request.

As far as land claims are concerned, that is a different matter. I think those must be negotiated. My information and the advice I have from the law officers of the crown are that those have to be negotiated jointly as between the crown in right of Ontario and the crown in right of Canada on the one hand, and the native people on the other. It may well be that the settlements arrived at will vary in different parts of the province, although I think a single principle will have to apply. Those negotiations are going on, albeit slowly.

In 1924, when those—I don't really remember, as I wasn't following the papers that closely. In fact, I was just learning to read at the time.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You were a 30-year-old man.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Not quite. Three maybe, but I looked older.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You were reading then.

Hon. Mr. Auld: There were some major questions to be resolved, and many of them remain, in terms of land claims. I can assure the member for Rainy River we are anxious to see some settlements. In some cases, we're approaching some proposals that we will be able to put forward in connection with one or two claims I can think of in northwestern Ontario. I'm not sure of the matter the member for Algoma was mentioning about Big Trout Lake, unless that was in the time of the Honourable Kelso Roberts.

Mr. Renwick: It was 1975.

Mr. Wildman: It was 1975.

Hon. Mr. Auld: On a reserve in that general part of northwestern Ontario the original survey was shown to be wrong and an insufficient acreage had been granted for the reserve. I can't remember the name of the band. A grant was made by the province.

Mr. Wildman: They had 126 square miles and they were given another 195 square miles in addition.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Another 11 square miles, was it?

Mr. Wildman: Another 195 square miles.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That isn't the one I was thinking of. At any rate, we are anxious to resolve these things, but we must do so within the laws of the country. I hope that satisfies the honourable member's question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister has said these are redundant and are not required. Can we then have a guarantee from the minister that if any of these agreements are to be signed that will come in the areas suggested in the amendments by the member for Riverdale, then at the very least, before any agreement is signed with any company, these matters will go to the tripartite committee where the native peoples in the areas, particularly Treaty No. 9 that we're dealing with, will have an opportunity to put forward their point of view and stand up for their rights and protect themselves. Can we have that kind of guarantee?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I thought I had given that in the question about Reed. I just happened to have something here to cover that which I was going to read when the addition of subsection 6 was made.

Let me say that in administering forest management agreements I can assure the members of the House that due consideration and respect will be given to the legitimate interests of the relevant Indian communities. In this respect, the lands occupied by these Indian communities can be excluded from any forest management agreement.

Mr. Renwick: I want to make a brief comment. The questions are really all unsettled and all of the statements are argument-begging. Every one of the statements which the minister has made is an argumentative question. The fact of the matter is that the Parliament of Canada doesn't recognize aboriginal rights. The Parliament of Canada thinks that Treaty No. 9 is sacrosanct. The question of whether or not we have any jurisdiction in these matters is because this is the only treaty which came into effect after the province of Ontario was established under the constitution in 1867. All of those matters are questions which are going to have to be resolved.

To say that it is ultra vires of us to pass this amendment is not particularly helpful. All this says is that whatever the rights are, they are entitled to be protected and any agreement is subject to them. That's all. If they turn out to be nonexistent, that's fine. If they turn out to exist, then the agreements are subject to them. It wasn't an attempt to be legalistic about a problem. It was an attempt to make certain the social and economic realities exist.

It seems to me—and I don't live in the northern part of the province—if you're entering into agreements to cut timber and then to regenerate it, you can't help but disturb whatever may be encompassed in the needs of the native peoples living in those areas. It seems to me somehow or another we've got to say to them we're just not going to enter into agreements between the government of Ontario and a particular pulp and paper company for cutting rights over lands, without saying something about protecting the people who live there, particularly the native peoples who need that kind of protection. Whether the aboriginal rights are the limited ones referred to or whether there are some larger ones are not our questions. Those are questions which I see down the road are going to go to the courts.

I think we have a very profound obligation to say, "Fine, if they're going to go to the courts, that's all right." But the social and economic reality is to say either we make them a party to the agreement and negotiate the agreement that way or to say these agreements preserve and protect whatever those rights are. I think we owe nothing less.

I don't expect that I or my colleague from Algoma can convince the House. If my friend from Rainy River now believes that the point is not adequately covered or if he believes that an undertaking from the government has been given which removes the problem, that's fine. We intend to record our position on the matter.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment to section 5a adding subsections 5 and 6 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Renwick: I have a further amendment which, if the numbering system can sort itself out—in the document I distributed it was referred to as subsection 6, I think now it is really subsection 7. That's what we're talking about.

I may say that if this amendment were to pass there would be a subsequent amendment, which I'm not going to put, which would add as a schedule to the act the description of the lands contained in the memorandum of understanding between the government of Ontario and Reed Limited.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 5a of the act as set out in section 5 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(7) No agreement shall be entered into under subsection 1 with respect to the lands described in the schedule hereto."

Mr. Renwick: If I could just express my concern. I've discussed this with the minister in a very brief way. While I want to make a couple of remarks about the memorandum of understanding, what I'm saying to the minister is, because of the confusion surrounding that memorandum of understanding between Reed Limited and the government of Ontario and the proposed transfer of assets by Reed Limited to Great Lakes Paper Company Limited and because of the discussions which have taken place and the questions which have been asked, we simply want from the government a clear understanding, in nonlegal terms, as to whether or not the government is saying that we will take performance by Reed, or by Great Lakes, or some part of the performance from Reed and some of it from Great Lakes, Or, as we can say in ancient legal parlance, are they accepting Great Lakes as standing in the shoes of Reed Limited for the purposes of this agreement?

Let's not talk about all the legal gobbledygook. The best lawyers in the world can differ on the question. The worst lawyers can differ on the question. That's not the point.

The point is there is no specific provision at the signature clause of this agreement about any assignment, so it's not in a relatively more common legal form. This only envisages two parties; Her Majesty the Queen in right of Ontario—God bless Her—and Reed Limited. That's all. There are only two parties. It doesn't say anything that one party may assign, or that the agreement will be binding on the heirs, successors and assigns of the parties hereto. It doesn't use any of that jargon at all. It is totally silent with respect to assignment.

I have been taught trite law, simple law, that the benefit of an agreement can be assigned but the burden can't, that the province of Ontario is entitled to performance by Reed Limited and nobody else and that the province is in a clear position where it can say to Reed: "You cannot assign the obligations to perform. We don't have to accept performance of any of the conditions precedent to the licences that are included in this except from you, Reed Limited, and we won't allow you to make a sham of the agreement."

[5:30]

If the government wanted to it could simply say if there has been any proposed assignment of the burden of this agreement to Great Lakes the contract is frustrated and that is the end of it.

Alternatively, the government can say very clearly, "We may not have been a party to the agreement between Reed and Great Lakes, but we have in a sense let them know if Great Lakes takes over the whole of the Reed operation Great Lakes can stand in the shoes of Reed and we, the government of Ontario, will accept it." That would be known in law as an ovation.

The orderly way to do it is for the three parties to sign a document saying that Great Lakes is inserted in place of Reed. Great Lakes perform the agreement and if they live up to that agreement, the government will feel bound to Great Lakes.

Instead of that, we have this continuous mishmash of questions and articles in the press and discussions about all the legalities. I introduced the amendment in an attempt, ineffectual as it likely will be in any event, to put a roadblock before this committee, before the minister, which I am quite prepared to remove if he will make a short, simple, understandable statement with respect to the present position of that agreement.

As to the performance at the present time by Reed, does the government consider the agreement, memorandum of understanding and any additional letters that have been exchanged in good standing as between Reed and the government, and are they going to accept Great Lakes in place of Reed?

It seems to me those questions are quite simple. One of the provisions with respect to termination says, in item (b) of clause 11 of the agreement and I don't want to refer to all the other particular provisions, that the minister, and in this case I think it is the Minister of the Environment, perhaps the Minister of Natural Resources can clarify that for me: "The minister may, on written notice to the company, terminate this memorandum of understanding if, by January 1, 1980, the company"—that is Reed Limited—"has failed to obtain approval of the proposed development referred to in paragraph 2 by the Minister of the Environment." No, it is the Minister of Natural Resources who has the right to give that notice.

I may not have expressed the questions as clearly as I want to, but I think the minister understands that we want to know what the state of that memorandum of understanding is. We are not making any value judgement but until we know its status we have no way of saying what we think the case should be. Will the minister please remove the confusion about this agreement he has allowed to develop through the mysteries of his legal advisers?

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments? Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to repeat what I said in the House on December 3, starting at page 5052 of Hansard. Perhaps I can sum it up by answering three questions.

I explained at the time the deadline of December 31, 1980, would not apply, because Reed did submit an environmental impact study. This was returned saying the rules have now changed and subsequently they were required to produce an environmental assessment, which is quite a different document.

In the meantime, we had also undertaken to produce—within 18 months, I think—a forest inventory of the area which we have not done and still have not forwarded, although almost everything except the inventory is complete. The land crews have completed. It is simply the air photographs which have not yet been assembled. I am advised that consequently that deadline has automatically been extended or, in effect, it is null and void.

The other question is whether the memorandum of understanding, whatever its value, is transferable or not and I have an opinion. I will just read it. It is very short: "In our opinion it would appear that Reed Limited may assign its interest in the above-noted agreement without the crown's consent, since the performance of the agreement does not require any special skill, reputation, knowledge, knowhow or other such quality on the part of Reed Limited that the crown relied upon in entering into the agreement with Reed Limited."

Put another way, that is to say that the Great Lakes Paper Company Limited has the same general skills, expertise and knowledge that Reed Limited has or had, and consequently Great Lakes could perform the obligations under the memorandum in the same fashion as Reed would. I could go on at some further length and quote from what I said in the Legislature, but I think in substance that should answer the two major points which the honourable member has raised.

Mr. Renwick: Let me assume that you as the minister have accepted the legal opinion you got. Are you therefore saying that if Great Lakes performs, it is as if the agreement originally was between Great Lakes and the government?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am.

Mr. Renwick: That's all we wanted to know. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Subject to all the provisos which I touched upon in my letter of November 5 to the chairman, president and chief executive officer of Great Lakes.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I think it is fair to point out as well that we went through this during the minister's estimates. Just so that I have no misunderstanding, nothing is going to be done until the West Patricia land-use study is completed in 1981 and until there is an opportunity for that to be looked at, and also the northern environment commission of Mr. Fahlgren. As I understand it, no licence will automatically be turned over to Great Lakes or whomever when that study is done. I hope I am correct in saying that. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Two more times, Mr. Chairman, and I could recite it by heart. I have it here and I would be delighted to read it again.

Mr. Renwick: I wasn't in the standing resources development committee. Perhaps I could be told what the conditions are which now exist between the minister and Great Lakes. Either repeat it here or tell me where I can find it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: You can find it in Hansard in answer to a question in the Legislature on, I think, December 6, the day of the Treasurer's announcement about the proposed negotiations for the sale of Reed's Dryden operation to Great Lakes. I was asked the question and I think I read virtually all of the letter with the exception of the first part, which said, "I have your letter of November 2 respecting your company's plans and aspirations vis-à-vis Reed Limited," and, "Yours sincerely."

Mr. Renwick: Was that letter tabled in the assembly or in the committee?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It was read in the committee. I will read it again.

Mr. Renwick: No, I am not worried if you will just table the letter.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'll do better, I'll give you a copy. Anyone else want a copy?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Yes, I'll have one if you are handing them out.

Mr. Renwick: I want to say not only was I not at the resources development committee, but I guess I am dense today. Am I to understand that if I were to read the memorandum of understanding and the letter which the minister has just sent to me—and I now understand that Great Lakes stands in the shoes of Reed Limited—then I have all the conditions which exist between Great Lakes and the minister on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen in right of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Except for the change in the environmental provisions because of the change in the legislation.

Mr. Renwick: Is that in some kind of a document as well, or is that just in the legislation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is in the legislation, as I understand it.

Mr. Renwick: So there have been no other documents exchanged with either Reed or Great Lakes except these documents.

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, I think there is a letter from the Treasurer, from which I believe he read, which indicates the position of the province regarding any claims against Reed in excess of $15 million.

Mr. Renwick: Would it be possible for us to have that tabled?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I believe it was tabled by the Treasurer.

Mr. Renwick: Was it read in full? Again, I have the memorandum of understanding. I have the letter which the minister sent over to me and the letter which was read by the Treasurer into the record. Does that tell me the whole story as it exists on December 11?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Except that I believe the member will find the memorandum of understanding refers to an environmental impact study. That has now been superseded by the Environmental Assessment Act which requires a different process.

Ms. Bryden: I would like to ask the minister what the Treasurer meant when he said that Great Lakes would meet environmental standards or even exceed them. What was he referring to when he said environmental standards?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I hate to say this, but I think the person to ask there would be the Treasurer. I heard what he said. I assume he was talking about the current environmental standards, but I would suggest the honourable member ask the Treasurer. I prefer to answer for myself and not for other people.

Ms. Bryden: It seems to me the minister should know what environmental standards are being placed on Great Lakes since it comes under his jurisdiction as well. Reed was under a very specific control order which was issued in August of this year. Presumably that control order died, or will die when Reed transfers the assets. The real question is will a similar control order be put on Great Lakes, or did the Treasurer have other environmental standards in mind.

Hon. Mr. Auld: On that, I think you had better ask the Minister of the Environment. He is the one who put on the order.

Mr. Renwick: In the light of the enlightenment the minister has provided for me about it, I am prepared with the consent of the assembly to withdraw the last amendment I proposed and which is before us.

[5:45]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Renwick has asked permission to withdraw the amendment setting out a new subsection 7. Does the committee agree?

Agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Anything further on section 5?

Anything on section 6(2)(11)?

Mr. T. P. Reid: I want to ask one question, if I may.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: On what section?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Section 8, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall sections 6 and 7 stand as part of the bill?

Sections 6 and 7 agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. T. P. Reid: Under what circumstances does the minister see any reason for variance? I am presuming that anything that happens under section 8 will also be tabled as an amendment to the original agreement as set out in the minister's amendments thereto.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I would describe this as an administrative change. At the present time the procedure for cancelling or varying the term or condition in a licence requires the licensee to surrender the licence and for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to approve the issuance of a new licence. There is quite a time lag to allow the necessary paperwork to take place.

The amendment will permit a change to be made much quicker, with less paperwork and with no hiatus, so the operator will not be in a position of having to close down or operate without a licence.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I fully understand that. But in the case of agreement under this legislation and the licences that may flow from it, will the House be informed when this action is taken as if it were an amendment to the agreement as we discussed earlier?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Really, it's not an amendment. A change in the licence might be required because of the provision in the agreement. It doesn't affect the agreement, but the agreement might affect the licence. I got an affirmative nod.

Mr. T. P. Reid: If you vary the licence, then obviously you are going to be varying the amount of allowable cut and the harvesting and regeneration.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Because of the agreement.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Yes.

Section 8 agreed to.

Sections 9 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: The committee has stacked one vote. I remind the members that there will be a bell up to 10 minutes.

The committee divided on Mr. Renwick's amendment to section 5 of the bill, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 22; nays 68.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

Bill 77, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

METRO TORONTO ASSISTED HOUSING

366. Mr. Dukszta: Would the Minister of Housing please table the financial studies conducted by his ministry, as noted on page 45 of the Metropolitan Toronto social services staff report, Assisted Housing in Metropolitan Toronto—Options for the Future, dated September 27, 1979? (Tabled November 27, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The financial studies referred to on page 45 of the Metropolitan Toronto social services staff report, Assisted Housing in Metropolitan Toronto—Options for the Future, consist of two computer printouts prepared by Metro Toronto staff. These printouts indicate the subsidy impact on the three levels of government of converting 75 per cent and 50 per cent of OHC units in Metro to market rents while the balance remain on rent-geared-to-income. The Ministry of Housing contribution was to supply certain requested information on public housing costs and rents.

Ministry of Housing staff did make some crude estimates of total initial subsidies required to replace each rent-geared-to-income unit lost in public housing projects with a rent supplement unit in the private sector. These estimates indicated that total subsidies for OHC units in Metro would increase by 16 per cent and 10 per cent for the options of converting 75 per cent and 50 per cent respectively of OHC units to market rents.

The Ministry of Housing fully realizes, and so indicated to the Metro representatives, that the above crude cost estimates do not provide sufficient information to make a judgement on either the desirability or feasibility of making such fundamental changes to the public housing system. We are currently involved in investigations that would provide us with better information on the desirability and feasibility of bringing about changes to the income and social mix in public housing.

If requested to do so, I would be pleased to approach Metro Toronto to ask them to release the computer printouts mentioned above.

PUBLICLY ASSISTED HOUSING

367. Mr. Dukszta: Would the Minister of Housing please table a list of Ontario Housing Corporation projects across Ontario with their addresses? Furthermore, would the minister indicate how many assisted units there are in each project? (Tabled November 27, 1979.)

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ONTARIO UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved second reading of Bill 194, An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, Mr. Speaker. I think I made a fairly complete statement before the introduction of the bill last week. I would be prepared to answer questions and comment upon statements honourable members might wish to make.

Mr. Epp: I am surprised the minister doesn't have a statement, but I appreciate the complexity of the bill and the amount of time left for us to finish a number of bills, not only this evening but in the time remaining until the Christmas recess, which should start in a week and a half or thereabouts.

As is probably clear to the minister and everyone in this House, we obviously plan to support this bill. There are, though, a number of points I would like to make.

First of all, it is quite clear this bill supports the principle that is very evident in our country, whereby the wealthy areas give support to the less wealthy areas. Revenue is collected at the provincial level and this is then disbursed to the 837 municipalities in the province.

Many municipalities will receive extra revenue through the resource equalization grant, but many will not. While a municipality which has a per capita assessment of somewhere around $10,650 or more will not receive the resource equalization grant, municipalities which have less than that will receive 60 per cent of the difference. Although there may be good reasons the figure of 60 per cent was chosen, we feel probably a greater portion of this could go to some of the less wealthy municipalities.

I understand the background for the resource equalization grant dates back to 1975 when the former Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. McKeough, tried to consolidate a number of revenue-providing programs. This was done within the resource equalization grant. I thought this was a good move in 1975 and I still think it is a good move, because it helps the less able municipalities. It obviously establishes a greater sense of fairness for those municipalities which lack the industry and commerce that exist in many of the wealthier municipalities.

The point I would like to raise is I think there should be a long-term commitment to this program. Some of the municipalities are uncertain of what they are going to receive from year to year. If the government were in a position to give a commitment of greater certainty of the amount of money municipalities will be receiving, the latter would be better able to plan their future programs and their future commitments to their own citizens on a municipal basis.

I notice we're deviating slightly from what we have had in previous years in that before, the lower-tier municipalities received the grants and they in turn provided them to the upper or the regional municipalities. In this bill, I notice the province is committing their portion directly to the upper-tier municipalities. In other words, the lower-tier municipalities no longer play that intermediary role. I am wondering whether this is another step in the direction of de-emphasizing the importance of the lower-tier municipalities.

If that is the case, I very much regret it because I think it is the lower-tier municipalities which help to provide the base for this province so that we can see from that base we're going to have a fairly good future, providing, as the minister knows that we can continue to get our oil from Alberta.

I want to draw to the minister's attention a letter sent to the provincial government and agencies from a constituent of mine, dated November 2. This particular resident lives in Breslau, in the township of Woolwich. I realize the minister receives a lot of mail and he may not have had a chance to get to this particular letter, but one of this constituent's concerns as a taxpayer was that he pays X number of dollars from which he figures that with a tax of somewhere around the vicinity of $600, some of that would go to the city of Kitchener.

He cites an example of $321 going to the city of Kitchener for a municipal levy, compared to $175.56 which would go to the municipality of Woolwich township and $151 to the city of Kitchener for a regional levy. Of that same amount of money, if he lived in the township of Woolwich, he would pay $225.25 to the region.

Although he is receiving the same amount of regional services as a person living in Kitchener, as a Woolwich resident he would be paying $225.25 compared to a resident in the city of Kitchener who would pay $151. He felt that as a resident of the same region, he should not be paying any more as a rural resident than a person living in an urban municipality pays for those same regional services.

He also cited an example where he would have to pay $442 to the city of Kitchener for the educational levy if he lived in that municipality, compared to $668.94 if he lived in the township of Woolwich. He was again penalized for living in a rural municipality in order to have the same kind of educational services as a person living in the city of Kitchener.

I would think those same kinds of statistics would hold true for other municipalities within the region of Waterloo, or in the regions of Peel, Halton, Niagara or Haldimand-Norfolk, or wherever one lives. A person living in a rural municipality would pay a greater amount of money for educational and regional services than they would be paying for the same kind of services obtained in an urban municipality and I think this is unfair.

When the province went to a regional form of government people were promised equity, fairness and so on. They have been waiting in my own regional municipality for six or seven years. They've been waiting in the regional municipality of Niagara for 10 years. They've been waiting in the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton for about 10 years and they're still not getting it.

I would hope the minister would seriously look at this since he's one of the senior ministers of the crown and one of the senior ministers who has clout in the cabinet as House leader and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. It's such a long title that I think he would carry the weight to persuade his colleagues in the cabinet to bring some kind of equity into this particular system. I would like to obtain from the minister tonight some kind of commitment to do what he can in the ministry to bring a fairness to the people of the region of Waterloo as well as to the people of other regions across the province

With that, I would again reiterate that we plan on supporting this bill as it is printed. We look forward to the minister's making some kind of commitment that he will look at this problem on a long-term basis rather than doing it on a very short-term, ad hoc kind of basis every year.

Mr. Isaacs: First, I would like to welcome the minister to one of our debates on a bill concerning municipal affairs. Unless my memory fails me, this is the first time the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs has personally brought a municipal bill to this House since I've been responsible for municipal affairs for this party.

Having welcomed the minister, I have to say I don't know why he came before us today with a bill of this kind. The effect of this bill, as the minister is well aware, is to undo some of the problems that were caused by the new equalization factors published back in the summer.

When speaking to the PMLC on November 30, the minister went before that august committee and said, "I'm happy to provide you with information on next year's provincial transfers and would also like to give details of the plan for modifying the grant and apportionment effects of the new assessment equalization factors."

That's what this bill is all about. It's to modify a problem the government created because it didn't understand what it was doing when it brought in the new assessment equalization factors. It's to tone down the impact that could see residential and farm communities having to pay a tremendous percentage more in property taxes because of a reduction in grants and because of the changes in apportionment. It seems to me that property taxes are becoming a more and more complex issue and an issue that is more and more of great concern to the people of this province.

I want to make a prediction that the problem is going to get worse, even with this bill. By the end of next year, we will see a situation, if indeed we are still here in this parliament, where the people of this province are prepared to implement a proposition 13 in order to deal with the problem of property taxes, except that in Ontario we don't allow that and we will have to deal with it the other way.

We will have to deal with it by going to the people and telling them how the government has failed them in dealing with property taxes. It's failed them by dealing with those taxes on a piecemeal basis, where in the summer it brings in new factors and in December it brings in a bill to undo the effect of those new factors.

We will go to the people and we will see a change in government so that we can see a progressive move in property taxes; so that we can see a transfer away from that form of revenue for the province and for municipalities; and so that we can put in place a property tax system that is fair and equitable and is based on the ability of municipalities and property tax payers to pay, rather than sponging them of every available thing.

[8:15]

Mr. Speaker, the timing of this bill is absolutely incredible to me. On November 30 the announcement was made to the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee, following by a couple of days a letter that had been sent out to municipal treasurers. Almost a full week later the announcement was made in this House and the bill was introduced.

It is impossible to deal with the very serious problem of property taxes in the time that remains available to us before this bill takes effect on January 1 of the new year. We cannot continue with the system we have in place now. We cannot continue to deal with property tax changes at so late a date in the year preceding the municipalities' fiscal year. We cannot continue to muddle through so that municipal governments never know what is coming next and never have an idea as to how much they are going to have to raise locally and how much they will be obtaining from the province.

This would be an ideal bill to send to committee so that the municipalities could come before us to tell us what they think of it and what they think of the grant-sharing system it puts in place. We already know the Association of Municipalities of Ontario is so strongly opposed to the system the minister is implementing for 1980 that it has withdrawn from PMCL. We know from the demonstration last week by the group from Frontenac county that even the small rural municipalities realize there is a very serious problem in this government's handling of the property tax issue. We know that nowhere in this province will you find people in municipal government who are content with the property tax system.

The timing has a second serious implication. Many municipal governments have already struck their spending estimates for next year. They are already either in committee or even before council for last-minute changes. Those estimates exist because this is not an election year and councils have had an opportunity to work on their budgets and have estimates in place. What is going to happen when they manage to get through the very complex calculations and find out what the impact of this bill will be on their municipalities?

What is going to happen is that they will cut in the only places they can cut with such incredibly short notice, the social service programs, the programs for senior citizens, the recreational programs and cultural programs, things that should not be cut, that should be considered as part of the overall program of the municipal council; and yet they have no option because they are not enabled to plan.

Mr. J. Johnson: What is your option?

Mr. Isaacs: I am interested to hear the comments as to what the activities of municipal governments should be. If the member is suggesting that programs for senior citizens and programs for children are the things that should be cut, as I heard him say—

Mr. J. Johnson: I am asking you to suggest what should be done. What should be cut?

Mr. Isaacs: Nothing should be cut. The grants that are provided from the honourable member's government to the municipal councils should be in place in sufficient time for the municipalities to plan their programs properly, instead of having to make the last-minute cuts caused by this kind of last-minute legislation.

There have been explanatory meetings held for municipal staffs right across this province, and at those meetings the municipal staffs and any elected officials that wanted to attend—up to a maximum of three persons per municipality—have been shown the form for calculating their grants for 1980. They have not been told what their grant will be. They have been given an eight-page, closely typed form, far more horrendous than any income tax form that anyone here has ever seen, in order to calculate their grants, and it is going to be several weeks yet before municipalities are even able to wade their way through that.

If we did not proceed with this bill, if we went ahead under the system of unconditional grants that existed for 1979 and worked reasonably well for 1979 when we did not have the new equalization factors, if we went ahead without this bill, the burden placed on some municipalities because of tremendous cuts in provincial grants would be intolerable. The residents and businesses, particularly small businesses, of those municipalities simply would not be able to afford to pay the property taxes to keep the municipality alive and functioning. So we have no option but to look at this bill in that light.

The bill puts in place a formula, not directly but through ministerial discretion, for calculating the unconditional grants that municipal councils will receive next year. Wading through the material in the bill leads me to recall that when one was in school doing science experiments and didn't get the answer one wanted, one introduced a thing generally known as the fudge factor. The fudge factor was put there in order to adjust the experimental results one got to give the answer one needed in order to pass. That's what this bill is. It is a fudge factor to deal with the equalization factors that don't work properly, in order to give a system of grants that will pass, at least for 1980.

Mr. J. Johnson: And you are the fudge expert.

Mr. Isaacs: The member for Waterloo North talked about a long-term commitment. Yes, a long-term commitment is needed so that municipalities are guaranteed an amount of revenue that increases as costs increase and so they will understand that that figure will be there from one year to the next. They do not need what is contained in this bill as a long-term commitment.

It is my understanding from comments made by the minister and his colleague the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) that we will see some kind of new system for 1981. Some days in this House it seems to me that new system might actually be something we could sit down and talk about, perhaps even welcome. On other days, particularly in the last 10 days or so, some of the comments have suggested to me that it is just going to be another series of fudge factors. That is not what we need. We need a proper review of grants, a proper review of the property tax system; we need something that is fair and equitable for the people and businesses of this province.

This bill today is the only way to escape a very serious problem created by the government. We will be supporting this bill on second reading but we will ask that it go to committee of the whole House where we will introduce an amendment that makes it very clear that we believe the program proposed in this bill should run for one year only so the government realizes it has to come in with a new program in time to be considered by this House, in time to receive response from municipal government, in time for everyone across this province to understand where we are going with property taxes and in time to be implemented for 1981.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other member wishing to participate in the debate? If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to comment on some of the remarks that have been made.

It has been drawn to our attention that with this bill we are changing from paying the resource equalization grant to just the lower-tier municipalities, to paying to the lower- and upper-tier municipalities. As I am sure my friend realizes, the practice heretofore has been to pay the lower tier and have the lower tier credit a certain amount to the upper tier, be it a county or a region. The process now is to make a little clearer exactly where that money is going and to pay the resource equalization grant to the upper-tier municipality as well as to the lower tier, then the upper-tier municipality will take that into account in apportioning its costs to the lower tier. It's really to make it a little clearer and to make it obvious to everyone that the upper tier municipality is actually benefiting from the resource equalization grant also.

In regard to the matter raised about the problem in the region of Waterloo. I would like to say I certainly can sympathize with that. I think we have all had that kind of problem brought to our attention and we would all like to see it solved. Perhaps the problem will only be solved when we arrive at some completely workable and true property tax reform with market value assessment. All I can say to my friend now is certainly those are the reforms I want to see brought in, so those kinds of differences will not occur and people with the same kind of home in a region be they in a rural area—

Mr. Lawlor: You have been wanting to say it for an awfully long time.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, we are still working and in the fullness of time I have every confidence we can come close to solving that particular problem.

I just want to say I was very interested in the comments of the member for Wentworth because I think his comments tended to be a little more negative and I wasn't sure from his comments whether he really wanted to support this bill, although he finally came around to saying he would support it in principle. I think he realizes he wouldn't want his party to be responsible for not having this bill passed.

First, I would say I think while we would all like the information to be made available a little sooner, I think the municipalities themselves would rather have us take a little more time to prepare that information and to prepare the details of our transfer payments than have some information earlier and perhaps not have it as complete or as full as it should be.

Under this year's transfer payments, we are transferring, in the resource equalization grant, a fairly substantial amount of money. In the total unconditional grants it seems to me we are transferring something very close to about 10 per cent over last year.

It is very interesting; the Association of Municipalities of Ontario decided it wouldn't participate in the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee because we couldn't come to any agreement on a formula and yet we're probably transferring as much money or more this year than we would have under the formula. I know the members have heard the statement made, "We would rather have the formula and less money." It's a great statement to make after the fact. I am not sure anybody in the municipal side really believes that.

The fact remains that this government, notwithstanding our restraint program, is transferring a sizeable amount of money to municipalities and we are doing it under this legislation with a set of modifications which I think take out some of the real inequities the new equalization factors present.

We could argue all night as to whether we should have brought in those factors, whether they are correct factors and whether they are calculated in a proper way. The fact remains, those factors created an inequity. They put a burden on the rural areas of this province and took it off the urban areas. They created an inequity by taking certain assessment and certain tax powers off the commercial and industrial areas and put it on residential—inequities we couldn't allow to happen and which will be modified by this bill.

I would like to reiterate, Mr. Speaker, as I said in my statement to this House and to the PMLC, it is our intention between now and July when the Assessment Act provides that my colleague, the Minister of Revenue, must bring in new assessment factors for next year, to have a system that will be more in line with what I think every member of this House wants and the municipalities want and that system will be developed with municipal expertise. Municipal people will be working on it—

Mr. Conway: July will surely be the millennium.

Hon. Mr. Wells: By July it will be here. If the member would like we can all be sitting here in the House waiting with bated breath to receive that new system.

Mr. Conway: We'll be here; you may not be.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think we will be here just as we are today. I have every confidence that will be it. I will be most happy to be here in July, as I am sure my friend will be. We will tell the member then exactly how the new system will work.

Mr. Cooke: What about the Windsor situation?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Windsor situation is the other side of the coin. The very wealthy municipality of Windsor—

Mr. Cooke: I only wish.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I had a good meeting with the mayor of Windsor the other day. While Windsor again isn't going to get the whole pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, I think Windsor will find it is going to be fairly treated.

Mr. Cooke: Are we going to get our $8 million?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, they are not going to get their $8 million, but they will get at least as much as they got last year.

Mr. Cooke: Less than $8 million is not fair.

Hon. Mr. Wells: With those few words, I would like to say I appreciate the support from both parties for this bill. I would be happy to have it have second reading now. We can go into committee presently to consider the clauses in the bill.

Mr. J. Reed: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure all the members in the House would be interested to know that just a few minutes ago the government's kissing cousins in Ottawa placed an excise tax of 25 cents a gallon on gasoline and 17 cents on diesel fuel.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF PEEL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved second reading of Bill 195, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, 1973.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This is a bill to accomplish something the regional municipality of Peel and the municipality of Mississauga have agreed to and both would like. Unfortunately, it appeared earlier in a version that was not acceptable to all the parties.

This bill to amend the Regional Municipality of Peel Act is now a version which is acceptable to both the municipality of Mississauga and the region of Peel. What it does is allow the local municipalities in the region of Peel to carry out the function of industrial promotion. It still preserves for the upper municipality, which heretofore has had the sole responsibility of industrial promotion, the power to carry on promotion of the region in a variety of ways which a region would wish to carry out, yet, as I understand is the wish of the region, not carry out direct industrial promotion. In other words, it preserves the region's right to carry out promotion of the region and it transfers to the lower-tier municipalities in the region of Peel the power to carry out industrial promotion.

Mr. Epp: I am certainly grateful to my colleague, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed), for drawing this very important matter to the attention of this House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a principle of this bill.

Mr. Bolan: It is a principle of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Epp: I am glad to be able to speak on Bill 195 which the province is bringing forward now, after withdrawing Bill 158 which also dealt with the municipality of Peel. I was surprised to learn, in dealing with the compendium and with the literature the minister and the government of this province have put before us, nowhere was there reference to Bill 158, which the government withdrew only a month ago and which dealt with this very same issue. The government has obviously done a flip-flop on this matter because it withdrew the bill after the parliamentary assistant to the minister made a motion in this House, which was supported by the government and the NDP, to withdraw that section. I'm very surprised that only a short time later it has brought in another bill which deals with the same subject.

Obviously, what is before us here is the request by the regional municipality of Peel and the area municipality of Mississauga to give to the various area municipalities the right to publicize or advertise lands which they have for industrial development. The bill is written slightly differently from the other one. In fact, I almost think they're trying to mislead us a little because when you compare the two bills, it's a little more—

Mr. Gregory: Have you lost your place?

Mr. Epp: No, I didn't lose my place. It's deliberately more inclusive in that an area municipality can publicize these lands as industrial, agricultural, business, educational, residential or vacation centres, whereas the regional municipality can publicize them as agricultural, business, educational, residential or vacation centre lands. In the other bill we referred more specifically to industrial land and in this one we give the impression that both are treated equally, but in fact they're not. For publicity purposes that is the case but for ownership it is not the case. In other words, the local municipality does not have in this bill, as it had in the other bill which the government then tried to amend, the right to own industrial land. This is where the change comes and this is why the government withdrew the former bill.

That's most unfortunate; however, we have no particular choice in this. The local municipality and the region have indicated—and particularly the local municipality—that, although they would like to own land, they will not have the opportunity to own land because the province will not go that extra step. Mr. Speaker, I know you're concerned about this matter because it concerns a very important principle for this province; that is, local autonomy for the municipalities. The government is not going far enough in this particular piece of legislation. We're caught between the devil and the deep blue sea because we're going to have to support this piece of legislation and give the municipality half a loaf rather than a whole loaf, unfortunately.

Without much ado, we will support this bill. We do regret the fact that the government hasn't permitted local municipalities to own industrial land, nevertheless we'll have to wait another year or two before we can give them that prerogative, that particular legal right which they obviously should have. Other municipalities have it. In my own regional municipality of Waterloo, local municipalities can own industrial land and can build on it, expand on it, advertise and promote anything they wish. In other words, there is competition within the region between the various local municipalities. That, I think, is healthy, wholesome and good if we believe in a free-enterprise system.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, this bill somehow seems to have had a long and tortuous history in this House, all of which has taken place this fall. As the member for Waterloo North indicated, we first of all dealt with this matter when we were dealing with the Act respecting Certain Regional Municipalities. At that time there was an obvious flaw in wording in the bill and the parliamentary assistant brought in an amendment that was designed to clean up that wording. That amendment was defeated because we do not support the principle of this bill and because my colleagues on the right joined with us in opposing the amendment. Following that defeat, the minister withdrew the section of the bill entirely, which was appropriate because the wording was so bad, and came back with another bill. That one stayed on the Order Paper for a while and was then withdrawn and replaced by this bill.

It is important that we look at what this bill is trying to do and that we look at it in the context of the entire province of Ontario. I don't blame the regional municipality of Peel or the city of Mississauga for seeking what this bill enables them to do: that is, have three separate industrial development commissions instead of one, or to apportion the cost of one or more industrial development commissions unevenly across the entire region by making them a lower-tier responsibility rather than an upper-tier responsibility.

I don't blame them for doing that, because with the financial situation municipalities are facing, they are going out to seek all available industrial development. But in so doing they are competing with each other for the very limited amount of growth happening in this province. And they are doing so because it is the only way they can bring anything in the way of decent tax increases to their own municipalities.

But to allow free enterprise between governments seems to me to be the height of absurdity. This bill seems to contradict everything regional government in Peel was put in place to try to achieve when those governments are within one region and when regional government was established to enable municipalities to work together towards a common goal rather than compete with one another.

We have a very serious problem with industrial development at the present time and we have that problem because it is completely out of the provincial government's control. Municipalities are competing; they are putting in sewers and services and all the incentives they are allowed to put in to attract development and in doing so they are costing taxpayers right across this province a considerable amount of money. They are ensuring that the development of this province in an industrial and commercial sense will be disorderly rather than orderly.

An official plan is needed for Ontario. We need to designate where industrial growth should be encouraged to go, where it should be permitted to go and where it should not be permitted to go, except, perhaps, for growth of existing industry or for small business. We believe the provincial government having put that in place then has a responsibility to promote not one municipality, not one region, but the entire province and to put in place a climate that ensures jobs will be provided for the citizens of this province and that the economy of the province will be built to a state far better than that which is the result of 37 years of Tory rule.

The bill is moving in entirely the wrong direction. It is furthering the competition. It is putting the municipalities within Peel in an incredible situation where they will or could be competing with each other. It will be encouraging them to compete with Metropolitan Toronto, drawing industry from Metropolitan Toronto at the expense of the taxpayers of this province.

We cannot support the bill and we would urge the government to go in the reverse direction, putting in place a provincial plan and an industrial development strategy for this province that properly serves all taxpayers instead of allowing an absurd system of competition between the municipal levels of government. We will be opposing the bill.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, I feel it is appropriate that I say a word or two since this bill directly concerns the riding I represent.

Mr. Epp: Part of it.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I wish certain members would not heckle me. I'm not going to hurt them. We didn't even call for a vote because there are no members in the House.

Mr. Nixon: You should, you know; there are only three to one.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: We're being nice.

I would like to comment on this because of some of the comments of the member for Wentworth who obviously knows nothing about Mississauga. He wouldn't know Mississauga if he tripped over it. He really has no knowledge about the industrial situation in Mississauga or in Peel.

[8:45]

Before there was ever even a region of Peel or a region of Hamilton-Wentworth or anywhere else, Mississauga always had a history of being very successful in attracting industrial growth within its borders. I know that's in total opposition to the member's philosophy. The member feels the provincial government or some other government somewhere, some power on high, should impose industrial development on areas. I firmly believe it is the right of a municipality itself to select whether it wants industrial growth, rather than have a provincial government, through a so-called province-wide official plan, impose that industrial growth on it. I don't feel that way.

Mr. Warner: You don't believe in planning.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I think the member would find that the region of Peel, and particularly the city of Mississauga, is probably the most highly-planned area, including the one we're in at the present time, of any in Ontario. They have an official plan for the region of Peel which has been submitted to the provincial government. Industrial growth in the region of Peel is planned. They're doing very well, thank you very much. I think they will do even better. The only thing that is going to interfere is if people with attitudes like that of the member destroy that.

We're quite happy to have growth promoted in Mississauga. The region of Peel is the second-level government body of three successful communities—Mississauga, Brampton and Caledon. They're all Tory, by the way, which is unusual. I guess that's because they're successful.

As a matter of fact, we have even gone so far as to determine what the people there wanted. That's something the member's party never does. They don't worry about what the people want. We have found that the region of Peel, the city of Mississauga, the city of Brampton and the town of Caledon want precisely what this bill is going to do.

I would be really and truly delighted if the members opposite divided on this. I would love to have them on record the way they truly believe. I don't think they do truly believe anything. They flip-flop all over the place. I would be pleased if the members divided on this. I would love to take it home to Mayor McCallion and those people in the region of Peel. There is the odd deluded soul who sometimes agrees with their philosophy. There are very few of them, but even in the region of Peel—Tory Peel—there is the odd New Democrat. They are hard to find. We try to jail them when we find them.

If the members would divide on this, I would love to have it on record.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think my colleague from Mississauga East has put the case very well as to why we want this bill. I would just like to correct a couple of things that have been mentioned during this debate. I'm not even going to get into the whole argument about this hogwash about an official plan for Ontario and the dictatorial placement of industry and so forth.

I notice my friend and colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere nodding his head and saying that's great. He should do that when he comes out and talks with the industrial commissioner in Scarborough who is very vigorously promoting our municipality of Scarborough, as I believe he should and as I'm sure he wants it promoted, just as I want it promoted. I see nothing unhealthy in the borough of Scarborough promoting and the city of Mississauga promoting industrial growth and industry coming to this province and finding that area it wants to settle in.

I want to say the city of Mississauga does not want the power, as the region has, to buy and hold industrial lands.

Mr. Epp: They've said they probably wouldn't get it if they asked for it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No. That's not right. That's absolutely wrong. I asked the mayor if that's what they wanted and she said they did not want to hold industrial land. They wanted the region to have that. Let's get that very straight. All they want is the power to carry out industrial promotion, to have an industrial commissioner and so forth.

We're doing exactly what they want. We're not denying them anything. We are supporting local autonomy.

Mr. Epp: Would you give it to them if they asked for it tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would certainly consider it, if that's what they wanted, but they don't want it. They want it left the way it is.

I have two letters here written to my parliamentary assistant. The first one is from the mayor of Mississauga, saying she has looked over the bill and both her solicitor and the solicitor for the region are happy with the draft. The other one is from Frank Bean, the chairman, saying: "I appreciate your co-operation and that of the minister in providing an opportunity to comment on the draft legislation. I have discussed the draft legislation with the mayors of Brampton and Caledon and we find it acceptable. I would appreciate being advised of the progress of the bill through the Legislature."

Mrs. Campbell: That sure is great enthusiasm.

Hon. Mr. Wells: My friend from St. George says, "That's great enthusiasm." What it is is local autonomy. With this bill, we're doing exactly what the local area wants.

Mrs. Campbell: You won't give them what they want.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Why does the member for St. George say we won't give them what they want? We're giving them exactly what they want. They do not want the right to buy and hold industrial land, they want the right to promote it. They're getting that right in this bill. I suggest that all members of the House who believe in true, local, municipal autonomy will vote with us on this bill.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

ONTARIO UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 194, An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, do you have any comments to start with?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does any member wish to speak to any particular section of the bill? The member for Wentworth.

On section 1:

Mr. Isaacs: I have an amendment to section 1. I have copies for the minister and the critics of the Liberal Party. Its intent is the same as the amendment I gave them earlier today but the Legislative Counsel recommended minor changes in wording.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 9(1) of the act as set out in section 1 of the bill be amended by striking out "in each year" in the first line and substituting in lieu thereof "in 1980."

Mr. Isaacs: The amendment makes it very clear that this act deals with 1980 only and the authority for unconditional grants, if this amendment is approved tonight as I expect it to be, will expire at the end of 1980. We believe the current mess in property taxes and unconditional grants has to be resolved in a very major way for 1981.

In his comments earlier the minister indicated that he indeed was prepared to look at bringing in changes to the system of grants and to the system of equalization factors when he brings in the new factors in the summer of 1980. That may not be early enough, given that municipal councils are not yet involved in a process to deal with new grant components. They are not yet involved in a process to review the property tax system we have. They are not yet involved in a process to ensure that the distribution of grants and the apportionment of costs between municipalities will be fair in 1981, where it is unfair in 1980.

I find it strange that the minister is promising the new system will be with us by the summer of 1980, when no one seems to know what is going on at the present time. It is inconceivable to everyone to whom I have spoken that the property tax system can be revised in time for an announcement in July 1980.

We would certainly like to see the work was going on. We would certainly like to see municipal government being involved in it and we would like to have an indication of the direction the government is taking. They have failed very miserably to provide an indication of that direction.

The minister earlier referred to the formula that was requested by the AMO and over which they withdrew from the PMLC. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the people who are representing AMO on PMLC are in general people I would describe as being in support of the government. It must give the minister very great concern when his own friends from the municipal level of government are treating him so badly.

We believe this amendment will ensure that municipalities will have a guarantee of a new system of raising revenues and of receiving grants for 1981. We believe that if the bill is left without the amendment, there is every possibility we will stumble along through 1980, into 1981 and into a property tax mess that is intolerable, not just to the government, but to every citizen of the province.

That is why we see the amendment as being so important. It provides the guarantee the people of the province need that a new system will be in place for 1981. I want to back that up very quickly, Mr. Chairman, with a comment that if indeed, as the minister has suggested, we are still here and in exactly this form in July 1980 and possibly even later in 1980, then we will not be prepared to accept another bill in the same form as Bill 194 for 1981. We will refuse at that time to go along with the shenanigans of the government in the property tax field and we will turn to the people and ask them to decide whether they want a responsible approach to property taxes, or whether they want the kind of mess contained in this bill and in everything that goes along with it.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment limits the effect of the bill with regard to unconditional grants to one year, and I very much hope the minister will accept this amendment as a show of good faith to the municipal level of government and to the people of this province in regard to his commitment to bring in a new system of grants and a new system of apportionment for 1981.

Mr. Cooke: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, I want to support this amendment and I want to support it for the reason that in the short debate I heard on second reading of this bill there was discussion about the municipalities that would have a shift in taxation and would get less money from the government, were the resource equalization grants properly distributed.

In my home town of Windsor we have been taken advantage of by this government for a number of years now; I think the total amount the provincial government now owes us is close to $60 million. This year alone it would be $8 million and the minister says we may get as much as $3 million of the $8 million they owe us. That simply isn't acceptable to the people of Windsor.

I hope the minister will accept this amendment. Next year my party will not support this kind of Band-Aid treatment for the property tax system in this province.

Property tax is a very regressive form of tax. We get regressive taxes from the provincial government and, of course, tonight we heard from the federal government which is implementing former Liberal policies and further regressive taxes through the increase of the excise tax. We get them from the federal government and we get them from the provincial government. The people of this province and the people of Windsor are sick and tired of it. They won't take it again.

The one-year extension is acceptable to the people in this party; it is not completely acceptable to me, but none the less, my caucus has accepted it. Next year you can be sure we won't support that kind of ridiculous legislation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would like to comment on this amendment. It has been suggested that acceptance of this amendment would be a show of good faith to the municipalities of this province, that, I think it was phrased, "we mean what we say." I think the municipalities of this province already know we mean what we say when we bring in something that will be more effective and more useful to them next July when the new factors come in.

I just want to say that I believe, Mr. Chairman, acceptance of this amendment would cause a deterioration of a situation which my friend has already pointed out. He is really saying: Vote for an amendment tonight that says to the municipalities that after the year 1980 there will no longer be any more resource equalization grants. That is a lot of nonsense. You are taking another part of the whole municipal unconditional grant structure and saying there are going to be no more REGs. The section you are amending is the general section that has been in the Unconditional Grants Act since 1975 and which provides the general authority to pay the resource equalization grants.

The problem we have this year is not the resource equalization grants, it is the equalization factors and how they are used in the computation of the resource equalization grants. In fact, as far as municipalities are concerned, the use of those factors, while it is important and certainly it is to the resource equalization grant, is even 10 times more important to the calculation of the general legislative grant.

We are talking about roughly $150 million transferred to municipalities in resource equalization grants provided for under this legislation, a policy of this government since 1975. We are talking about over $2 billion transferred by the Ministry of Education in the general legislative grant and we are talking about procedures in this bill today to modify the bad impact of the new equalization factors on the resource equalization grant.

To suggest we are not going to have a resource equalization grant in this province after next year is nonsense. It would further confuse the municipalities of this province if that were to happen. Therefore, I have to tell my friend there is just no way we could accept that amendment. We believe the resource equalization grant, even in the new system that we bring in, may be part of the total package of unconditional grants which we are working towards and even hope to increase for the municipalities.

I am afraid we can't accept that amendment because we believe resource equalization grants should remain—at least in the minds of the municipalities and in the minds of the people of this province, if not in the minds of the members of the New Democratic Party—as part of the grant package of this province until we are ready to replace them.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I guess I can clearly indicate we cannot support this amendment for the simple reason that in trying to take one step forward it is taking about 27 steps backwards.

I think what the municipalities want in this province—and I was a municipal councillor for almost 10 years—is a permanent legislative commitment as to the kinds of grants and the extent of those grants they will receive from the province. By suggesting that by limiting this particular act to 1980 and forcing the government of this province to come back to the representatives in this Legislative Assembly next year to ask for additional moneys to give the municipalities for 1981 is like asking the municipalities to get on their knees in front of the province every year.

I believe, and this party believes, that we need a long-term commitment, something we have been after this province for many, many months, both in conditional and unconditional grants. They are not receiving that; they are receiving part of that in the resource equalization grants. There is no way that this party, the Liberal Party of the province, which hopes and plans to and certainly anticipates forming the government of this province within the next 12 to 24 months, will in any way support a suggestion that we go on a stopgap, one-year measure of paying the municipalities.

So we cannot support this particular amendment. When the opportunity arises we intend to go on a much longer-term basis.

I want to correct a perception left earlier by the minister in dealing with this particular matter in resource equalization when he said in December 1979 that is the earliest they can really present the transfer payments, the resource equalization formula for the municipalities. I might point out to him that his predecessor, on September 16, 1977, announced the transfer payments to the various municipalities. I would hope he would put pressure on those who are responsible for delaying this measure. Because of the equalization factors there may be some reason for having it somewhat delayed this year, but I would hope they plan on having it announced much earlier next year so that municipalities can plan a little earlier.

Mr. Charlton: Through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister and to the Liberal member who just spoke. We have no quarrel with resource equalization grants and I think the minister is well aware of that. We are unfortunately forced to deal with the bill that is in front of us here. We are forced to deal with the situation; for 10 years we have been in an ever-worsening situation.

The minister made some remark in his comments about confidence on the part of the municipalities. There isn't very much confidence there at all. The fact that if this amendment were to pass it would put a limiting factor of one year on the section that deals with resource equalization grants would in no way prohibit this government and this minister, when they come back next July and announce their new and complete package, from again including this kind of a grant structure if they feel it is an appropriate part of this new package they are going to bring in.

I speak now to the members of the Liberal caucus. The intent of this amendment is to try and deal with a situation we discussed at length last week when the Liberals referred the assessment bill to the general government committee. It concerned the ad hoc nature of what has been going on in property taxation and municipal finance. The Liberals at that point expressed a very, very sincere desire to get on with the job and straighten out the mess and make things clear to municipalities and fair to them.

This government has proved beyond any shadow of a doubt—and we would like to believe the government but they won't sit down and talk to us effectively about the direction in which they are heading, the kinds of things they are looking at. They leave us in the dark; they leave the municipalities in the dark. They don't answer questions when we ask them except to say, "We are going to do something new in 1981." They expect us to have blind-faith confidence, when the record shows quite clearly that that confidence is not warranted. We spent 10 or 12 years trying to have confidence in a government we thought set out to implement property tax reform in this province. We haven't got it and the problem we are having this year is a result of the fact that we do not have property tax reform.

I say to my Liberal colleagues and to the member for Waterloo North who just spoke, I suggested when we discussed this whole situation in committee last week and I suggest again now that the only way we are going to get to the long-term solution is to start forcing some of the issues instead of hiding from them.

Mr. Isaacs: I want to make a couple of comments in support of the amendment and in response to the comments made by the minister and the Liberal critic.

The member for Waterloo North, on behalf of the Liberal Party, talked about setting in place rather than providing a one-year, stopgap measure. I want to suggest to him through you, Mr. Chairman, that if what is contained in this bill is what the Liberal Party wants to set in place as the system for paying unconditional grants, then the people of this province are going to hurt very, very badly when the new equalization factors come in in July of next year. If the system this bill proposes is allowed to remain in place for 1981 with simply a new round of equalization factors, the transfer of burden to residential and farm communities in general is going to become very serious indeed.

We are suggesting that we deal with this as an emergency measure. It has been brought to us by the government at the very last minute and with inadequate consultation with the municipalities—in fact, essentially no consultation—and with no real opportunity to get to the roots of the property tax problem. We are suggesting we treat this as an emergency measure rather than setting in place a system that no municipal council and no taxpayer—if we could find a way to explain this to at least a percentage of the taxpayers—in this province wants as a long-term program. We are suggesting we guarantee it is a one-year program and then introduce and deal with a new system for 1981.

The minister suggested perhaps we didn't understand the impact of this amendment and that it would mean no resource equalization grants for 1981. We understand that very clearly, but we are fed up with promises from the government, fed up with hearing that there will be a new system next year. "Let's just postpone it one more year," they say, as they did with market value assessment in the bill discussed just a few weeks ago. That was a one-year postponement.

We are saying let's deal with a one-year situation and have an assurance that the government must come back to this House to deal with grants for 1981. This mechanism is the easiest, simplest and clearest way to do that. Municipal governments and taxpayers will understand very clearly that we are suggesting to them that, of course, grants will continue, but that there will be a new program in place for 1981, as the minister has promised, and this House will have the opportunity to debate that new system and make sure it is put in place.

I want to make one more remark with regard to the idea that this bill is going to be here for years and is going to be a continuing system for paying municipalities. The very section we are amending contains a description of how to calculate the resource equalization grant and says, "the amount of grant shall be based . . . on the proportion that 60 per cent of such deficiency of equalized assessment per capita bears to the prescribed standard equalized assessment per capita as applied to the net levy of the lower-tier municipality." I hope the minister understood that, because that's what is in his bill. The problem is that any change to the equalization factors next year will automatically require that that section be amended, because that section is dependent on the total amount of money available and the total effect of all the equalization factors.

That 60 per cent is not a number that is geared to the particular philosophy about providing grants. It's a number that arises out of the emergency situation we have and enables the government to use the amount of money it has allocated to resource equalization grants to provide municipalities with a buffer against the effects of the new equalization factors plus an annual increment for increases in the cost of living.

So that particular section will have to be amended anyway for 1981, Mr. Chairman, but we want to be sure that the whole matter is looked at again in detail and that we do not just have a government amendment that says that in section 9(1) of the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act you change 60 per cent to 62.3 per cent. We want not just to deal with that one tiny number, but to open up the whole issue of grants and equalization factors and collection of revenue from the property tax payers of this province to a full debate in the House and perhaps in committee, where the municipalities and the tax experts from across the province and the ordinary taxpayers who are concerned about property taxes and the amount for which they're being hit in their pocket books can come before us and tell us and the government that this kind of playing around is not good enough and we need a good, long-term program, perhaps even a formula, as has been suggested by AMO.

This amendment is to ensure, as best as we can with the bill that's before us, that that full and complete public and municipal debate takes place next year before we get into this mess again. I would urge the Liberal Party and the minister to recommend their position and to say to themselves, "Would it not make more sense for us to go to the municipalities and taxpayers and to say, 'We are going to look at the property tax system for 1981 and to show our good faith we have accepted an amendment that says that this mess is for one year only and we will come back with a new and complete long-term system for 1981'”?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, I just want quickly to draw three or four things to my friend's attention. First of all, the 60 per cent has been in there since 1975. It's not something new that has been added for this particular year because section 9, sub-sections 1 and 2 as they appear now have been in the act since 1975 and provide for a resource equalization grant.

If parts of that section have to be amended next year, so be it; I have no problem in doing that. I just have a problem in taking out the words “in each year” and putting in that there'll only be a resource equalization grant for 1980 and after that it depends upon another bill in this Legislature. I think we need the stability of people knowing that that unconditional grant will remain; the way it's calculated may vary.

The member has asked though about the special measures that are in this bill for this year. Indeed, I would think the member would at least give us credit for that because all the special measures that are in this bill for this year have 1980 in them, so they cannot be used for next year.

We've said this program for modifying the equalization factors for this year is not meant as a phase-in. It's not meant as a standard upon which we will base future years' programs. It's a this-year-only program and 1980 appears in sections 2, 6, and those sections that apply to the modification and adjustments for this special program this year. I just say to my friend that tinkering with section 9 of the act is, I think, too much and something we can't accept.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Isaac's amendment to section 9(1) of the act as set out in section 1 of the bill will please say “aye.”

Those opposed will please say “nay.”

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

ARCHITECTS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 176, An Act to amend the Architects Act.

Mr. Sterling: Since second reading of this bill, I have provided members opposite with an explanation as to the sections of the Architects Act which relate to this particular amendment, sections which make this necessary in order to achieve the purpose of providing architects with a tool for offering their services within a corporation to foreign or offshore clients.

I hope the explanation has been satisfactory and invite comments from the members opposite if they have any further questions.

Mrs. Campbell: I do want to express my appreciation for the explanation forwarded to me by the parliamentary assistant. I think the major problem in trying to read the purpose of this bill was really the explanatory note which confused me, certainly, in trying to cope with the meaning of it.

I found the explanation to be quite satisfactory and we will not oppose this bill.

Mr. Warner: Like my colleague from St. George, I also appreciate the explanatory memorandum which was sent over. Had this explanatory memorandum been appended to the bill when we received it the first time, we would not have had to come back here tonight. Unfortunately, the bill as it was originally tabled and the notes with it did not sufficiently explain the purpose of the bill. That led to prolonged discussion the last time we sat here.

I am certainly satisfied with the information provided during the past week. As far as we are concerned this bill can be passed without amendment.

Bill 176 reported.

UNIFIED FAMILY COURT AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 180, An Act to amend the Unified Family Court Act, 1976.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that section 24 of the act, as re-enacted in section 1 of the bill, be deleted and the following substituted therefor: “24. This act is repealed on July 1, 1982.”

Mrs. Campbell: Again, I would like to express my appreciation to the parliamentary assistant. During our earlier debate on this bill I expressed my very deep concern that by leaving the repeal at the election of the Lieutenant Governor in Council we were really removing any kind of pressure in the provincial-federal discussions about the extension of the project, or indeed in getting on with whatever we might be doing or able to do in this province.

It seemed to me we needed a firm date and I expressed that wish. Therefore, the fact that this amendment is before us is totally acceptable to us. Again, my appreciation to the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Warner: It is a great pleasure to see that the debate which we had on the previous occasion had some positive effect. Quite frankly, the government doesn't often respond favourably to arguments put forward by the opposition members. In this case, it did.

The member for St. George and I and others argued that we really shouldn't have a perpetual pilot project, which the unified family court in Hamilton appeared to be. It would assist everyone involved if we could have a termination date placed in the legislation. We made the arguments and there is no point in going back over them.

The parliamentary assistant has responded quite admirably and come back with an amendment which I can enthusiastically support.

Motion agreed to.

Bill 180, as amended, reported.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 173, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Sections 1 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 8 be amended by deleting the words "that is licensed or funded under an act of the Parliament of Canada or the province of Ontario in subsection 1(a) of section 386a of the said act."

[9:30]

Mr. Isaacs: There are all kinds of group homes. There are all kinds of organizations that could seek to set up a group home within a municipality.

As the parliamentary assistant who is looking after this bill on behalf of the minister is aware, the city of Toronto had been wanting to put in its own private bill a definition for group homes that subsequently would have allowed the city, by bylaw, to describe what a group home is.

Not every group home is licenced under an act of the Parliament of Canada or the province of Ontario. Group homes can be set up by organizations—very legitimate and usually charitable organizations—to care for people who fall into the other categories described in this particular section of the bill, but without federal or provincial licence and without the need for federal or provincial licence.

Most group homes at the present time do receive funding from the federal or provincial governments. We appreciate that, though we feel quite often that the funding is woefully inadequate. But with the direction the government is going in terms of social services and in terms of support for this kind of facility, the day may come when a group home exists that is not funded by the federal or provincial government but from some other source, from donations from industry or from private individuals. Given that licensing may not always be necessary and given that the regressive policies of this government may mean funding is not available in the future, we feel it's quite inappropriate to tie the matter of registration of a group home to federal and provincial licensing.

We believe the rest of the section to which this amendment relates deals very adequately with the definition of group homes and amendments we will be introducing subsequently allow a municipality to add to that definition if the municipal council feels an addition to the definition is appropriate for its local circumstances. We see no need at all to restrict registration to homes that are already registered, in a sense, with the federal or provincial government because of licensing or because of funding.

It concerns us too that duality of registration, in a sense, would be built into the legislation. We do not understand why the government sees it as necessary. We do not understand why municipalities cannot be allowed to deal with that of their own accord.

In case the parliamentary assistant comes back with comments from the city of Toronto, I want to tell him very strongly that group homes exist, and we hope they will exist very much more in the future, in many other municipalities. We do not understand why this particular restriction is placed in the provisions for registration. We hope that the government will see our point of view, that the provisions for registration should be made as broad as possible and that it will accept this particular amendment.

Mr. McClellan: I don't want to repeat the argument that's been made by my colleague. Our concern is that the definition of group homes in section 8 is too restrictive and that there are a number of facilities which would be classified as group homes and which will be excluded from coverage under this statute by virtue of the definition here that they are required to be licensed or funded under an act of the Parliament of Canada or the province of Ontario.

I would draw the parliamentary assistant's attention to the report, Group Homes, prepared by the Provincial Secretariat for Social Development in 1978. On page 19 there is a discussion of current provincial and municipal control standards, where the secretariat sets out quite clearly what our problem is with the existing definition as drafted by the government.

The report reads, "Licences are granted to group home operators under only five of the 14 group home programs." There are 14 different group home programs in the province and licences as of the writing of this report were required for only five of the 14.

It is my understanding that some of the children's reform legislation has increased the coverage of group homes which are subject to provincial licensing, but there are still a number of categories. I have to confess I am not entirely sure how many, but there are still a number of categories of group home which don't require provincial or federal licensing, so they would automatically be excluded by virtue of the narrowness of the government definition in section 8. That is the point we are trying to deal with here in the amendment.

Reading again from the report, "Under 10 of the 14 provincially-approved group home programs operators are expected to comply with provincially-established standards of operation, which are set out in some cases in legislation, in others in manuals or written into the contract."

There are five that are licensed and there are, I gather, another five where there is some degree of provincial control, but not licensing, and then there appear to be four other categories of group homes which are neither licensed nor subject to any provincial standards of any kind. They would include, according to the report, approved homes, satellite homes for the aged, children's aid society homes and juvenile detention centres.

I am asking the honourable member to reply. I am expressing a concern that I think is a real one—that your definition is too narrow and that by making it too narrow in terms of the licensing requirement you are excluding categories of group homes.

One of the reasons I liked the city of Toronto's definition in Bill Pr5 is because it includes not just group homes that are funded under an act of the Parliament of Canada or under an act of this Legislature, but it also includes group homes which receive referrals from a government agency, from a hospital or from a court. I thought that was a neat way of making a comprehensive and inclusive definition.

I understand from the parliamentary assistant that he is prepared to permit the city of Toronto to continue to live with its definition of group home as set out in Bill Pr5 and that he will be presenting some amendments to Bill Pr5 which will tidy things up a bit but which will retain the essential definition contained in the city of Toronto's model bylaw.

My concern is that is a good definition and it shouldn't be limited to the city of Toronto. I think the amendment gets around the problem by defining group homes in terms of size and objective without restricting it unnecessarily by the requirement for licensing, simply because the licensing isn't comprehensive at this point.

Again, I invite the parliamentary assistant to try to deal with those concerns because I am quite convinced they are real and legitimate.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the two members opposite for their concerns, because they certainly are legitimate concerns. Although I will try and explain to them why I will not support their amendment—I hope I can convince this House that the amendment should not be supported—I think the New Democratic Party member who has spoken and the government, including the ministry I represent and the Provincial Secretariat for Social Development which has been very much involved in the drawing of this legislation, all are trying to achieve the same objectives. I don't think there is any dispute on what we are trying to achieve, it is just really a matter of how to best get there, probably more in the short run than in the long run.

First, Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the city of Toronto publicly because they really pioneered this type of legislation. If you look at section 8 of this bill you will see it somewhat parallels the original part of Pr5, the city of Toronto's bill. I accept from the members of the New Democratic Party that more communities than the City of Toronto require group homes. If it was just the city of Toronto, this section would not be before us; we simply would have amended Pr5 because, as you are aware, at this point the provincial government and the city of Toronto are in agreement. The city of Toronto expressed that agreement by resolution of the council last evening, of which I think you have a copy.

We are doing this because it is our intention and policy, as it is with the New Democratic Party, to encourage other municipalities to pass zoning bylaws. The key is not a bylaw that can be passed under this section of the act; the key is to encourage municipalities to pass zoning bylaws which will permit group homes.

The important thing to remember is that this is not a bylaw for licensing. This is permissive legislation to register, not to licence. The member for Bellwoods used the word "licence" a number of times in his presentation. I don't want to be critical but I don't know if he was from time to time confusing licensing with registration. I don't think so, but the word licence came up a number of times.

Mr. McClellan: You must have misunderstood what I was saying. I understand the bill perfectly well.

Mr. Rotenberg: Yes, I think you do now.

As I say, we all understand that this legislation, no matter how it is interpreted, does not restrict the municipality's right to zone. This legislation is permissive and allows a municipality to pass a registration bylaw. If it so desires a municipality could zone for types of group homes and it doesn't have to register them because they register a class or classes. Municipalities can prohibit unregistered group homes from operating, but they can also permit unregistered group homes to operate if they so desire.

So really not having the total definition the New Democratic Party has indicated they want does not necessarily restrict a municipality from passing a zoning bylaw. It does not restrict a municipality from allowing group homes if they so desire, group homes which would not be covered under this.

Mr. McClellan: But as you define them, that's the problem. You can only register a group home according to your definition.

Mr. Rotenberg: You can only register the group home.

First of all, to the best of our knowledge almost all group homes would be covered under this legislation. In section 8 section 386a(1)(a) refers to group homes that are licensed or funded, not licensed and funded, by the province or the feds.

As the member for Bellwoods mentioned, I think almost all of the categories are funded by one or the other government. We have group homes which are funded by Community and Social Services, we have homes funded by Health, homes funded by our Solicitor General, homes funded by Correctional Services and group homes funded by the federal Solicitor General, so it really does take in almost all of the group homes.

The reason we have restricted the types of homes that can be registered—and I would indicate the member for Bellwoods read from a report of the Social Development secretariat that wants this legislation and has asked for this legislation—is because we want to encourage municipalities to establish zoning.

The experience so far has shown this is a very fragile process. It is a very difficult process. There is a lot of resistance out there in ratepayers groups, in homeowners groups, as we have seen in the city of Toronto and in the city of North York. There is resistance to the zoning bylaw, which is the key one—this is not nearly as important as the zoning bylaw—which would allow group homes to go in.

Although I recognize this is province wide we have to draw upon the experience of the city of Toronto, because that experience really has guided us because we have had some reaction from the folks out there. It was sold to the ratepayers groups in the residential areas of the city of Toronto on the basis there would be control and there would be registration and there would be inspection.

We are saying, in effect, in this legislation that, for the present, until we get group homes accepted across the province, we want to encourage those group homes. We want to be able to go to the ratepayers, and maybe assist the municipal councils in going to the ratepayers, and say, "Yes, we want you to accept group homes, but we have two sets of controls on the group homes we are asking you to accept."

One set of controls is the municipal registration which says who they are, where they are, the distance apart, and who the responsible person is so that if there is an emergency at two o'clock in the morning, the registration indicates who to phone up and so on. That's one part of it. The other part of this is that these homes will also be subject to provincial inspection. Every group home covered by this legislation, not just those which are licensed but even those which are unlicensed but funded by the province—because we are now licensing children's homes as you indicated, and others will be licensed as we get on to them—is under provincial inspection.

We can go to these ratepayers groups and the municipal council can go to these ratepayers groups and say, "Look, all we want to do at the present time is bring in those kinds of group homes which will have the dual control of the province and the municipality."

As I said, we have had considerable resistance to group homes. Believing not only in local autonomy, but believing that, even if we don't, municipal councils do listen to their ratepayers, I know their approval is very important in order to be able to sell those group homes. We have been able to do it in the city of Toronto. There has been trouble in North York. As we know, the North York bylaw is now before the Ontario Municipal Board. North York wants to restrict certain types of group homes and not allow certain types of group homes, which it has a right to do, but the types of group homes it wants to exclude in its zoning bylaw are those types covered under the funding category and, therefore, covered under this legislation.

I think when we can go to other municipalities and ratepayers and say, "Yes, there is going to be this dual control of provincial inspections and municipal registration," it will be easier to sell this to these various ratepayer groups.

There are not very many, but there are some group homes around which are not provincially or federally funded or licensed. These would tend to be the uninspected ones. These would tend to be those which would probably cause more trouble in a neighbourhood than the provincially inspected ones—not necessarily, but they tend to be. We are a little apprehensive, just a little apprehensive. When I say "we," I am not just talking about the ministry because the Social Development secretariat is very much involved in this; they are the ones who are pushing for the group homes and encouraging them. But if we do get an unlicensed, uninspected, unfunded group home which gets into a neighbourhood and which could give group homes a bad name, at this stage of the operation when they are new, it might discourage that municipality or other municipalities around it from bringing in zoning bylaws—because of this bad experience.

In effect, what we are saying is, in the initial stages, until group homes are socially accepted as part of the normal landscape in a residential neighbourhood, let us encourage only those which are controlled both by the province and the municipality so that, to the best of our ability, there will not be too much fuss or problem in a neighbourhood.

Mr. McClellan: Could I interrupt you at this point?

Mr. Rotenberg: I will yield the floor to the member for a moment.

Mr. McClellan: This is where the honourable member loses me. He is saying that there are some group homes—and I would be grateful if he could identify the kinds of group homes—that aren't licensed, but then he goes on to say, "Well, let's just pretend they don't exist." That's the implication of his argument. He is saying there is a category of group homes that isn't under provincial legislation, inspection or standards, and so he wants to exempt them from registration. That simply means that neither can the municipality deal with them.

You are defeating your own argument. Your argument is that you want quality—and so does everybody—you want quality and standards in the group homes that are going to be established in neighbourhoods, but you are saying there is a category of group homes which is outside the standard setting process and isn't subject to inspection and, therefore, you are going to also exclude those homes from the capacity of the municipality to register them and control them.

That doesn't make any sense to me. If you are not going to do it, then you have to give the power to the municipality to look at it. You can't just say, "We will leave this third or fourth class set of facilities outside the purview of anybody's control."

Could you explain that apparent inconsistency and, secondly tell me what specific group-home programs still remain outside the orbit of legislation, or funding, or inspection, or standard setting?

Mr. Rotenberg: First of all, let us understand that the purpose of all this, the zoning and the registration, is to get them into residential neighbourhoods. The types of group homes which don't come under these classes can still go in most municipalities, in higher residential or commercial neighbourhoods; they are not being excluded from the municipality. I am again drawing from the city of Toronto example. What we are encouraging is to get these group homes into the residential neighbourhoods.

There are some crisis-care centres which probably do not qualify under these categories, but not very many do not. Of those that do not qualify for funding or provincial inspection we say, yes, they can be set up in a municipality but for the moment, until all group homes get a good name, let them go into those areas of zoning they are now zoned for and not necessarily into the residential neighbourhoods.

As I indicated earlier, I think the members opposite and the government have the same goal in mind, to encourage group homes into the neighbourhood. Those members of our staff, more in the Social Development secretariat than the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, which is carrying this bill because it is a municipal bill, have the feeling and the experience that in doing it this way, by taking one step at a time, we will do more to encourage group homes.

I am not going to convince the members opposite. We can agree to disagree, but hope, whatever way it comes out, there will be a number of municipalities which under this legislation and having a little more protection will be encouraged to zone for group homes in their more restrictive residential neighbourhoods more than they are doing right now.

Mr. McClellan: I am going to try once more because I don't seem to be getting through to the parliamentary assistant.

You are permitting the city of Toronto, which has developed the model zoning bylaw, as far as I am concerned, for the rest of the province, to define group homes in the broadest possible sense, so that for purposes of the Toronto city bylaw you don't have to be a licensed or funded group home, just a group home that is consistent with the number of people living in the facility for the purposes set out in the definition.

That permits the city of Toronto to register any group home within the boundaries of the city of Toronto, and that is the protection the city of Toronto has in moving to a model bylaw. That is what guarantees the orderly establishment of group homes throughout the city, so they won't all be concentrated on one street in the Annex, or Parkdale, or Bellwoods. They can be established on an orderly, spaced basis throughout the whole city.

If you are to exempt categories of group homes from the registration process, you take away the capacity of the municipality—in this case the city of Toronto—to control their orderly establishment. You have recognized that because you have conceded to the city of Toronto—I gather in formal discussions and through a formal understanding—that the city of Toronto will be permitted to keep its own definition of group home in Bill Pr5. Good; I applaud you for that. It is very sensible.

What I am asking you to do is extend the same broad definition to all other parts of the province, so that when we are looking at North York, and you are trying to encourage North York to develop a model bylaw, there won't be a class of group homes which is excluded from the enforcement provision of the model zoning bylaws. That is what this bill permits municipalities to do; it permits them to enforce their model zoning bylaws so there can be the orderly establishment of group homes. If you exempt a category of group homes from registration, then you are defeating the purpose of your enabling legislation.

I don't know, and don't make any pretence to know, the number of group homes we're talking about in the excluded category. I suspect it's more than insignificant and it may be substantial, I don't know, but I'm just uncomfortable with the kind of exclusion that seems to be a likelihood in the minister's legislation, because I feel it will serve to discourage the achievement of the objective of the legislation.

That's the argument I'm trying to make in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I'll try just one more time. Let's look at municipality X out there. Someone attempts to bring in a bylaw and you get a lot of ratepayer organization opposition, as we did in Toronto and overcome it—as we did in North York where we didn't overcome it. Ratepayers are going to say, "Look, you're going to pass a bylaw, you're going to allow group homes; what controls have we got?" The municipal officials are going to say, "We're only going to pass the bylaws for those which are also provincially inspected." Ratepayers are going to be pretty happy with that.

When you say to them, "We're going to allow group homes"—and it's the perception more than the reality, as you know, when you get into some ratepayer meetings—some guy is going to come up and say, "Hey, but the registration bylaws allow you to register all those kinds of things, including the non-inspected ones. We're against them all because you're going to sneak in the non-inspected ones on us." In those situations the municipality is going to have trouble getting their bylaw through; this has been our experience.

If we take one step at a time there will be a time, I say to the honourable members, five or 10 years down the road, when they've been accepted and we can abandon that control, but to sell it to new municipalities our experience has indicated this is the best way, because ratepayers will be more content to allow the zoning to go through and won't object at OMB or whatever when they know the dual control is there.

That's the reason we're doing it this way, our experience indicates to us it is the best approach. With respect to the members opposite who agree or disagree, all the advice I can get from those in the field trying to sell group homes says this is the best way to get group homes in the province at this time.

Mr. Isaacs: I certainly don't want to prolong this debate, but I'm getting more and more confused by the approach the parliamentary assistant is giving us on this.

I don't know whether I can put it any differently from the way my colleague from Bellwoods has already put it, but I want to start from the other end of the registration procedure. The entire procedure that is set out in this section of this bill allows the registrar to inspect a group home, or to inspect premises that are being used as a group home that is not registered. It allows the council to pass bylaws to prohibit people from owning or operating group homes that are not registered according to a bylaw passed under this section.

Given the very restrictive definition that this section has for group homes, the registrar will have no authority to inspect a home that is being used as a group home but which is not funded or licensed by the federal or provincial governments. It seems to me that it would be quite appropriate for the municipality at least to have the power to inspect, even though the federal and provincial governments are not involved.

Second, not all municipalities have zoning bylaws in place to encourage the orderly development of group homes; indeed in many municipalities the matter is still in dispute. One example that is currently gaining public attention is a situation in Dunnville, where the council by its actions appears to be attempting to prohibit a group home from being established, yet the current zoning bylaw allows a group home in a residential category. That's fine, I don't have any problem with that; but that group home is not receiving capital funds from the government and is not licensed federally or provincially, although it may receive provincial operating funds once it opens, but the municipality can't even put in place the registration procedure until the group home is opened because it is not licensed and is not receiving funds until it is opened. That is an incredibly backhanded way of doing things.

Surely it makes sense to allow the municipality to implement registration on any home that is being used as a group home or even planned to be used as a group home as soon as that matter comes to the attention of the municipality. I really have difficulty comprehending for those two reasons: inspection and prohibition, if the need arises, which let's hope doesn't, but might. Those are not available to the municipality under this restrictive definition of group home.

It is encouraging the operating of unregulated and possibly unsatisfactory group homes and ensuring that because neither the federal nor provincial government is involved in their operation, the municipal government shall not be involved either. I really cannot see the logic of that. I also have difficulty understanding why you have to wait until the thing is going and getting money before the municipality can register. In all other registration procedures, application is made before one opens the door rather than afterwards.

I still have difficulty understanding the rationale behind this restrictive definition the parliamentary assistant is trying to assure us is satisfactory. I don't buy the argument of leaving such a restrictive definition in place, when it seems to me we could improve the role of municipalities in the registration of group homes by broadening the definition as we are suggesting by this amendment.

Mr. Epp: I find this discussion very confusing, to say the least. I would like to get clarification from these two personalities as to what they are trying to discuss and the clarification they are trying to give this House. To my mind, it is more confusing.

For the benefit of the House, let me read what we are discussing. We are discussing the definition, "Group home" means a residence that is licensed or funded under an act of the Parliament of Canada or the province of Ontario for the accommodation of three to 10 persons, exclusive of staff, living under supervision in a single housekeeping unit and who, by reason of their emotional, mental, social or physical condition or legal status, require a group living arrangement for their wellbeing."

I ask the parliamentary assistant, very respectfully, what would he call a residence that is not necessarily licensed but is established "for the accommodation of three to 10 persons, exclusive of staff, living under the supervision in a single housekeeping unit and who, by reason of their emotional, mental, social or physical condition or legal status, require a group living arrangement for their wellbeing"? What would he call that?

I am going to give the parliamentary assistant the opportunity to answer that right away because I want to know what that is. If a group home is one that is licensed by the provincial or federal government, what is something that has the same characteristics but is not licensed? Obviously, it is not a group home, according to this definition.

Secondly, how are they controlled? If, in fact, such an establishment exists, how is it controlled?

Mr. Rotenberg: I think what the honourable member described, if it is neither licensed nor funded by the federal or provincial government, would still be a group home in general parlance, but would not be a group home for purposes of this act. As for control, it would still be controlled under the municipal zoning bylaw.

With respect, this does not change the function of municipalities to zone. A municipality may zone a home in or zone a home out, whether or not it comes under the registration procedures.

As I was trying to explain to the members opposite, the purpose of being more restrictive is we are not trying to encourage municipalities to pass zoning bylaws to allow group homes. We know from experience in those municipalities where we have tried to encourage them that there is ratepayer resistance. What we are trying to do, in the initial stage at least, is encourage those group homes which the province is supporting, controlling, funding, inspecting, whatever, because those are the easier ones to get in. By doing it that way we are confident we can get municipalities to pass zoning bylaws, not bylaws under this section but zoning bylaws, which if they are a little more restrictive will be easier to get through the ratepayer groups, easier for residents to accept if they know they are group homes which are in effect inspected and controlled by the province of Ontario.

We do this in order to encourage municipalities to pass those kinds of bylaws so we can work consistently and together with the municipality, to put those kinds of group homes in first. If the others come along the municipality still has the option of zoning for or excluding. The main control is still under zoning bylaws; this is just a little bit of extra we put in.

The members have to understand this isn't the main control. We're putting this in because the experience in Toronto and other municipalities has indicated that ratepayers who have this little extra control of registration are a little more prone to accept in a zoning bylaw the type of group home we want to encourage.

This is not the main control; the main control is still to the zoning bylaw of the municipality.

Mr. Epp: We get the impression from the comments of the parliamentary assistant, and I'm trying to be very sympathetic to him, that by virtue of zoning the group home is established, when in fact the kind of zone the group home is in is immaterial to the particular status or establishment of a group home.

I think he is trying to confuse the whole issue by continually trying to integrate in his discussion the different zoning bylaws. It's really immaterial whether the group home is in an industrial zone, a residential zone, a commercial zone, in any other kind of zone. What we're dealing with here is a group home. I think the parliamentary assistant should limit his material and his comments to that rather than trying to confuse the issue with the different kinds of zones.

Mr. Isaacs: I just want to respond on this matter of zoning, and because it's easier to talk about a specific example I'm going to use the Dunnville situation, not because I want to pick on that municipality but because I happen to have the facts in front of me.

In Dunnville up to five unrelated persons can live in a single family residence. The Dunnville zoning bylaw in a residential category permits that. It has nothing to do with group homes, it is just a general provision that up to five unrelated adults can live in the same home.

Along comes the Haldimand Association for the Mentally Retarded and says, "Fine; we can put five persons in a single-family home and use it as a group home."

I have no objection to that, it seems to me to be quite a reasonable thing to do. It's permitted by the zoning bylaw, it falls within the definition of group home that is given here, as long as we take out the licensing or funding provisions, because five is between three and 10 and they're living in a single housekeeping unit and because of their emotional, mental, social or physical condition they require a group living arrangement for their wellbeing—so it's a group home.

It seems to me it would help the situation if the municipality could register that group home. I cannot understand why we're excluding it by the wording the parliamentary assistant is trying to convince us is satisfactory.

I really don't want to prolong this, but it seems to me vital for allowing the kind of development the parliamentary assistant is speaking of that we allow registration where zoning bylaws permit, regardless of these other encumbrances that just make it more complex and ensure there will be group homes operating in municipalities that cannot be registered because they don't fit under this very restrictive definition.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Isaacs' amendment will please say "aye".

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Isaacs: I have a second amendment on the same section. I believe you, Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary assistant and the critic for the Liberal Party have copies.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 8 be amended by the addition of the following:

"(5) No council may pass bylaws under this section unless there is in effect in that municipality a bylaw under section 35 of the Planning Act which encourages and governs the orderly development of group homes within the municipality."

Mr. Isaacs: As a result of the last discussion, I think I at least have an understanding of what the government is trying to do in this section, although I don't particularly agree with the approach they are taking. I know the parliamentary assistant has acknowledged previously that we are all working in the same direction to encourage group homes within residential areas in municipalities where that is desirable.

We're suggesting, by this motion, that the whole matter of registration, given the discussion that we have just had, now be tied to bylaws that encourage the orderly development of group homes.

In some ways you might say we predicted the comments that were made. I think we understand what the parliamentary assistant has been trying to tell us is his approach to the problem. We are therefore asking that this subsection be added to section 8 in order that it is made very clear to municipalities that the encouragement is there and if they want to make use of registration then, by all means, they should do so, but should pass bylaws that regulate, encourage and govern the orderly development of group homes within their municipality.

That seems to me to be a logical consequence of the kind of discussion we've just had and what I sense to be the approach the government is trying to take on this particular issue. I hope the parliamentary assistant is prepared to accept this amendment.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I'm sorry to disappoint my friend from Wentworth, but I don't accept the amendment for two reasons.

Firstly, a zoning bylaw is a legal document. With respect, the word "encourage" is not a proper word to appear in a zoning bylaw. The word "encourage" is a proper word to appear in an official plan. Although I don't think it belongs in this particular section, I would be very pleased if the various municipalities put in their official plans that they would like to encourage the development of group homes within their municipality.

Secondly, although I think the intentions of the member for Wentworth are proper and good and we are on the same wavelength, if this amendment is passed I think it might do just the opposite to what he wishes us to do. Maybe some municipalities will pass a zoning bylaw to allow group homes. If they do that's fine. It would allow group homes. But because of ratepayer pressure and so on they may be a little reluctant to put the word "encourage" into the bylaw. They may wish to take a more passive attitude.

The member for Wentworth is saying, in effect, that unless a municipality not only passes a zoning bylaw to allow group homes but includes in the statement it is going to encourage group homes, it is not going to be able to have the registration procedure.

As I say, that is one reason for my opposition. The main reason I can't accept the amendment though, is simply that the word "encourage" does not belong in a zoning bylaw. In other words, the zoning bylaw is a legal document and I'd hate to see the court cases that might come up to decide whether or not something was encouraged and whether or not the zoning bylaw was legal.

It's much cleaner, much neater and much better for group homes if we don't pass this amendment, even though we might all want to encourage them.

[10:15]

Mr. McClellan: It strikes me as one of the more specious arguments that have come from the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Conway: And there have been many.

Mr. McClellan: There have been many. The amendment is not intended as a model zoning bylaw. I don't know how anybody could take it to be intended as such. The amendment does not read, in any way, shape or form, as an instruction as to how the model bylaw or the municipal bylaw should be worded.

Everyone is aware that the province has drafted and sent a copy of a model bylaw to all municipalities throughout the province. There is no possible way you could read the amendment as instructing any municipality to use the word "encourage" in the drafting of the model bylaw. That is absolute nonsense.

What the amendment does is tie registration into the passage of a model bylaw. It makes the power to register group homes conditional upon passage of a model bylaw. It is as simple as that. If the parliamentary assistant is opposed to that principle, why doesn't he just say so?

It really demeans the debate to be reading that kind of nonsense into a patently self-evident and crystal-clear amendment. We are just trying to do what the government should have done itself, that is set out in the legislation the purpose of the legislation.

The purpose is to encourage municipalities to pass a model bylaw by giving them the means to enforce the model bylaw through registration. What we are trying to avoid is to have a municipality use registration in a negative, punitive or discriminatory way against group homes. What we are trying to do with the amendment is say to a municipality, "We will allow you to register group homes and to control the orderly establishment of group homes on the condition you pass a bylaw that encourages their orderly development in the first place." What is so difficult about that?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I would like to rise and support what the member for Bellwoods has just said. It strikes me that everything the parliamentary assistant has been saying, although he premises it with the fact we are all going in the same direction and we all want group homes, is to talk about ways to protect the reluctance of a community from taking on group homes.

The whole idea of the provincial government perhaps taking five or 10 years to get all the municipalities in this province to accept the fact there is a basic human right involved for people who are disadvantaged to be able to live in their own communities, in my view, is outrageous. All this amendment does is exactly what the member for Bellwoods says. One brings in any bylaws one brings in in a positive framework with one's own model bylaw which encourages and governs the orderly development of group homes. It seems to me the flim-flammery we are hearing in the parliamentary assistant's argumentation is that he really doesn't support the idea of group homes moving in as quickly as possible into the municipalities around this province at all. He is doing everything he can to minimize and slow down this process.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would simply say the amendment, although well-intentioned, will put another stumbling block in the way of a council that wants to bring in group homes. They may not interpret the bylaw quite the way the NDP wants it.

Mr. Isaacs: The last comment just astounds me. We attempted in the previous amendment that was defeated to remove a stumbling block and we are attempting here to provide an incentive to municipalities to put in place a zoning bylaw that deals with group homes explicitly and which encourages their orderly development. The parliamentary assistant comes back to us and says it puts a stumbling block in the way.

We have just been talking about how it is necessary to encourage municipalities and to encourage the residents of neighbourhoods that may be affected to recognize that the controls are in place. We are suggesting that by encouraging the municipality to put in place a proper zoning bylaw to deal with group homes, with the extra measure of protection that can be given to the residents the municipality can be encouraged to move in that direction, and the people of the area can be assured that through zoning bylaws, which are far more effective than registration and probably even more effective in terms of ensuring that premises are kept orderly than provincial or federal registration, the residents could be assured, if this section is approved, that the zoning is correct and that the zoning deals with the situation of a group home, as well as the other things that are contained in this particular bill.

I really have difficulty, Mr. Chairman, with the parliamentary assistant's last comment that it is a stumbling block. Quite the reverse, it is a move in a positive direction, encouraging municipalities to put in place the model bylaw, or something like it, that the ministry has already circulated to them. I fail to understand how anybody could interpret it as a stumbling block.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to this debate. I am wondering whether by deleting two words in this amendment, certainly based on the comments of the parliamentary assistant, it might very well be acceptable to him. That would be the deletion of "encourage and," so that it would then read: "No council may pass bylaws under this section unless there is in effect in that municipality a bylaw under section 35 of the Planning Act which governs the orderly development of group homes within that municipality."

As you recall, the parliamentary assistant took particular exception to the word "encourages." Deleting those two words would obviously make it very acceptable to him.

Mr. McClellan: I was about to propose exactly the same thing. Why don't we just take out "encourages and" and you can indicate your acceptance?

Mr. Rotenberg: If you really want something in there that the legislative council suggested, it would end up, "No council may pass bylaws under this section unless there is in effect in that municipality a bylaw under section 35 of the Planning Act that permits the erection and use of group homes in municipalities."

That covers it, but it is redundant. If you really want it in there I don't object; but you don't need it, because obviously unless it is in the zoning bylaw you are not going to have a group home and therefore you have no registration. If you want something like that, I have no objection to it. As you say the objection was to "encourages". I don't mind wording which is almost the same as the member for Waterloo has put in, but it is unnecessary because it is redundant.

You cannot, as I say, have a group home unless you have a zoning bylaw; and you don't have to have a model bylaw if you have a simple amendment to the zoning which permits the group home; then you go ahead. If you want that, I don't object to it.

Mr. McClellan: I don't feel it is redundant. I feel it is necessary that there be some specific amendment that states the purpose. I am quite pleased with the wording the parliamentary assistant has proposed. I think my colleague could be persuaded. If you would like to move that as an amendment we will withdraw our amendment; but we will wait until the parliamentary assistant moves his amendment.

Mr. Rotenberg: I will write that out in a moment. If you stand that down and deal with the next section I will have the revised wording in the proper form in a moment.

Mr. Chairman: Just for clarification. Mr. Rotenberg moves that section 8 be amended by adding the following subsection:

"(5) No council may pass bylaws under this section unless there is in effect in that municipality a bylaw passed under section 35 of the Planning Act that permits the erection and use of group homes in the municipality."

Before I can accept that amendment I will have to ask the member for Wentworth if he wants to withdraw the previous amendment.

Mr. Isaacs: With the understanding that the parliamentary assistant is moving that alternative, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment.

Agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: I have read the amendment placed by Mr. Rotenberg. Is there any further discussion?

Mr. Rotenberg: Could I ask that the word "erection" be changed to "establishment"?

Mr. Chairman: The word "erection" has been changed to "establishment."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 8 be amended by the addition of the following:

"(6) No bylaw under this section shall seek to prohibit the operation of group homes within the municipality."

Mr. Isaacs: I will be very brief. I think the intent of the amendment is very, very clear. The parliamentary assistant indicated on second reading it was his understanding that this was already provided for in this section of the bill. Our reading of it does not make that clear to us and we are therefore moving that it be made very explicit in this section on registration that it cannot be used to prohibit the operation of group homes whether or not zoning bylaws are in effect.

We would be concerned that a municipality could appear to be moving in the right direction by implementation of the model zoning bylaw and then could pass bylaws under this section to negate the effect of that zoning bylaw, given that it is easier to change bylaws dealing with registration of group homes than it is to change zoning bylaws, because changes to zoning bylaws can be forced before the OMB, where bylaws relating to registration may not be sent to the OMB. We are suggesting that this amendment clarifies that very simply and makes sure that the intent of this section is clear to everybody.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, with respect, I can't support the amendment. In effect it negates section 8 (386a)(2)(b) which now enables municipalities to pass bylaws to prohibit any person from owning or operating a group home that is not registered.

If we say in one section you can prohibit a group home which is not registered, which is the municipal control they want, and then turn around in another section and say you can't prohibit, we are negating the bylaw.

The purpose of the New Democratic amendment is simply that they cannot withhold registration capriciously. That is covered under section 3 which says where application is made to register, they must register.

Mr. Chairman: I can't support it because it negates the whole section.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, the point that the parliamentary assistant has made may have some validity and maybe is something that we have overlooked. I appreciate his recognizing that the intent of this amendment is a good one and I am sure that by the time this bill comes up for final consideration we can ensure that it is dealt with appropriately and that an amendment is before the committee that does not have this particular conflict.

Mr. Chairman: Is there further discussion on section 8 and this amendment?

Mr. Warner: Yes.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Gregory, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments and two bills without amendment.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

MINISTRY OF TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Cunningham: I would like to use this occasion, if I could, to correct a misconception that seems to rest with the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) and from time to time the Premier (Mr. Davis), which is the illusion that I and my party somehow endorse the operations of the Urban Transportation Development Corporation.

From time to time, Mr. Speaker, we do get to Kingston. It seems to be an annual event. We travel down, usually in a bus. Sometimes I am impressed with the poor conditions, not of the bus but of the highway; last time certainly it seemed a rough and rocky ride.

We go down there and we have a nice meeting with Mr. Foley and Morrison Renfrew, the head technical guy. Some lovely Scandinavian sandwiches are served and we just have a fine time. The member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) and I usually get a chance to ride the train. It goes around and around; it really is a lot of fun.

Then we concur in giving the government the money, as we are of course going to do today, because we certainly don't want to have an election based on our lack of confidence in the UTDC. This has been going on now for a long time.

Mr. Haggerty: Too long, Jim.

Mr. Cunningham: In fact as my colleague indicates, it has gone on for too long and there are some of us who are wondering when we are going to see some orders made. If the minister was a travelling salesman and he was unsuccessful as he has been in getting foreign orders and doing business, I mean real outside-of-Ontario business, I think he would be looking for a new line of work.

I want to say, as well, that I and my party are dedicated to the concept of rapid transit and public transit. We feel, and have felt for a number of years now, that improvements should be made. We endorse the fine GO Transit system, which could be improved, significantly improved; and quite frankly we are quite proud, as I am sure the minister is, of the fine Toronto Transit Commission operation here in the city, which is probably one of the finest transit systems in the world.

What we would suggest is that we might be much further ahead if we were to dedicate the moneys that have been squandered and wasted on the UTDC to the GO system and to more conventional methods of rapid transit assistance, and that includes the smaller municipalities too. People in Ancaster and Dundas in my constituency, for example, require assistance with regard to the operation of buses in that particular area, and that is not uncommon to most smaller municipalities.

As the price of fuel goes up, it is clear that we are going to have to put an even greater emphasis on these areas; I would hope as time goes by we can reallocate moneys that are going to come to the government in windfall situations based on excise tax increases and the normal increase in the cost of gasoline, to the TTC, and other municipal transit operations and also to improving the GO system.

I would be delighted if I learned that Kirk Foley and company were successful in one of their bids. I was informed by the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) the latest proposition is Miami and the Miami people are quite impressed. We have heard they are impressed, and we heard people in Saudi Arabia are impressed. Kirk has been all over the world, but so far no orders. It is getting to be like Minaki-on-wheels. You are in so deep—

Mr. Kerrio: Something like the Candu reactor.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You will eat those words.

Mr. Cunningham: I am sure I will. I just don't know how old I will be.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That's just like the former leader of the opposition.

Mr. Cunningham: I would just like to be a fly on the wall in one of these cabinet meetings when some of the private enterprise guys in your cabinet, and I believe there are a few left—

Mr. Haggerty: Not many.

Mr. Cunningham: The Minister of Inter-governmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) pops his head up, he probably is in private enterprise. Darcy must be laughing right now, really. I can just see these cabinet meetings where he comes in and asks for another pile of dough for this Minaki-on-wheels situation. If it was all that hot, the private sector would be doing it; and doing it more effectively, certainly, than Kirk and company.

I would hope the minister would somehow ensure there won't be an increase in TTC fares this next year, because I am very concerned as a result of this budget tabled by his kissing cousins in Ottawa.

The minister used to complain about the lousy relationship he had with the former administration there, he was one of the first ones to complain about that; and now that relationship is worse than ever with these new guys.

As a result of this new increase on diesel fuel, not only are the trucking companies of Ontario going to be affected, and everybody else who uses diesel fuel, but also the TTC will be affected significantly. That increase will throw their budget somewhat out of whack, maybe to the tune of $3 million or $4 million, which might mean the freeze we were anticipating and hoping for may not result and an increase may have to take place. I hope much of this money which I hope you would reapply will go to the TTC and others.

I'll conclude by just saying there isn't any great endorsement, by myself, my leader and maybe the transportation critic for the NDP, for this UTDC operation. I wish it were privatized and in the private sector. There is a far greater argument for privatizing that operation than there is in the case of Petro-Canada. I wish it were successful, but I just don't know how long we can condone its lack of success and how long the people of Ontario must have to foot the bill for what I call Minaki-on-wheels.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, you may have noticed last night my skills with the knife as your assistant in carving up the ham. I hope the minister doesn't think I am using the same kind of tactics at this time.

The Liberal transportation critic has dealt with an issue I would like the minister to address himself to, that is the effect of the new federal budget on the Toronto Transit Commission. I would hope one would hear from the minister some definitive promise that the TTC will not be placed in the position, because of the diesel fuel situation and because of the tax situation, where fares will have to be increased and ridership will be affected.

I find it interesting that this government has done so little in connecting this ministry with the Ministry of Energy and that so little energy research is actually being done by this ministry. When we look at other countries, we see that by 1981 in Germany buses will be on the road in Berlin running on a perfectly safe and absolutely pollution-free form of fuel called hydrogen.

I find it interesting the ministry only now has started to get together with the Ministry of Energy to hold joint seminars on pooling of information for their staffs.

Mr. Speaker: Would the honourable members for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) and Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) please hold their conference elsewhere. It must be very disconcerting to the member who has the floor.

Mr. Philip: I wonder how much the minister is aware of the connection between transportation and energy, since there seems to be very little coming out of his ministry in this area, but I won't belabour that because of the time.

I would like to deal with one issue I am extremely concerned about since it directly affects my riding, and that is the problem we have been talking about in numerous estimates for a long time, the problem of extrication.

The minister will recall the report of the select committee on highway safety tabled by my colleague the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) in September, 1977. It called for a provincial crash rescue program. In December, 1977 the then Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) was apparently familiar with the problem since he had written a letter to the city clerk in Barrie admitting that the objectives of an extrication unit were commendable but suggesting his ministry was not prepared to place such an organization on any kind of legal basis.

It was not until April, 1978 that the present Minister of Transportation and Communications stated he was finally getting together with his colleagues, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry) on this matter. We are informed through various grapevines, that there is a report out on this matter, but the minister has not sent that report to the opposition critics in time for us to examine it and deal with it at these estimates. I checked with my office; we have not received it, nor have some of the people in the extrication business or involved volunteers, with whom I have been in touch on the telephone earlier this morning.

Extrication is the job of removing a victim from an accident situation with maximum safety and speed. Accident victims are unnecessarily being turned into cripples, and millions of tax dollars are being wasted, while this government has meetings between the ministries to decide who has responsibility.

That is why I and the Liberal critic accompanied members of the Canadian Rescue Services group when they made their presentation before the interministerial task force on crash rescue on Friday, February 9, 1979. At my urging Mr. Humphries, the assistant deputy minister, agreed to ask the minister for funding for this organization so they could carry out training to those groups across the province that badly needed that kind of training. I am sorry to see this minister turned down that proposal, turned down the request I sent to him through his deputy minister, so that the Simcoe Rescue Squad, that could have been doing a great deal more training, has not been in the position of doing as much as was possible.

Gary Joice, who was associated with that group for a number of years, informed me this morning he had toured the province and found there are a lot of people with a lot of very dangerous equipment on which they are not properly trained. That training could have been accomplished on the assumption that the decision as to which ministry would be responsible to handle it could be made at a later date, surely what was important was that the people who do have equipment and who are using it out there learn how to use it properly.

You just cannot train people in the use of these heavy tools that are being bought by fire departments and by various other groups on a one-day familiarization program, which is all that is being provided by some of the companies that sell some of this equipment. I would hope the minister will inform us immediately what is in that interministerial task force report so that we can deal with it in these estimates.

I would hope, too, that the minister would say that a group such as the Simcoe Rescue Squad, who are pioneers in the field, would get some kind of funds from the government to increase the amount of training with whatever ministry is going to be responsible for it. I would hope the minister would give us some assurance that extrication and the development of extrication experts across the province would be a major priority of this government.

I would hope that the minister, out of some sense of respect and encouragement to the initiative of the Simcoe Rescue Squad, would say that his ministry will pay them for some of the materials and research they have developed over the years. At least if he was to purchase from them some of the manuals on research they have developed that particular body might not be in the precarious financial position it presently is and might not be threatened the way it is this very day.

I hope the minister can address himself to that, and also to the very serious problem that while this ministry and the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of the Solicitor General have frittered away their time in numerous meetings trying to decide who gets the responsibility for it, people have been turned into paraplegics and quadraplegics on the road. We're informed by the brother of the Solicitor General of this province that a quadraplegic costs the taxpayers of Ontario $1.7 million, yet this ministry and its allied ministries in this problem, the Ministry of Health and Ministry of the Solicitor General, can't see fit to give a few hundred thousand dollars to an organization that has clearly proved its competence and has clearly proved that it has saved lives.

I made one telephone call to Humber College, where they have been doing some training in extrication, and confirmed with Bill Magill, the co-ordinator of the ambulance and emergency program there, in a very objective way that the Simcoe Rescue Squad has definitely saved lives. We know that had this program been developed and expanded when the select committee first brought in its report lives would have been saved and tax dollars would have been saved.

I think the ministry has a lot to answer for by its delays on this program; not only this ministry but also the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of the Solicitor General. I hope this minister will address himself to that particular issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and it was a very good party last night.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this motion?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the minister has probably divined the reason I'm participating in this concurrence motion. I think I have raised the consciousness of the minister, and indeed perhaps of my colleagues in the assembly, to the need and the province-wide concern, certainly the concern of Metro, east Toronto and Riverdale, about the lack of a GO-Transit station at Queen Street East and de Grassi Street in Riverdale riding.

Now that the matter has been raised I would like to recall for the minister that one of his predecessors very kindly did a survey study of the area some years ago. The result was that on a cost-benefit analysis it was economically wise to have a station at that location. Unfortunately the decision was not implemented and that area of Toronto does not have a GO station.

The industrialized portion of the Riverdale riding lies astride the main Toronto-Montreal line, the GO train path. There is a significant interchange of population every day, from work place to home from home to work place, within the Riverdale district; people come from different parts of Metro to work in Riverdale during the day and significant numbers of people leave Riverdale to go to work elsewhere. In the vicinity of the industrial part of the Riverdale riding, astride that main line, is a significant residential population.

Because of that I ask the minister, because of the need for people to have the opportunity to substitute public transportation for private transportation, that the ministry would undertake again to resurvey the area and to develop a cost-benefit analysis about the advisability of establishing a station there.

There would be little, if any, capital cost involved in establishing a station because the old de Grassi Street station still stands. The area is ideal for the reactivation of that station. It will not cause any congestion in the area. It may require the provision by the Toronto Transit Commission or by the GO system of one or two feeder buses in order to transfer population from the industrial plants to the GO station, or to assist people leaving the area to get to the train.

But now that the matter has come to the attention of the minister I would specifically ask he take under serious consideration a reassessment of the cost-benefit of the establishment of a station. It would be a boon to the area, and apart from whatever partisan benefit may fall to the New Democratic Party from having instigated it it is essential that station be established to assist not only the riding of Riverdale but also that portion of the riding of St. David which lies east of the Don River valley. I hope the minister would take my request into consideration.

Mr. Warner: It is quite evident to each of us, following the federal budget, that the federal government has little, if any, interest in public transit, since it made no exception to the energy costs which must be absorbed by public transit systems throughout the country. I certainly await the response, a positive one, which I assume will be coming from the government, to the effect that they will attempt to alleviate the serious pressures placed on the transit systems in this province because of the federal action.

It is entirely mind-boggling how a government could say it is going to conserve energy by increasing prices and not alleviate the pressures for public transit systems. Surely the argument is that if we wish to conserve energy by trying to get people to leave their cars at home then we have to make sure public transit systems can operate as efficiently and cheaply as possible so people are encouraged to leave their cars at home and use the public transit system. That would seem to be pretty elementary logic, but I would never accuse the federal government of possessing elementary logic.

I hope this government will respond. I don't hold out any great hope because of its past track record, but I hope that it will move to protect the 57 public transit systems in this province in a way that would ensure those systems will continue to function well, people will be encouraged to leave their cars at home and use the public transit system so we not only save energy and save fuel but reduce pollution—and all the other arguments that go in favour of a good public transit system.

The minister is aware of the pitiful public transit system we are faced with in Scarborough, partly because of the policies of this government. Not entirely, I would admit that. The TTC has been most reticent to forge ahead and supply a complete public transit system in the borough, and the municipal politicians can be blamed for not being aggressive enough with the Toronto Transit Commission; but none the less the funding of mechanism provided by this province is inadequate, the minister knows that.

My good colleague from Riverdale speaks of a GO station in Riverdale. I can say we require more than a GO station, we require an adequate bus service. It's more than just the service itself, it is having bus shelters. It is mind-boggling how in 1979 we are capable of putting a man on the moon but we can't supply a bus shelter. It's incredible.

The minister has heard the story before, but the weather reminds me of what senior citizens who live in the Glamorgan area of my riding face on a day like this. Those seniors will valiantly attempt to cross Kennedy Road in the face of the onslaught of trucks coming off Highway 401, buses coming south, buses going north, and transport trucks going north, in order to get to the other side of the four lanes of traffic to wait in the cold hoping a bus will come along, and on a day like today it will probably be the best part of half an hour, without a bus shelter.

Mr. Speaker: Will the honourable member tell me whether that's the responsibility of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications or the Toronto Transit Commission?

Mr. Warner: I certainly admit the MTC would like to shirk its responsibility and pass it off to the TTC. But if it had an interest in protecting those senior citizens in my riding, they would jolly well supply the bus shelters. But they won't do it. They shirk the responsibility by giving it to TTC that in turn says it's up to the local municipality that in turn says it's up to local manufacturers and businesses to supply bus shelters. The result of this shilly-shally is the seniors who live in my riding shiver in the cold for a bus that may never come. It comes directly back to this government.

In conclusion, I hope the government will make a very positive and dramatic statement regarding how it will move in to solve the serious problem created by the federal government the other night in that disastrous budget, where they have indicated how they are going to abandon any commitment to public transit in this country. Since the energy problem is going to pose a serious threat to public transit systems in this province, I want to know how this government is going to respond to that challenge.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't normally be taking part in this debate, but I want to support my colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications, and say a few words about what has just been said by my friend from Scarborough-Ellesmere.

I think he does a disservice to the council of the borough of Scarborough when he talks about the lack of bus shelters in Scarborough. I don't deny there may be one or two that are still needed in areas in his riding, but I want to say that the borough of Scarborough has provided sufficient shelters in the north part of Scarborough so that in some cases we have them on every four corners.

Mr. Warner: There are lots of them in Tory ridings; sure, I concede that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: As my friend knows, the mayor of Scarborough certainly doesn't belong to our party, in fact he's a card-carrying member of the member's party. He may not be a card-carrying member, but he has been an adherent, as they say in the United Church, of that party for a long time.

Certainly, when I look around Scarborough, I think they've done a fantastic job in supplying bus shelters and I would think given a little more time they will certainly realize the needs there and shelters will be on every corner in Scarborough; to suggest there is a shortage is completely wrong.

The main point I want to make on these estimates, lest the gloom that was presented by one of the members for Scarborough prevails, is that we are very happy, including the mayor of Scarborough, at the support this government is giving to the transit plans which Scarborough places as top priority.

I think it has to be put on the record that in these estimates, and in estimates of this ministry still to come, there is massive financial support; first for the extension of the Bloor-Danforth subway, which will go from Warden Avenue and St. Clair and is now being built up to Kennedy Road and Eglinton; and also, the support of 75 per cent of the capital costs of that extension which is going to be a very significant cost and is a very appreciated addition to that subway system.

I know my friends from the rest of Ontario will probably say we don't deserve that money here in Metro, but I want to tell them that the people—

Mr. Conway: I'm not that mean-spirited.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I hope not, because that is only the beginning.

The extension of the subway system is only the beginning of what is happening in Scarborough. The development of light rapid transit on controlled-access routes is, of course, the next expansion that will take place supported by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, a program which incidentally, is of top priority to the mayor and the council of the borough of Scarborough. They were very gratified, in a meeting with the Premier (Mr. Davis) about a year ago, when the Premier gave his full support to the development of the light rapid transit line in Scarborough by the Toronto Transit Commission. I pay tribute to the TTC and Metropolitan Toronto council for their pushing of this project also.

So the light rapid transit system, part of it on the right of way of the Canadian National or Via Rail, whichever it's now known as in that area, will go from the station at the end of the Bloor-Danforth subway at Kennedy and Eglinton, right up to Scarborough town centre, which in 15 or 20 years will probably become one of the major town centre shopping developments in southern Ontario, a heart to the whole borough of Scarborough, a development that will have within it facilities for commercial, recreational and hotel accommodation, as well as the headquarters for the government of the borough of Scarborough. From there light rapid transit will eventually spread out to the north, to the Malvern development, again one of the fine examples of planning this government has carried out. The Malvern housing development will be eventually supported by a light rapid transit system which I hope will eventually turn to the west and come back through the rest of Scarborough, thus providing one of the finest modern transit systems possible.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications is supporting these major developments in Scarborough. They are much appreciated by the borough, the council, the members and the people of Scarborough.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to address myself to this morning's concurrence of supply for the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, and particularly to the question I raised with the minister on November 29 in relation to public transportation and the present federal policy in establishing guidelines where there is a possibility of fuel shortages and the matter I raised about extending the GO Transit system into other areas in the province outside the Metro core, say to Burlington, Oshawa and Hamilton. I thought perhaps there was a need to extend it to areas in the Niagara Peninsula, London, Owen Sound and other places in Ontario. The minister did mention at the time there was a possible consideration of electrification of the GO rail system. I suppose that relates to the question and some of the comments my colleague previously mentioned on the Urban Transportation Development Corporation light rail.

Is the minister aware of the present American policy that perhaps could pre-empt any further offshore sales of light rail transportation schemes that are developed in Canada? If he is not aware of it, I would tell him the American government says as long as that federal government is paying a proportion of the cost of developing light rail services in communities in the United States plant facilities have to be located in the United States. I am thinking particularly of a Quebec firm, which has a large contract to supply light rail transportation system equipment to the United States, which says it has to move all its technology to the US. The same thing could apply to UTDC if it is talking about doing business in the United States.

I would like to see the minister continue with additional studies in the area of GO Transit bus services to other communities. I know the minister said we could leave it to the private sector to do that, but I don't think that is good enough. If you look at the Niagara Peninsula particularly, Mr. Speaker, you find different bus companies have franchises which do not actually venture into giving urban services from one community to another. Some of these old franchises are sitting idle, or they can put one bus on just to say they do provide one service a day.

If one looks at the present federal budget as it relates to the cost of petroleum fuels, I think more people will be looking to conservation and efficiency in moving masses of people so this government is going to have to move towards the provision of urban transit facilities from one locality to another. We cannot allow these franchises to sit there idle, as we have in many cases.

I notice, too, that perhaps there isn't sufficient funding for purchases of buses for the GO-Transit system, because apparently they have been renting or making use of the buses from Gray Coach Lines Limited and eventually they have to go out and rent buses from some other private transportation company in the municipality. That indicates there may be some municipalities that have too much unused equipment around.

As long as the government is paying 50 per cent, I think that's the figure, on capital outlay for purchase of buses by municipalities, maybe it should be taking a close look at this to ensure that they are not purchasing—

Hon. Mr. Snow: What percentage?

Mr. Haggerty: I thought you spent 50 per cent to purchase a bus. Is it higher than that?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Seventy-five per cent.

Mr. Haggerty: I am glad to hear that. The minister may feel too much equipment has been purchased and there is idle equipment. This is indicated by the fact that the present shortages experienced by GO Transit can be met with sufficient buses from Gray Coach which in turn can make use of other buses from other transportation systems along the line. I suggest we have overspent in some areas and did not spend enough in others.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We don't subsidize Gray Coach's buses.

Mr. Haggerty: No, I am afraid the minister doesn't—

Mr. Kerrio: You don't have to. It is a money maker.

Mr. Haggerty: —but a day is going to come—

Mr. Kerrio: One of the few you have.

Mr. Haggerty: That's right, a day is going to come. If I can recall the special report on the Gray Coach's problems a couple of years ago that related to Greyhound and Gray Coach battles to get certain routes in Ontario, there were some good comments that suggested they should be expanding their services to other urban areas in Ontario. With this high cost of energy before us now, and more later on, it is going to cost more yet to get people moved in large numbers by buses or by light rail. There should be some direction from the ministry on special studies in this area.

One of the better ways to travel is by bus, but I am afraid in the Niagara Peninsula there isn't sufficient service now. Gray Coach, or some other bus company that has the franchise from one municipality to another, should be expanding that service in conjunction with GO Transit. Maybe you should even be looking to provide GO services directly to St. Catharines and Niagara Falls, perhaps by light rail, with major connections in Hamilton to continue on to Toronto and make connections there.

It is a broad area, and your ministry will have to be more involved in the mass movement of people, through either public transportation or in conjunction with the private sector. I bring that to the minister's attention. I can see he is going to have to move in this area; I hope he starts moving now.

Mr. Nixon: Just irresistible, isn't it?

Mr. McClellan: It really is. Once it turns into a roundelay like this it is almost impossible to stay out of it.

I will ask the minister if he will deal with an aspect of his government's discommodulated transportation policy as it affects Metropolitan Toronto, an aspect which has to do with all the unresolved bits and pieces of broken or unfulfilled promises that relate to the Spadina expressway extension on the one hand and the Spadina subway on the other.

We are beginning to see the private automobile zanies in the northernmost regions reviving their campaigns on behalf of the private automobile and for the extension of the expressway system south, to the detriment of the public transportation system and the Spadina subway in particular. The ministry, as usual, has retreated into its cocoon and is lying low.

If I could have even a modicum of the minister's attention, there are important issues in front of the government that have to do with park-and-ride facilities to enable the Spadina subway to become functional instead of a $200 million white elephant still unused during peak rush hour periods. Second is the matter of the widening of Bathurst Street which is currently before the cabinet, Mr. Speaker, which is why I raise it here.

The pro private automobile zanies in the northernmost regions are trying to extend the expressway system by degrees, as they have in the past. The latest ploy is to attempt to widen Bathurst Street to funnel the traffic from the Allen Expressway that much farther south. It would run in direct competition to the $200 million public subway that is basically parallel to this most undesirable expressway.

I would like to know two things. When does the minister intend to honour his promises and commitments and implement the park-and-ride facilities north of Eglinton; and when does he intend to deal with the question of the widening of Bathurst Street? I'm sure I can speak on behalf of the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick in expressing the hope that the widening will be opposed so that we won't have one more encroachment of the expressway system at the expense of public transportation; and that we'll have, at long last, the honouring of a commitment made as far back as 1971. Otherwise, do we have to wait until the next election before the minister unveils the latest instalment of these seemingly perpetual promises in aid of the public transit system in Metropolitan Toronto? Why doesn't the minister tell us right now what it is he intends to do with respect to unfulfilled promises of aid for public transit?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Just find one.

Mr. McClellan: Perhaps the minister could answer more audibly when he gets to his feet.

I have one other question on behalf of the member for Etobicoke, who has already spoken. He asked me to ask the minister whether he will be present at the resources development committee meeting this evening at 7 p.m. for the discussion of the committee report on the inquiry into the Ontario Highway Transport Board? His presence would be received with open arms, I gather, on behalf of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'd like to comment on some of the remarks that have been made by the honourable members. It is interesting to see that the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham) is still showing a lack of confidence in one of the greatest transportation developments in the world today; that is the one being carried out by the Urban Transportation Development Corporation.

The member's lack of confidence in that development really surprises me. He certainly knows about and I'm sure he understands the system and the success of the research and development project that has been carried out. His leader keeps talking about research and development; certainly this has to be one of the most successful programs in many years.

Mr. Cunningham: And expensive.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Certainly it costs some money, we know that. When the member talks about the $50 million to $60 million that has been spent by UTDC on research and development in the last five years he should compare that to a couple of hundred million dollars perhaps that de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited is going to spend in the next two or three years to develop the Dash 8, or the $150 million they've spent in the last few years to develop the Dash 7. One doesn't develop—

Mr. Cunningham: And they're selling.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Just wait. One doesn't develop these things without spending money, one doesn't do it by rhetoric, sitting over there on the other side of the House complaining and talking doom and gloom.

Mr. Cunningham: What have you sold?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Just wait and see. Mr. Speaker, I think the Urban Transportation Development Corporation and this government are going ahead with research and development on electrically powered transit vehicles, both light rail vehicles and intermediate capacity transit systems. That type of research was started at the right time. We are many years ahead of the United States and other countries in this development. The people who are criticizing it will have to eat their words very soon.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The Miami bid hasn't been called yet. The member knows that, why does he ask stupid questions?

Mr. Cunningham: When are you going to sell it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: He just keeps asking stupid questions every day; just wait and see.

There has been no money squandered and wasted, as the honourable member says, by UTDC. He will find that every dollar spent on research and development is going to prove to have been very well spent.

At a time when there is an oil shortage, when we have an opportunity to move in with electrically powered transit, we have the technology now, at the right time to implement it where other jurisdictions and other countries do not.

Mr. Cunningham: Like the Swiss and the Germans. We are years behind of them.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The honourable member talked about Ancaster and Dundas. I don't know of any problem in Ancaster and Dundas. If there is a transit problem in Ancaster and Dundas, for God's sake tell me; I don't know, Ancaster and Dundas haven't told me they have a problem.

Mr. Nixon: Well he's their member; he is elected to speak for them.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He hasn't told me they have a problem.

Mr. Nixon: He did this morning.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No he didn't. He just complained about something with a vague reference to Ancaster and Dundas. I suppose he is going to send a copy of Hansard to the local paper.

There has been discussion by several members about the role of the Toronto Transit Commission and TTC fares. Recently I sent a letter to the mayor of every community that operates a transit system in the province advising them of our funding policy for 1980.

Mr. Kerrio: You should have been in charge of the Arrow. We would still be making it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes, if I had been in charge of the Arrow it wouldn't have been scrapped, I will tell the honourable member that.

Mr. Kerrio: Tories are different in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It wouldn't have been scrapped. We would have been building them now instead of looking around to buy something offshore. The Toronto Transit Commission has been mentioned by several members. There is no doubt about it, the TTC is one of the greatest transit authorities in the world. People come from all over the world to look at the TTC system. It is a credit to Metropolitan Toronto and it is a credit to this government, because that system wouldn't be what it is today if it weren't for the massive funding we put into the TTC system.

Certainly the fuel increases which are going to be brought about over the next few years are going to have an effect on the TTC.

I will tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, the comments I have had from the chairman of Metro, from the chairman of the TTC and from the chief general manager of the TTC with regard to our revised funding formula for all transit authorities have been nothing but complementary. They have told me privately, unfortunately they don't seem to be saying it publicly but it is part of the business, that the new funding proposals we have put forward will mean there will certainly be no TTC fare increases in the coming year.

We heard doom and gloom from that side of the House last year about how the TTC was going down the drain, their ridership was going down. Maybe, Mr. Speaker, you saw in the paper the other day where they have—I don't know how many million more riders this year than they anticipated; and they have $6 million additional income they didn't anticipate.

Mr. McClellan: No thanks to you.

Hon. Mr. Snow: This is what we anticipated and it has worked out the way we thought it was going to work out. It is just ridiculous that some of the people in this chamber keep criticizing and preaching doom and gloom about the transit systems in this province. We, in Ontario certainly have, without a doubt, the most generous and well thought out transit policies with our municipalities of any jurisdiction in North America.

Ridership, as I said, is up on our transit systems. The member for Etobicoke mentioned transportation energy research. Certainly we are doing research. We have a very active program with the Ministry of Energy we have had going on for a number of years.

Mr. Philip: So active you won't even let me into a meeting you had with them.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Now, just a minute. The member said we wouldn't let him into a meeting. To my knowledge he never made a request to attend the meeting.

Mr. Philip: Certainly our research officers did, and you wouldn't let me in on the press—

Hon. Mr. Snow: The member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) got onto his extrication speech again. I know he wants to send out a press release that he has made this speech. He knows very well where the program stands now. He knows very well, I have told him, that my ministry, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of the Solicitor General, have been working on an interministerial task force. The report is at the printers. The report I expect to have any day is outside of my hands, it's being prepared by the Solicitor General. I haven't seen it but the minute the report is ready it will be presented to the members.

Mr. Philip: You mean you don't know what's in it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: We have not been frittering away time on this program. It is a new program.

Mr. Philip: Tell that to some of the wheelchair victims.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The honourable member likes to elaborate, he likes to exaggerate. I can't answer those kinds of irresponsible comments. Irresponsible comments are all they are.

The member for Riverdale, of course, discussed our perennial project, the de Grassi Street GO station. We are obviously continually reviewing our GO Transit program and improving.

Mr. Philip: Are you going to send a Christmas card to the wheelchair victims?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Next year I will leave the honourable member off my list, that's for sure.

Mr. McClellan: Is that a promise? Why don't you leave me off your list, too?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes, and him too. In fact, I will leave all the socialists off, because really, God almighty, it's just a waste of hospitality. Not you, Mr. Speaker, because of course you are one of us.

Mr. Martel: I think you should refute that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ziemba: Rise on a point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I didn't necessarily mean by political stripe, but by philosophy and thought and deed, Mr. Speaker, that is what I was referring to.

The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) again made a lot of irresponsible comments.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: In all of that interchange I missed what the minister said about the one important matter in this concurrence vote.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I missed that. At the moment we again have no plans for the installation of a station at this time at de Grassi Street, but as I said we are continually reviewing GO Transit plans and that is part of our review.

Mr. Renwick: The minister won't mind if I raise it again from time to time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I will be very disappointed if the member doesn't raise it again when my estimates come back before the House, early after the new year I expect.

The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere criticized our transit policies. I think my colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, answered most of those criticisms, most of those inaccuracies, very well.

Bus shelters, that's another interesting point. Bus shelters are the responsibility of the Toronto Transit Commission. We subsidize—

Mr. Warner: Oh, here we go.

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. Snow: If the member thinks my ministry is going to go out building bus shelters on corners in Scarborough he has another think coming.

Mr. Warner: I don't expect you to do anything.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We subsidize Metropolitan Toronto for 75 per cent of its transit capital. If he has any complaints about where a bus shelter is located he had better see his friends at Metro.

Nothing but doom and gloom comes from that member. He likes to run our transit system into the ground, the best one in the world.

Mr. Warner: No. I asked you how you were going to respond to the federal government.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It was interesting. Yesterday I had a visit from the new commercial representative of the consulate of France. He has only been in this country a few months now representing France, and he said the greatest impression he had in coming to Toronto was our wonderful transit system.

He talked about the subway, the new streetcars, the GO system; he was very impressed with the transit system we have developed in this country.

The member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) again mentioned the expansion of the GO system to the Niagara peninsula. As I mentioned, we are doing a review of our total GO Transit system legislation and policies. It's a little better than five years since the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority was formed; I have asked my deputy minister and senior staff to work with the GO Transit board of directors to do a review of our operations after a very successful program over the past five years.

I don't want to lead the member for Erie to believe we're going to expand GO Transit to Owen Sound, London or Niagara Falls because that is not the role of GO Transit. GO Transit is a commuter system. He's talking about an intercity service, which is being very badly handled by the private sector.

GO Transit is now offering over 160 buses. That is a tremendous fleet of buses developed over the past eight or 10 years. We are taking delivery early in the new year of six new Orion buses from Ontario Bus Industries in Mississauga that has developed this new bus on which TATO will be taking delivery very soon.

The member for Bellwoods' comments about the Spadina expressway and unfulfilled promises don't really deserve an answer, because he didn't really come up with one promise not fulfilled by this government.

Mr. McClellan: We can park in your letterbox, can we?

Hon. Mr. Snow: On the park-and-ride facility, there is correspondence on file. I can tell the member exactly what the situation is. We have offered the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto 75 per cent capital subsidy to build the park-and-ride facility.

We've done a study in co-operation with Metro and made recommendations where we think the park-and-ride facility should be built. Metro Toronto has not, to my knowledge, made one move to implement any plan for that facility or to take advantage of our offer of 75 per cent funding.

My ministry is not going to go in and build that parking facility at the subway, that is the role of Metro Toronto. When Metro decides to build it we are committed to supply the funding.

To my knowledge, there are no outstanding unfulfilled promises to Metro Toronto or to any other municipality in this province with regard to their transit systems.

Mr. Speaker: The resolution before the House is for concurrence of supply for the Ministry of Transportation and Communications.

Resolution concurred in.

MINISTRY OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. Nixon: I wanted to bring to the attention of Mr. Speaker and the minister my concern that the government policy dealing with beer and liquor advertising has not been fulfilled. The present minister is already shaking his head, but he knows very well that his predecessor made a commitment to this House that there would be substantial reductions, if not abolition, and control of the beer advertising that I believe is putting undue pressures on the youngest groups in the community to expand the drinking of beer.

Mr. Speaker, you perhaps are in a position to know that I am not speaking from the position of a teetotaler, far from it, but I do believe that the pressure put on young people by the lifestyle advertising in support of beer in this country is unfair and that it is our responsibility, as members of the Legislature, to reduce it and, in my view, abolish it.

I have been impressed over the years with the advocacy advertising of some of the distilleries. Seagram's, coming from—we won't talk about their background particularly, but whatever it is, at least Seagram's in their advocacy advertising is preaching moderation.

Hon. Mr. Drea: All of them do.

Mr. Nixon: All I can do is report to you, Mr. Speaker, as a person who looks at the ads, glances at them, the impression that they make on me. Certainly in the December issues of most of the magazines the distilleries have the major part of the advertising and it doesn't look like advocacy, in-moderation advertising to me, with the twinkling Christmas trees and the roaring fires and the lovely ladies sipping away at the good stuff, with the gentlemen leering down their decolletage.

Mr. Ashe: What's that? Describe that.

Mr. Nixon: I don't know. It means if you drink enough you will get lucky.

So from the minister's interjection saying that all of the distilleries are practising advocacy advertising, I can only presume that the advocacy they are pushing is the advocacy of buying more of their product.

From my very cursory observation of the distillers' ads, I say that Seagram's is by far the best, because it isn't just some kind of a bow to moderation. There is a strong impact, a very strong impact indeed, showing by way of specific examples what happens to people who have all of the very best opportunities, by education and everything else, but lose those opportunities through immoderate use of liquor.

I don't think there are many people in this House now who advocate—although there once was a day when it was advocated—that we abolish the use of liquor. Obviously, it is not possible and I don't think it would be a proper thing. I would resent it myself, and the people I speak for would resent it.

I also resent, however, the heavy, lifestyle advocacy of the use of beer by young people, the implication being that it makes them better sportsmen, better people, probably better lovers. The implication is there and I believe those ads are injurious to the community.

I would also say, just as an aside, that they are some of the cleverest and most attractive television ads that we look at; there is no doubt about that. The people are carefully selected to represent the very best of the athletic, good-looking young people who are living a lifestyle that all young people would like to emulate. The message is clearly there that in order to live that lifestyle you have to use the product that is being advertised.

I would also say that some of the brewers are committing a good deal of money to the support of sporting activities and so on. I don't have too much of an objection to that, particularly since they are restricted from supporting sporting activities involving people younger than about 18 or 19.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's not true.

Mr. Nixon: It may not be true, but Labatt's, which was going to support a hockey dinner in my constituency to entertain visiting Norwegian hockey players, withdrew from it when they found the hockey players were going to be below drinking age. I thought that was a good thing.

Frankly, I do find it a bit offensive that the beer advertisers are so directly associated with hockey and football and all of the other games. The association between a very natural, competitive spirit, something that is probably stronger in Canada than in most other countries, the association between that and the support of the breweries I find somewhat offensive.

Mr. Speaker, I have not provided myself with the quotes of the previous Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) who made a commitment publicly that this advertising was going to be controlled, but by that we understood reduced, and even eliminated. All we know is the pressure of these ads has increased. We are very concerned that the present minister is not following up enunciated government policy, and for one I am concerned and disappointed.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, may I say in response to the interjections that I do not know it. I know what I see on the television. I know what the previous minister said in this House, and I do not feel that the present minister is fulfilling that commitment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I take the gravest exception to that. You keep repeating it, and it is not true.

Mr. Nixon: Well that's fine, Mr. Speaker, but just as a point of order I would say to you, and to the minister through you, that we are in a debating parliament. I am putting forward my views and he will have every opportunity to put his forward. Why can't he wait until I have completed mine? Certainly we want to discuss this matter in a moderate way. Why can't the minister do that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Then say it the way it is.

Mr. Nixon: The next thing he is going to do is offer to take me out behind the Legislature and black my eye. That is the way he usually tries to settle these arguments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I want that remark withdrawn. I did no such thing.

Mr. Nixon: Does the minister mean to say he has never made such an offer before? Does he deny it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, I have never threatened the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, and I want that remark withdrawn.

Mr. Nixon: I can certainly say that he never has, because he has more sense than to do that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I want that remark withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A point of privilege was brought to my attention. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk did state, as I understand it, that the minister had made such a remark regarding another member.

Mr. Nixon: I said the next thing he will do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wonder if the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk would like to reorganize those remarks and withdraw.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to, but on your instruction I do.

Mr. Hennessy: Mr. Speaker, can I have the option of promoting this bout? Mr. Hoy and I would like to promote it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any further comments? The member for Etobicoke.

Mr. Philip: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me an opportunity to speak on the estimates of this ministry.

The first matter I would like to deal with is the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada home warranty program. It seems to me we have proven over and over again that this program simply is not working. It is slow, it is a constant harassment to try and get any kind of action out of the program.

I have here just one folder on one case. This has been going on since June 1979. I have the greatest respect for Mr. Simpson, executive director of the business practices division. I know he has done his utmost to try and get action for me in this case. I don't think my comments in any way reflect on him or his ability, because he is certainly dedicated to trying to protect the consumer. But I ask the minister why it is that MPPs have to write letter after letter? Why is it that a talented public employee like Mr. Simpson has to involve himself in the serious but petty disputes between a bunch of my constituents and a developer, and still no action is taken to get remedy for the people on New Lovecourt, a rather inappropriate name, in Rexdale?

We are talking about people in 10 or 12 houses, people who have spent anywhere from $125,000 to $150,000. In many cases it involves two and three families trying to raise that money to put the down payment on a home. Many of them do not have English as their first language in terms of writing and speaking, yet they are still faced with the very problems that I brought to the minister's attention and to the HUDAC home warranty program's attention in June, 1979.

I and other MPPs have gone through this process over and over again. The only way we seem to get results out of this government in terms of protection for the new home buyer is to go to the press. In a similar incident in Rexdale I had to have pictures of myself and one of the home buyers on a mound of earth a year and a half after we first reported the initial difficulty to get any kind of action for the consumers.

Here we are with just one other case. Despite all the time I have spent, all of the meetings I have had with the owners, all of my phone calls and letters to Mr. Simpson and the various people at the HUDAC home warranty program, many of the complaints are still outstanding. I say to the minister when we have that kind of system, when we tie up elected representatives' time that much, when we tie up key civil servants, and public employees' time that much, the program simply isn't working.

I would also like to deal with the problem of Condominium Ontario. I read with interest a statement by Michael Armstrong, public relations director with Condominium Ontario. In the November 8 issue of the Etobicoke Gazette Mr. Armstrong said that he found my attack on Gordon Batchelor, president of Condominium Ontario, during the inquiry in the justice committee, of which I am chairman, to be offensive. This attack was made during the inquiry of the justice committee into the operations of Condominium Ontario, an organization which has been imposed on condominium owners without their request and for which they are now going to be charged an extra levy.

I would like to tell the minister I find it offensive that it was necessary for me to interrogate Mr. Batchelor and the minister for two hours on the workings of this organization, which is initially funded by over half a million dollars of the taxpayers' money. I am sure the taxpayers will find it equally offensive that an organization which pays Mr. Armstrong's salary has admitted that staff people were hired without advertising positions, and that the president of Condominium Ontario interrogated board members to find out who had actually leaked the minutes of this publicly-financed body to the press.

I am sure that the taxpayers will find it offensive that the president of our own association, the Etobicoke Condominium Association, Mr. Terry Littlefield, was forced from the board of Condominium Ontario because he had the courage to voice the opinions of those people who had elected him as president of the Etobicoke Condominium Association, even though those opinions happened to disagree with the views of the minister and of the previous minister, and the views of Condominium Ontario.

They will find it offensive that Condominium Ontario actually took a vote by making every director sign his name on a ballot, and that this procedure was justified by the public relations office, Mr. Armstrong's office at Condominium Ontario, by claiming that it was covered under the Corporations Act. That matter was later exposed to be nonsense when the president of Condominium Ontario couldn't show me anything in the Corporations Act that in any way justified that kind of undemocratic and arbitrary action.

I'm sure the taxpayers will also find it offensive that Mr. Armstrong sends out, at taxpayers expense, propaganda directly on behalf of Condominium Ontario and indirectly on behalf of the Ontario government to condominium boards across the province. These lists to condominium corporations, prepared at taxpayers expense, are not available to people such as Terry Littlefield, president of the Etobicoke Condominium Association, and others in the condominium association, including myself, who may have views differing from Condominium Ontario and the government.

I regret Mr. Armstrong's salary is paid, at least initially, by the taxpayers and that he finds it offensive that I as an MPP continue to expose the secretive and manipulative way Condominium Ontario works on behalf of the government and not on behalf of condominium owners in this province.

On November 13 I wrote to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, thanking him for supplying me with some of the minutes of the meetings of the board of directors of Condominium Ontario to members of the justice committee.

Unfortunately however Mr. Armstrong, who sent the material, failed to include the minutes of the October meeting. No doubt this was an oversight, but we have yet to receive them. In my letter of November 13 to the minister I asked him if I would be receiving those. I also asked him to advise me of what position he was taking on future minutes of Condominium Ontario and whether they would be made public, both to the press such as the Condominium Newspaper, and to members of the Legislature and people like myself who are interested in these matters.

I haven't received a reply from the minister. I'd like to know his position on that. Since he is the one responsible for Condominium Ontario and initial financing of it he has a certain responsibility in terms of the secrecy or lack of it, or the openness with which this organization may operate.

Those are some of the issues I am concerned about. I'm also concerned about correspondence to the minister, and which I spoke to Mr. Kumer, about concerning the problem of Etobicoke residents and other residents in the city who are denied access to cable TV service by certain landlords.

This matter was brought to my attention by people living at 2548 Kipling Avenue in Rexdale. Upon investigation, however, I discovered other buildings in the borough of Etobicoke, not necessarily the riding of Etobicoke, are not receiving cable TV for similar reasons. These include 186 Stevenson Drive and several other buildings. Maclean-Hunter Cable TV Limited similarly reported they'd been refused by owners in the Lakeshore area access to certain buildings in the ridings of either York West or Humber, but none the less elsewhere in the borough of Etobicoke.

I believe the tenants have a right to information delivery through a cable in the same way they have a right to access to information delivered via the post office or by parcel delivery service. To deny them this access is to deny them a basic right to information. In the case of 2548 Kipling Avenue, Rogers Cable demonstrated over 50 per cent of the tenants were interested in cable service, even though an aerial system was available to them free of charge. It was simply a matter that one of the owners, who is very proud of his building, and I must admit has been a reasonable landlord in other matters, for whatever sentimental reasons simply doesn't want a cable running through his building, even though it was demonstrated to this particular individual by taking him to other buildings that there would be no defacing of any significance and even though the company carries insurance up to $1 million to cover such circumstances.

I understand from Rogers that the situation in my riding is going to be fixed up. They now have another meeting with that landlord and they expect they will reach some kind of an agreement, hopefully this week. However, this doesn't remove the problem. The problem is that surely tenants should have a right to access to cable TV if they are able to negotiate privately with the local cable company to have that kind of service delivered to them.

I sent the minister a draft of an amendment to the Residential Tenancy Act which I propose. I recognize that it stands a much better chance of seeing the light of day if the minister introduces it and that is why I didn't introduce it directly in the House, although I will be happy to do so as a private member's bill if there is no action on the part of the government. I hope the minister will respond to some of the correspondence I have sent him on this particular issue because I know the various officers in his ministry are concerned and recognize that it is a problem.

Mr. Gaunt: I just want to raise briefly with the minister a matter that gives me some concern. I have a company in my constituency named Bainton Limited. They operate a wholesale and retail outlet for leather coats and jackets and leather goods of all types. They also have a tanning operation associated with that retail and wholesale business.

There arose a problem about two or three years ago when a chap came into town and set up a similar business and called himself The Tanner from Blyth. It was a style name, I gather. It was registered as such on February 15, 1978. The same gentleman has in total six different style names, all of which were registered at different times, such as Leather City and Suit Shop and that kind of thing.

What has happened is that Bainton Limited put this chap out of business in Blyth, where Bainton Limited is located. The other gentleman simply couldn't compete. He moved out of town and he moved to London, where he set up a similar business, and he is calling himself The Tanner from Blyth.

He apparently can't compete any better in London than he could in Blyth and he is going out of business. He is telling everyone within earshot that the Tanner from Blyth is going out of business and of course they are associating that with my constituent's company, Bainton Limited. The company is receiving telephone calls saying: "I hear you are going out of business. What's wrong? You have been in business for so many years."

This is a long-established company. I stand to be corrected on this, but I think it has been in business for well over 60 years in total and it has had a good reputation in the market. People from the United States come up and buy leather goods, coats, jackets, gloves, all sorts of leather goods, at this establishment and they have developed almost an international reputation which they now feel is being blighted by the operation of this other gentleman.

I have discussed this matter with the ministry officials at various times. I have made the point that the use of the style name The Tanner from Blyth is misleading, deceptive, and certainly as far as Bainton Limited is concerned very disruptive. I am told the other gentleman has not violated in any strict legal sense any of the provincial acts, either the Corporations Act or the Business Practices Act, and that the only possible action is for Bainton Limited to discuss this matter with their lawyer and perhaps go after the person whom they consider to be the offender under the common-law passing-off action.

Well, Bainton Limited isn't inclined to do that. They don't think they should have to go to that extent. I just quote a portion of the letter I received from the president of that firm under date of November 26, 1979. He says: "I feel that if our government will allow such shysters to infringe of any business, let alone an old-established one such as ours, it is time for us to discontinue our factory outlet here in Blyth."

He also indicated in the same letter that the federal, provincial, personal and corporation tax either paid or to be paid for the year 1979 will amount to $365,733. That doesn't include the payroll. In other words, it doesn't involve the people who are employed there and the income tax those people would pay.

I just indicate that to the minister to point out that this is a well-established business; it is a good business; it is a business that has been there for a long time, very reputable, with good people operating it. Here we have someone coming in, almost a fly-by-nighter, and disrupting a business of this nature to this extent.

I just thought I would raise it with the minister. Perhaps there isn't anything legally than can be done. The latest conversation I had with Mr. Simpson was that Mr. Bainton should come down when he is next in the city and Mr. Simpson, along with myself, could sit down and review this whole matter to see if anything could be done. As of the moment that hasn't been done. I hope it will be. I would like the minister's comments.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I just have two very brief matters I would like to raise with the minister. The first matter is I am not aware the ministry has put out any pamphlet in an explanatory sense about the computer pricing mechanism that is coming into force at the various chain stores—I think there is some shorthand phrase for the strips that appear on all of the products now and the method by which that pricing is going to take place.

It may be the ministry has put out to the public an explanatory memorandum or an explanatory brochure on a couple of sheets to tell us what it is all about. I don't understand it; I know very few people who do understand it. I would suggest to the minister it might be a very useful pamphlet to have available for people so that they could begin to understand what is taking place at the cash registers in the supermarkets under this new system of pricing—more by way of explanation than as an argumentative value judgement, simply so people will understand.

The second matter which is of continuing concern to me is the delay in the ministry's introduction of legislation dealing with the fundamental questions of consumer warranties. I do not understand why we have gone through so much in the fashions of consumerism in this province, yet we have continued delay in implementing all of the work which has been done leading up to a modernized revision of the consumer warranty legislation. I think it is an essential part of the basic protection of consumers in this province. I would hope the next session of the assembly would give us an opportunity to see that bill, to debate it, discuss it, hear what people have to say about it and have it enacted into law. I hope the minister would take those two matters under consideration and comment about them.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to address myself to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations on his estimates as they relate to a particular tax base for the province and that is horse racing, which comes under the minister's jurisdiction.

I am concerned about the possibility that the Fort Erie racetrack may eventually close its doors. There is some indication by the president of the Ontario Jockey Club that consideration will be given to the possibilities of phasing out this racetrack. If it does occur, and I hope it doesn't, this means there will be two racetracks within the Niagara region that have been phased out through difficulties of operation.

There are some difficulties within the horse racing industry in the province, but if we look at the operations in the town of Fort Erie it is one of the best, and perhaps the best dressed, track in North America. It would be rather a regret in this particular community if the doors were to close.

Mr. Kerrio: It's not just the sport of kings.

Mr. Haggerty: No, it's not the sport of kings. This is one of the major tourist attractions, one might say, in Ontario, and a major industry to the town of Fort Erie. It generates some $300,000 a year in municipal taxes alone. It creates a number of jobs for about four to six months a year, and there is quite a spinoff to other service industries within the town, the hotels, motels and other areas of accommodation for persons employed at the track.

I was interested in reading the Harness Tracks of Ontario brief opposing offtrack betting. The area I want to discuss with the minister is his ministry's position regarding offtrack betting in Ontario.

In their brief to the members of Parliament, that's the federal government, and to the Legislative Assembly in Ontario, they say, "The pari mutuel dollars are already too heavily taxed to make the 'horse industry' able to afford the cost of a new partner, off-track betting, in many minds." They do discuss some of the areas in harness tracks where they agree that the solution is not offtrack betting. Their solution is, "an immediate additional two per cent commission payable to track operators, plus a revision to the scale of commissions paid to the track operators, which in turn would be paid immediately to participating horsemen on track who produce the races, and in turn flows through the breeding industry which raises the horses, both thoroughbred and standardbred. The federal government is in a position to legislate this law immediately, with no risk to anyone, and the amount of money gained will far exceed any anticipated gains derived from offtrack betting."

I am sure the minister is aware of the offtrack betting in New York state, which hasn't been that great a success. It hasn't moved the bookies off the street, because the revenue is still generated in sports betting. That is the biggest area and why the bookies are still there. I suppose if we enter into offtrack betting in Ontario we will still have the bookies on the street wagering on sports. The minister shakes his head and says no. Then perhaps he is considering bringing in legislation that would include what—dog racing?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, never.

Mr. Haggerty: Not dog racing; perhaps wagering in sports then? I don't know what he means if he says no. One minute he is for it and the next minute he is against it. I bring it to his attention because there is a problem here. I brought it to the attention of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) in his estimates. I brought it to the attention of the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman). It's time the cabinet took a second look in a new direction, because if we do go to offtrack betting it will eventually lead to all the races being run in the southern part of the United States.

The lobby and pressure that can be brought upon this government will lead that way. I don't think we can afford to have any more closing of racetracks in Ontario, in particular, in the Niagara Peninsula. With the additional revenue the minister has accumulated over the last two or three years, about $37 billion to almost $50 billion this year, maybe a little bit of that should be added to the purses at tracks which don't—

Hon. Mr. Drea: We do.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, but not high enough. It has to be higher to encourage a stable industry in Ontario. The minister can see it coming, so I suggest an increase to offset some of the low purses at tracks that don't draw the crowd for wagering. This is one area in which he should consider upgrading it a little, giving a little bit more to encourage it.

With proper advertising by the industry and by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, we can make Fort Erie a viable racing community and racetrack in Ontario, in fact in Canada. The minister has to take a second look to see we do not have any more closures. The industries depend so much on it, even the horse breeders and owners. It creates jobs from the spinoff.

It is something that should be looked at very closely. I've read suggestions that advertisers should be permitted to kick in funding for certain purses at the racetrack. They've tried it, but maybe a little more encouragement from other industries may assist in certain areas. It's an area the minister is going to have to take a close look at. I hope this ministry would give consideration to my comments as the representative of the mayor of Fort Erie.

Mr. Warner: There are a couple of matters I'd like to raise, Mr. Speaker.

One is regarding aluminium wiring. The ministry, in response to the report tabled by Dr. Tuzo Wilson had established—I can't remember the correct title for it, it was a hotline in a centre.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Aluminium wiring and resource centre.

Mr. Warner: Aluminium wiring and resource centre, thanks. That has been established and it has been in business for a little while now. I'm wondering if there has been a report from that centre as to their activities and what they have been able to discern while they've been in operation as to the extent of the problems and so on?

Second, has there been a decision about the repair where problems have been identified, where a consumer phones in and says, "Yes, I have a problem. Here's what it is." Has there been a decision on whether the government will pay for that repair?

I am still not very pleased with the government response over the aluminium wiring issue. From the outset it was quite evident there were problems. When you look at the Tuzo Wilson report very carefully it says yes, there are problems with aluminium wiring but not serious enough to ban it. There are problems, but Dr. Wilson plays them down a bit.

The evidence compiled in the United States says the problems are serious enough, that we should take direct action. Fortunately, at least one part of the government did take direct action. Ontario Housing Corporation refused to use aluminum wiring in any of its new projects. I will say that I appreciated the action by Ontario Housing in my own riding. When they discovered a problem with wiring in one of their apartment buildings they notified the tenants, they shut down the electrical system for X number of hours and they made the necessary repairs. They did not use aluminum wiring as a replacement, they used copper wiring which should have been used in the first place, obviously. They have taken a far more responsible approach to the problem than Ontario Hydro has and Ontario Hydro is probably the source of the problem, as opposed to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I know that the ministry has responsibility over it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I missed some of that.

Mr. Warner: In my opinion, the problem rests more with Ontario Hydro than it does with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. That ministry has the responsibility, but Ontario Hydro are the ones who have been fighting it. They are the ones with the lawyers and they are the ones who are able to exert pressure. I think they are the source of the problem, quite frankly. That is my view on it.

I want to ask something else. I am very puzzled about why there hasn't been a change in the pricing policy of the LCBO. If I understand the system properly, every time there is an increase by some source outside the direct control of the liquor board, that results in a magnified increase to the prices on the shelf to the consumer.

For example, in the latest federal budget the federal government increased the excise tax. I think the ratio is roughly that if they increase it by 11 cents then that will translate to about 25 cents on the shelf.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It depends on the product. There is a variety of markup.

Mr. Warner: Yes, there are a variety of things and there is a very useful description here: "The current pricing policy of the liquor control board is to adjust retail prices on an ongoing basis to reflect cost changes as they occur. This action becomes necessary as a direct result of the decline in the value of our Canadian dollar; the increased charges for ocean freight, bunker surcharges have increased twice this year as a result of the increased oil prices; and the ever-increasing worldwide demand for wines. Accordingly, the laid-down costs of each shipment are reviewed and adjusted four weeks after the product has been shipped to stores to avoid increasing prices on existing stock."

So that the product price is the supplier quotation, the conversion to Canadian dollars, the ocean freight insurance, the federal and excise duty, the federal sales tax—

Hon. Mr. Drea: You are only talking about wines. You didn't make that clear. If you want to make that clear it's fine. It depends upon the product.

Mr. Warner: Okay. Perhaps I have a misunderstanding about the differentiation between that and the spirits, but if I understand the system properly you take all those costs, add them up and then put the markup on top, which means that if any one of those components is increased there will automatically be a greater increase in the total price because the percentage applies to the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Or decrease.

Mr. Warner: Or decrease, but from the federal budget we are talking about an increase that the consumers are going to see.

It seems to me that policy is wrong. Why should an increase in the federal tax translate into a greater increase on the shelf?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't want to preclude the member from speaking but what he is talking about is not within the scope of my ministry. It is the responsibility of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). I am just an agent.

Mr. Warner: Okay. There has been some confusion over who sets pricing policy.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In this House, back in March or April, there was a very definitive statement made by both myself and the Treasurer that markups are the sole prerogative of the Treasurer.

The responsibility of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, through me, is that the markup is properly calculated. All we do is the arithmetic. The markup is the sole prerogative of the Treasurer of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: All right. Then that suggests I have to direct my concerns to the Treasurer at the appropriate time, and I will do that. I am wondering if the minister has ever made a representation to the Treasurer on behalf of the consumer. I assume he takes on the responsibility of trying to protect consumers. I am wondering if he has ever made a presentation to the Treasurer, suggesting the present policy is not a good one and should be changed. My concern is that the consumers in this province are not being adequately protected over the cost of beer and wine and spirits.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Does the member want lower liquor prices?

Mr. Warner: I didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: What did he say then? I have just told him it is not my responsibility.

Mr. Warner: I do not like to see an automatic, magnified increase in the price of those products.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's the Treasurer's responsibility.

Mr. Warner: The federal government decides to add a few cents to the excise tax. Fine. That ends up being translated into a very large increase to the consumer. The members of the House understand this; we are torn between the moneys raised by the sale of alcoholic beverages in the province, which is a substantial amount of money, and the serious problems of alcohol abuse. I don't believe for one moment that the answers to alcohol abuse are found automatically by raising prices to some astronomical level. I just don't believe that solves the problem. The argument I would use against that is to reflect back on the experience of prohibition.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member is right. Nobody is arguing that now.

Mr. Warner: Good, okay.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am glad to see an intelligent member of the House.

Mr. Warner: Thanks very much. It may be the only compliment I get this session, I am going to reflect in it for a while.

I just wonder if the minister has made a presentation to the Treasurer, suggesting that the pricing policy is not correct; every time there is an automatic increase in the federal tax we shouldn't suffer a magnified increase. That was my question.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Because of the ramifications internationally, particularly dealing with multi-trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, as it is properly known, I will answer the member privately. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be in a position in my windup to give any type of answer to that at all.

Mr. Warner: Fair enough. The real question needs to be addressed to the Treasurer. I understand that, and I will do that.

Finally, there is a comment I made several years ago; I make it each year and I will continue making it. I am not going to blame the minister individually. I think it is a very conscious policy decision of the government.

The ministry is one that is called, very deliberately, consumer relations. It is not consumer protection. I don't think anyone in the province should be deluded into thinking we have a ministry of consumer protection—we don't—and the most dramatic evidence of that is the whole question of food prices.

Time and time again, the question of the necessity of having a commission, board or agency which would review the price increases to determine whether they were justified, has been raised in this House. If increases are not justified, the government should have the power to roll back those unjustified increases. Obviously, if they are justified, the increases should go ahead. The government has resisted that every step of the way and, I assume, will continue to resist it.

One of the basic reasons for that is the flaw in the government's approach. What we have is a ministry of consumer relations, where it is nice to sit down and talk to people about things. We do not have a ministry of consumer protection, where the government would bring in legislation on behalf of consumers to protect consumers as they stand vulnerable to a lot of companies which tend to increase prices whenever they feel like it.

We went through some debate over metric conversion—there is a great opportunity for companies to take advantage of the public when they convert from the imperial system to the metric system. Of course, a smaller amount of product can be put into a container, the same price can be charged and the public may not be the wiser. The company, of course, makes a huge windfall profit.

Examples of that have been brought into this House. We've asked for legislation for protection. We're not likely to get it because again it's consumer relations. The minister will talk to the companies and to the consumers but won't do anything; that's unfortunate.

It's unfortunate, because I believe we have a minister who is capable of action and of doing a lot of excellent work on behalf of the people of this province. He demonstrated his good abilities in his previous portfolio. He was certainly aware of the good comments that came from various members of the House about how he carried out his responsibilities in that portfolio.

He's in a portfolio now where the government policy hamstringing whatever abilities and skills he has, because of this government's determined policy not to protect the consumers of Ontario but simply to sit down and talk to these companies and corporations which make their livelihood ripping off the public in the province. That's very sad. Mr. Speaker, a change in direction is needed, and the sooner the better.

Mr. G. E. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment I would like to address to the minister, and I assume the responsibility of the policy of operation of the Brewers' Retail stores in Ontario fall under his jurisdiction.

In my particular area, more so during the summer months, the local stores stock glasses and various items that relate to the drinking of beer or to the hospitality industry. It seems to me that we have small retail outlets —some smaller and some larger—that sell this type of merchandise. It is my feeling that it is unfair competition for the brewers' outlets to branch out into other types of retail selling.

The grocery or convenience stores in my area and throughout the province aren't permitted to sell beer. It seems to me that the prime responsibility of the Brewers' Retail stores is the sale of beer and ale. I'm wondering if the minister is aware of this and if he could have some consultation with the operators of the Brewers' Warehousing Company Limited and review this policy.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I feel it's unfair competition, particularly in the tourist areas and in smaller communities, where the individual stores rely on the buying public to support their sometime marginal operations.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, my involvement in the concurrences is really a request to the minister to see what he can do in regard to what we in the Niagara Peninsula see as a very serious threat to the very worthwhile involvement of the ministry in the Fort Erie racetrack.

I don't want this to fall on deaf ears, because it's very important to the people in the peninsula and our little friend from Scarborough-Ellesmere has had his turn. He usually takes more than the allotted time.

I'm not being in any way critical of the minister's involvement in racing at Fort Erie, but rather I'm making a request to him to help the people in Fort Erie, in the peninsula to see what can be done about the retention of racing in Fort Erie. It's coming closer and closer to the time when this critical decision is going to be made.

If I might, I would make a few comments on a situation that seems extraordinarily unfair. In Ontario, we have in the Wintario lottery some futuristic-looking machinery to draw up some coloured balls and a few people involved in that gambling affair. On the other hand, we have quite an involvement in Fort Erie in terms of track, real estate, farmers producing feed, racing horses throughout the province—we can take that to great lengths if we want to pursue it. But it seems rather strange that in this gambling involvement, it seems to be going quite successfully on one hand with a very minimal investment, and on the other we can't do something with a tremendous investment that means a great deal to people even beyond the bounds of Fort Erie.

Maybe through this ministry, through the Ministry of Industry and Tourism or maybe even with the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz), perhaps tying in something with what he does there, the Legislature can do whatever it can to help protect what appears to be a very worthwhile involvement there. I am asking for that kind of help.

The mayor of Fort Erie was here within the last couple of days speaking with some of the ministers to see what could be done. It is one of those things where there is a concurrence among everyone in the area that it is a good thing for the area. I don't think there are any objectors.

I won't get into too many details of what might be done to help the situation, but maybe one point is worth making. Offtrack betting has been legitimized in New York State. It doesn't appear to be functioning all that well there.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh yes, it is.

Mr. Kerrio: I am happy in one way to hear that, but my concern is that it had a tremendous impact on Fort Erie and people in that immediate area; New York has taken from the people of Fort Erie. It is one of the big things that has happened. I am not sure that legislating offtrack betting is the answer. I really don't have that much feel for it. All I know is I have been there during the last two or three summers to see the operation, I am impressed with the facility and I hope the minister will do anything he can to keep it functioning.

I have a couple of other matters I would like to talk about in passing. I have a gentleman who has had so many frustrating experiences with the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada that I don't know what to say to help him in his dilemma. Over the past three or four years, he has been very unhappy about a new home he had built by one of the people covered by HUDAC.

He took me to the home, finally. We have exchanged correspondence on it, too. I know the minister has done all within his power. I am suggesting there is a fine line here and, coming from the business world and understanding a little bit about guarantees and warranties, I hope HUDAC isn't going to pursue a warranty where it simply patches things until the time expires. It appears that is what has happened to this gentleman, Mr. Cox from Niagara Falls. They have fixed the pargeting so many times on his brand-new home, they just go through the motions. When steel forms are used on a concrete basement, the finish is so smooth it's nearly impossible to get anything to stick to the surface. That has been known to the industry for years and it doesn't take much explaining for everyone to understand that kind of problem is not taken care of by going back with a trowel and a bit of mortar and putting it back on until the time expires.

The workmanship on the home in other instances I don't think was up to par, and this gentleman simply has not had the kind of satisfaction a good small company would give without having a warranty. Tradespeople in the past, who had some kind of feeling about their reputation, would go back and do something about it. It seems, when you force people, they are going to do the very minimum, and I wonder if that is good enough.

On that topic, another area that bears looking into is the tremendous amount of import gadgetry that never sees any kind of test. You see them in all the small corner stores, you see them everywhere: all the little tools to use in the home—the can openers, the bottle openers, the corkscrews—and much of it is junk. I shouldn't mention the names of places it comes from, I suppose, since that is not acceptable any more, but it comes in in great volumes.

I have raised the question before. In fact, I went on a little trip up north, and I asked my wife to pick up a can opener. I was going to say a corkscrew, but we know you shouldn't go up north just to drink. In any event, not knowing she had got one, by coincidence, I picked one up at the grocery store on the way to Temagami. On my very first attempt to open a can with the can opener she bought, the thing fell apart in my hand. It was made in Taiwan.

As luck would have it, I had one of the same make, coincidentally, and the same thing happened at the first use.

In talking to many of my neighbours and friends, I have found that is the usual case rather than the exception. There is a tremendous amount of this kind of material and equipment on the market. I am not suggesting any answers. I am just suggesting that is a problem, and I don't know what the answer might be.

On those three matters—my concern regarding the operation at Fort Erie, with many jobs and involvement at stake, and the other matters as they relate to my concerns on the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada and much of this other material coming into the country at a time when we might very well be advised to try to get small manufacturers to make those things right here in this country—I would like to hear from the minister what he thinks might be the answers to some of these problems.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this concurrence motion?

Mr. Gaunt: I think my colleague from Ottawa East intended to make some remarks before the minister responded.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just outside here, waiting to get on, and I would like to thank my colleague for keeping this debate going. I will not keep it going for any length of time, but I do want to make certain comments to the minister pertaining to the concurrence of supply for his ministry.

First of all, I want to convey to the minister—I don't think I have done it before, and I have no qualms about saying it—that I think his ministry, through the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario, is ripping off the public of the province as far as the liquor prices are concerned and certainly as far as imported wine prices are concerned. I have no qualms at all about saying that. Anyone who wants evidence of this only has to look at the Globe and Mail of this morning to see the markup, over and above which this government puts on a provincial sales tax.

In the process of obtaining funds in an area which is quite legitimate—I don't have any brief for the liquor or tobacco industries, and I think the minister knows that—it reaches a point where, because of the amount of money that is taken by the province, it reminds me a bit of the shark type of attitude or ripoff that the oil companies are sometimes involved in when they take advantage of increases, shortages and that sort of thing.

I want to place that squarely on the record. There are times when it is a clear ripoff. It is so fraught with contradictions. That is what bothers me: Here he is, dragging in all this money on the one hand, while on the other hand the minister is saying, "Be your own liquor control board." We have these ads saying, "Be your own liquor control board." He allows the advertising which my friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) talked about this morning. When I look at all these millions of dollars he is taking from liquor, and I see the percentages being spent for rehabilitation of people who have problems and that sort of thing, I feel all of this is disproportionate.

The overall policy is contradictory and full of what I consider to be illogical approaches going in one direction and then in another direction. It is what I consider to be an abuse, a ripoff on the part of the government, and

I have no qualms at all about putting that on the record.

The other thing I want to say is that on behalf of some of my constituents I am somewhat disappointed by the approach taken by the minister. I have to get back to the minister, because he is like Harry Truman: the buck stops with him. He is the only person I can get to across the aisle. If I had some of those liquor inspectors around who come down to Ottawa, and if I had some of the intermediate people they deal with on a day-to-day basis in front of me, I would love to tell them that. I quite understand that the minister doesn't know everything that is going on.

I have raised this with the minister in question period and I have raised it with him personally. I have raised it in correspondence with the minister. Again, the problem is that a number of liquor inspectors in the Ottawa area were charged, under the Criminal Code, with accepting benefits or whatever. The minister appoints four liquor inspectors in the Ottawa area.

Subsequent to the charging of these people, new people came down to enforce the laws in the Ottawa area. The difficulty caused by that was that what had been acceptable yesterday in terms of standards for service clubs, clubs involved in sports and others, was no longer acceptable as far as enforcement was concerned.

I will give one example, the Rideau Lawn and Tennis Club, which is probably the oldest tennis club in Ottawa and which has always fostered junior tennis; in fact, some of the top players from Canada have consistently come out of that club because they had a tremendous junior program. It is a nonprofit club. Frankly, it is the only club in Ottawa the general public can afford. It has the cheapest rate and is open to everybody. An inspector walked in and said, "If you are going to start serving liquor around here, you have to consider the juniors." Well, of course, there are juniors around tennis clubs. The first thing you know, there is an aura painted around the club. They start putting up barricades around the bar, and start putting up walls over here and saying they had better not open any longer on Sundays. The club people start saying, "What the heck is going on?" Obviously, around a club that has been in existence for the better part of the century, you are going to have juniors.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Wasn't that fixed up a year ago?

Mr. Roy: No, it is still not fixed up. The result is that, first of all, they have to shut down the bar for a while until something happens. I don't know what it is. I try to follow those liquor laws and find some logic in them, and I have great difficulty. They shut down the bar for a while. Finally the bar reopens. But, although they have been open on Sundays for a number of years, now they can't open on Sundays any more because, apparently, of juniors around there. They also have to build a wall some place else.

[12:15]

I just give that as one example. That's the Rideau Lawn and Tennis Club.

The Royal Canadian Legion, the Knights of Columbus and other people for years have had a number of activities including bingos, bean suppers and things of this nature. Inspectors walk in and say, "You can't open your bingo to the public; it's got to be for members." They say: "We've been doing this and it has been acceptable for all these years. The bingos are used to raise money to support minor league hockey and to support the boys' and girls' clubs in Ottawa." They have a variety of things going on.

The inspectors then say, "No. Sorry, the liquor laws of Ontario do not permit you people to operate your bingos in that fashion." Then the inspectors go down to see the Knights of Columbus. They held bean suppers which were a tremendous success; thousands used to attend these things. They raised a lot of revenue for a variety of community activities. Again the inspectors say: "No. It is limited now. If you want to sell tickets, they have to be sold only to members or something."

A new standard has been imposed. Overnight, what was acceptable yesterday is no longer acceptable today.

I was told as recently as a couple of weeks ago—I brought this to the minister's attention—that the Eastview Legion in my riding has had to discontinue its bingo. They don't have their bingo any longer. What does that mean? It means thousands of dollars that they no longer have to assist community activities. They are no longer involved in a whole variety of activities that they were supporting: minor league hockey, transportation of people who are disabled and so on. It is the same for the Knights of Columbus, because of the new attitude of liquor inspectors, apparently, towards their bean suppers. So they no longer have funding for a whole host of what I consider to be very worthwhile community activities.

We traditionally talk in this province about getting people involved in the community, and say we shouldn't always rely on government. I see these boys in Ottawa in their latest budget saying, "Don't rely on government; let people do things."

These service clubs were doing things. They were not relying on government; they were not always relying on Wintario. There was a lot of initiative involved in these various communities, and the whole community benefited; now they no longer have it. Why? Because liquor inspectors are coming down riding shotgun, shooting from the hip and saying, "The law is the law and that's it, boys; we're sorry for the consequences."

That's what bothers me about the liquor laws in this province. They allow people to use that sort of discretion, which I consider to be not in the best interests of the community at large. I appreciate that the minister came down hard, a tough guy, as I recall the first day he was sworn in in this ministry, about the topless waitresses and that sort of thing. I remember that. The reputation was established: "The buck stops here, and a new attitude is going to prevail."

I have to tell the minister that he has failed. There is evidence that he is not working out that well, because his boys along the way, up the chain of command, are still acting the same way. I don't know if he is sending orders down, but the messages are not working out. Somewhere along the way the communication is not being made. Maybe the minister should strap on the guns and start working his way down the line and see what the hell is happening along the chain of command.

I am telling the minister, if I suspected there were illegal activities going on, that these service clubs somehow were flagrantly breaching the law in the process of raising money or something along that line, I could understand it. But that overnight, just because some liquor inspectors had been charged, which is no fault of the service clubs—in fact, none of the service clubs apparently were ever involved with these inspectors; private operators were apparently the ones giving out the goodies—

Hon. Mr. Drea: The trial is today, I believe.

Mr. Roy: The trial is today? Okay, it is not before a jury anyway. We will stay away from that aspect. But the service clubs certainly are not involved.

I am saying to the minister he had better start looking down and say, "What is happening here?" because I don't think that—

Mr. Speaker: The member is becoming repetitive.

Mr. Roy: Is he?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Roy: I am trying to emphasize the point, because the first couple of times I don't seem to have got it across to the minister.

I do not want to become repetitive. I accept the admonition of the Speaker. But I hope that the minister's performance is not only form but there is going to be some substance to it. I am having to ask myself a few questions now, and I hope that will not continue; I am interested in what the minister does, and I am interested in whether his career is a success. Yes, I am. But it is going to be a success if there are some meaningful changes not only in form, but also in substance.

Let the minister keep that in mind and maybe get his boys to check to see what is happening out there, and let's get these service clubs involved in community organizations again.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Rather than going through the comments member by member, perhaps where there was a duplication by members of particular subjects I might address the subjects for the sake of continuity.

First of all, there were a number of concerns on various aspects of the liquor responsibility. I want to be brief and blunt and candid with the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy). I was unhappy a year ago. Perhaps it was in June; in any event, it seems I remember it was just before the closing of one of the sessions, when the question of the Rideau tennis club's difficulties were brought to me. It was my understanding that those difficulties had been straightened out.

I recall saying to the member at that time I was unhappy about the indigenous realities of eastern Ontario, which I thought covered the subject. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of what the honourable member has brought forward today I am damned mad.

I also must advise the member that I am in receipt of some concerns by Detective Lamoureux of the Vanier force.

Mr. Roy: Yes. He gets excited for nothing.

Hon. Mr. Drea: He is bringing forward pretty basically the proposition that has been brought forward by the member, where he is talking about inconsistent administration of the regulations.

I want to tell the member for Ottawa East, and realizing the lateness of the season, that very early in January I am going to go to Vanier. I want to discuss the matters that are of concern, because they are in this same general area, with the Vanier city police force. I intend to sit down and discuss the matters with the member. I would like to have as many service clubs as possible. We could do it in the evening when they are available. I will bring senior people from the special occasion permit and licensing branches of the board.

I was unhappy some months ago. Now I am just damned mad. It is the only place in the province where there appears to be this inconsistency. What has been brought to my attention is that, in the light of the charges laid, the inspectors who were brought in from other areas to do temporary duty were concerned that unless they took the utmost stringency in reading the act they, too, might be charged. That's nonsense. I just don't accept that at all.

The one area where there appears to be problems is with the fair and impartial administration of the Liquor Licence Act as it pertains to service clubs, community organizations and other endeavours, because it appears to be only in the environs of Ottawa. The member is absolutely correct. None of the Criminal Code charges, in the remotest way, involved this type of operation. I will be in touch with the member. There's going to be a crackdown in Vanier. If it is necessary to have firings, there will be firings. Period.

Mr. Roy: Invite me to the meeting. I will talk to them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I expect the member to be there. I'll set that up. If there needs to be firings or disciplinary hearings because people will not accept instructions, then so be it.

In terms of the prices of alcohol, as I drew to the attention of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner), the markup and the pricing are not the responsibility of this ministry. They are the sole prerogative of the Treasurer. Ours is merely an arithmetic role. As I pointed out, I am not in a position to reply to those rates and so forth. The Liquor Control Board of Ontario is merely an agent of the Treasurer. We must accept the instructions in the budget. The LCBO and myself as the minister responsible would be in utter contempt of the legislative process. When the Treasurer lays down the markups, or the tax in the budget, we're as bound to obey that as a retailer is to collect the appropriate amount of sales tax. We do not set the policy in that regard.

There was some concern expressed about the retail selling of products other than alcohol in Brewers' Retail establishments. I will take that up with the LCBO and with the Brewers' Warehousing Company Limited. There are not the restrictions on Brewers' Warehousing selling other than beer or ale as there is in the Liquor Control Board of Ontario operation, because they are a free-enterprise operation. They are not the government. They are a co-operative owned by the brewers themselves. I will take that up through the LCBO and direct their attention to the concerns about the unfair competition with small business, particularly in the tourist industry.

I want to draw one thing to the attention of this House, because it is always brought forward: "You will do this year $412 million in alcohol profit. Last year you did $360 million or so. There's alcohol abuse out there. The health programs aren't being funded," et cetera.

Let me put on the record that three per cent of provincial revenues come from profits of the LCBO. Twenty-seven per cent of the provincial budget is in the health field. I am not going to suggest that we have the alcohol prevention or alcohol reclamation programs that are beginning to turn the tide in the field. I'm not suggesting that at all.

What I am suggesting is it is a rather false argument to suggest that funds be earmarked specifically out of the LCBO or out of the profits. Indeed, cash is not the prime necessity in some alcoholism treatment programs; it is necessary, but it's not the prime ingredient. Program development would be far more efficient if it were directed by the health field rather than to the LCBO. Twenty-seven per cent of the provincial budget deals with health problems whereas, as I say, only three per cent of revenues are from the LCBO.

There have been some concerns about the slowness of and difficulties with the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada. I'm going to say very bluntly to the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip), that matter will be settled to my satisfaction in 30 days from today.

I wish someone would convey to the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) that I don't know terribly much about that particular case, but I say to him that last year a similar type of thing was brought forward by the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan). I will use my good offices and we will resolve that situation before we have another set of estimates. I don't know how we will do it or in what manner, but it will be rectified and remedied.

I want to come to a number of concerns, particularly those in the Niagara Peninsula concerning horseracing and the whole area of social gambling. I have said in the Niagara Peninsula that I was not appointed the minister of the ministry responsible for horseracing and parimutuel betting in this province to preside over the closing of any racetracks. It is my considered mandate that I am to preside over the opening of racetracks.

There is no question that certain economic developments have affected the viability of the Fort Erie racetrack, not the least of which is the purse-sharing agreement, where there is building a considerable thrust by horsemen—that is, the people who own them—that their interests would be better served by having thoroughbred racing confined to Woodbine and Greenwood. This is the same thrust, albeit by the harness horsemen, that resulted in the closing and mothballing of the Garden City Raceway for harness horses.

I am determined to keep Fort Erie open, but we have to—

Mr. T. P. Reid: How about offtrack betting? That'll help them all.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'm coming to that. The member may play a role in it.

We have to look at the realities of the situation. The realities of the situation are that when I want to do anything about the horseracing industry, be it a situation like the plant at Fort Erie which I regard as the most integral part of tourism promotion in that particular area of the peninsula, every time I come to the question about purses, every time I come to concerns about the more than 30,000 to 40,000 people in the industry and their economic viability, I am hamstrung by the inability of whoever operates in Ottawa as the Minister of Agriculture to make a decision about offtrack betting.

If they would come forward and say, "No, there will be no offtrack betting," then there are remedies that I have to look at. It may not be possible for me to deliver them, but at least I can look at the remedies. If they would say, "Yes, there is going to be offtrack betting," then the remedy that could be applied if they hadn't said that would no longer be a remedy. You have to look at things.

A year ago in January I made a speech to the National Association of Racetracks, in which I brought up this very question. There are all kinds of concerns in the racing industry but there is the inability of any provincial racing commission to deal with them, because we don't know what is around the corner.

The real villain in this piece is the federal Department of Agriculture, which wants to expand its empire. It is totally defiant of the overall government of Canada policy. I am talking about the policy enunciated since May 22, which is that where there is a duplication between federal and provincial services in a province, and the province has the resources to end that duplication, then the federal government disengages.

The federal Department of Agriculture has stonewalled and sandbagged a decision on offtrack betting. This thing about the Minister of Agriculture going to consult with me, that's nonsense. He's going to write me a letter. He can phone me any time of the week. We have two throne speeches on the subject, we have a number of other things, but the Department of Agriculture wants to run offtrack betting.

Any extension of the federal Department of Agriculture in the racing industry of this province is intolerable. We want them to disengage. The difficulty is, and I say this to the House, it must be terribly frustrating to the members as legislators when they are looking for a decision, just a decision, yes or no. But I suggest to the members that at least this time the full empirical role of the Department of Agriculture has come out. The Department of Agriculture says, "It does not matter too much about the length of the consultation process because we know what kind of machine should be bought." Out, out of this province. This Legislature will make up its mind about offtrack betting, who is going to run it and so on, but we have to have a decision.

I say to the members, and particularly those from the peninsula, where there is an economic difficulty, it is extremely difficult to try to have a remedy program when you don't know what is around the corner. If there is no offtrack betting, there are a number of things that have to be addressed.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I thought we were going to have a decision from the federal minister.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The decision of the federal minister was that, on the advice of the Department of Agriculture, he was going to consult again. I have made myself clear about what I think about the announcements of a week or so ago.

The Attorneys General of this country have gone on record and they have said regarding enabling legislation, "Let the provinces decide if they want it or if they don't want it," et cetera. That obviously doesn't cut weight with the Department of Agriculture. All I say to the Department of Agriculture is, "Don't play games with me, because any extension of what you are doing is intolerable; so get out."

I give an example: Last night, according to the rules of the Ontario Racing Commission, there should not have been a triactor in the 10th race at Greenwood, because eight horses couldn't be in it. That's a very definite rule by the racing commission. There were only seven horses. The Department of Agriculture said that since some money had been taken into the pool, they couldn't cancel the triactor. Greenwood Raceway had the prospect last night of either violating the federal code or the provincial code.

That's what I am talking about in terms of duplication et cetera.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What about the fact that the province takes $115 million out of the thoroughbreds when the horses are only running for $14 million?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In effect, they would not be running for $14 million were it not for the fact that one per cent of the $230 million wagered on thoroughbred racing goes back to a self-help program and three out of every four of those dollars go to the overnight purses.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's right. But the government is making more of a profit from the horses than the horse people.

Hon. Mr. Drea: We are making more of a profit out of harness racing, which is very successful. I do not think the take-out, quite frankly, is the panacea for the industry. What I am saying to the members is that there is no panacea. The difficulty is, until they get off their tails in Ottawa and stop fooling around and stop passing it on, there cannot be an intelligent long-range solution. Everybody in the industry will tell you that. If Ottawa will make a decision today, I will make it this afternoon. Then it is up to this Legislature either to agree or to disagree, but not to hang around and do this in perpetuity because somebody in the Department of Agriculture feels they will lose their control over racing. They should not have any control any way. They can have a co-ordinating role, and obviously that is necessary, but that is all. Out! We will pay them a licence fee, but out.

Mr. Roy: The minister should not have any problems doing that. Joe Clark does it all the time.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am not winning very much but I hope, when the racing writers discover my comments today, that I may win a little. In any event, the member did ask me for a commitment regarding Fort Erie. Yes, I give it to him. I give it to the member, I give it to the community and I give it to the track. I have been very concerned for more than a year about the future operations of Fort Erie. The member is quite correct; it is the handsomest race course in all of North America. There is no question about that at all. Also, as I say, I regard it as one of the keystones in the tourist promotion industry of the Niagara Frontier.

On the question of offtrack betting, the western district of New York State—which is Buffalo and Niagara Falls—is considered their weak link. Their gross is $103 million, and they are always betting out of town. So there is a market in that area and, through the things we can do, particularly in the future for Fort Erie.

I want to come to the question of what is being done about lifestyle advertising. I find the remarks about lifestyle advertising of beer by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) to be obsolete. Two or three weeks ago I was at the annual meeting of the successor to Toc Alpha; I think it is Alcohol and Drug Concerns or the successor to the temperance federation. In any event, I spoke at their annual meeting and I told them what we were doing about lifestyle advertising. They were quite supportive. They thought we had begun to crack and to turn back in that particular area.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I haven't noticed it in Norfolk.

Hon. Mr. Drea: This is constantly the thing but, if one keeps watching, one will notice. It is gaining momentum. Bear in mind the most fundamental point. They do not produce a commercial for X tens of thousands of dollars and then throw it away. They had a story board, almost like a comic strip, where they outlined what the commercial was going to be; that received approval. Then they would come back with their commercial, which bore very little resemblance to that, on the grounds that the director, the producer or whoever in California would not go along with the story board—you know, the old one about artistic freedom et cetera.

I put in a new rule. I said: "It is your final commercial that counts. I won't mind if your final commercial is thrown out; so it had better adhere to the story board."

We are seeing less and less of the lifestyle, bearing in mind that some of those tapes are grandfathered. It is a difficult area to proceed in, because of the difficulty with defining lifestyle and all the subtle nuances. We are seeing now more and more commercials involving only bottles or labels. There is no lifestyle in a bottle or a label. In other words, the happy warriors, or what have you, have disappeared.

[12:45]

The whole of the advertising for the first time is being governed by a policy; not by directives or anything like that. With directives and so forth, there's always the thrust to penetrate them or to say, "Let's see how far we can go." There is now a policy, and that policy is the one the cabinet adopted last spring concerning the breweries and minor sports; that is, everything they do must be measured by a spirit of restraint. It's "Pull back," not, "Up to the line and let's see how we can go through."

I am prepared to say that a year from now that even the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is going to admit that the original thrust of my predecessor, which I inherited and which I support—and I get truly angry when I'm told that I don't support it—is much more apparent. I do support it and I pushed it farther. I've had to deal with the practical applications of it, which in some cases have been difficult. I will say a year from now, or perhaps when my estimates are on in the spring, there will be such an apparent roll-back in terms of lifestyle advertising that even the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, who is profoundly concerned about this matter, will agree that things are being done in accordance with this matter.

In terms of the remarks that were made about Condominium Ontario, I want to say this: The corporation—that's what it is—has every right in the world to be concerned or to object—not to the questions, but to the manner in which the questions were addressed by the member for Etobicoke. I do want to emphasize that it is to the member for Etobicoke, because, in fairness to him, he was not the chairman of the committee when he addressed those questions. He very properly was out of the chair.

The one thing I do want to correct is this matter of the list that is being kept secret from the Etobicoke organization. The president of the Etobicoke Condominium Association, when he was a member of the board of directors of Condominium Ontario, said he would resign if that list were ever made public, because it was obtained from condominium corporations on the basis that it would be confidential. This is a very real problem. It is a problem I will be addressing in the very near future, but it is not one of those where some people have used their money to get a list and now won't put it out.

They went to condominium corporations, which said, "No, we're not going to give you a list." They said: "It will be absolutely confidential." Now, of course, there is the thrust that it not be kept confidential; that it be completely opened up. I want to emphasize that the Etobicoke Condominium Association, which now wants the list opened up, is the one that insisted in the beginning on the confidentiality and the privacy of it. I suggest to the member this is going to be a very difficult one for the minister to referee. He should keep that in mind. When people want something in the fall of the year, they should remember what their position was in the spring of the year.

In regard to the minutes, the reason one of the minutes was not in there was that the committee had not asked for it. They had not asked for that October one.

Mr. Philip: It was asked for by me in my letter.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I wish the member would pay attention to me. When these estimates were in committee, I offered to get the minutes. That particular minute was not relevant to this. If the member tells me the committee wants that particular minute, I will get it. It has to be remembered that this is a corporation dealing at arm's length from the government. They have their own board. The minister isn't there. They have their own minutes. In the future it's going to be a fully elected board; not just an interim board. We don't go to the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada home warranty people, who deal at arm's length from the government, and say their minutes are for the Legislature. The minutes of the new insurance agents' self-regulatory body were never intended to be filed with the Legislature. I don't see the basis upon which minutes from a non-shares, nonprofit corporation dealing at arm's length from the government are automatically put into this Legislature.

Mr. Philip: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister indicated it was the position of the Etobicoke Condominium Association—if not, he implied it was the position of the Etobicoke Condominium Association, or at least it was the position of Mr. Littlefield—that the minutes be kept secret or "confidential," which is the word he used, I'd like to point out to him—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I didn't say "minutes." I said "list."

Mr. Philip: Okay. That the list be kept confidential. I'd like to point out to him the minutes of the board of directors' meeting held in suite 706, 44 Eglinton Avenue West, on August 7: "It was moved by Terry Littlefield and seconded by Ralph Lewis that he reconsider a motion in the minutes of June 19, 1979, with regard to the confidentiality of the mailing list of Condominium Ontario."

I'd like to point out that motion, moved by Mr. Littlefield, clearly indicates he was in favour of having public disclosure of the minutes of Condominium Ontario and was not of the position indicated by the minister. He can check his own minutes, which he kindly supplied to me, from Condominium Ontario to verify that fact.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's point is on the record.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I understand Mr. Littlefield made the remarks in the presence of members there. If Mr. Littlefield did not make those remarks, then Mr. Littlefield can come and see me and say he did not make those remarks. It is so simple.

Mr. Philip: The minutes show otherwise. Do you not even trust the minutes of Condominium Ontario, not what someone might have said in some barroom or other?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, that remark is unworthy of the member. Those remarks were not made in a barroom. They were made in a boardroom.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I don't think the House is going to gain much by conducting this controversy further. It's a matter of record which I assume the minister will follow up in due course.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There are a number of things that were wanted. We will consider the request of the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) regarding the Universal Product Code and its general applications.

On the question of the consumer warranty, at the moment we are trying to seek uniformity in legislation across the country. If we cannot do that, we will obviously have to go ahead alone. As to what session it will be in, I don't know at this time. There is an additional report by the law reform commission which we have just received and which undoubtedly will shed new light and new thought upon the subject.

Regarding the concern about product safety, that is something the federal government is disengaging from the province. They will be able to devote more funds to it, and it is a commitment by the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to do much more in the area of product safety, which will answer many of the concerns of the member.

Although he is absent, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) did ask a couple of questions about aluminum wiring. I can provide a bit of an interim report. Since we opened up the centre, just before the opening of the March session here, there have been approximately 8,600 phone calls; of those, about 5,700 asked for an inspection which, as you know, is provided free. We have done all but 443 of the inspections requested. The problem with the ones remaining is that they have made appointments with us for an inspection and then haven't been home; so we are giving them until the end of this month. When they make an appointment with us two or three times and still break it, we begin to wonder if they want the inspection done.

The percentage of problems is about 15 per cent; faulty receptacles are the most common. We have uncovered an awful lot of houses that were wired without a permit. I'm not talking about the ability of an electrician or somebody skilled to do their own wiring; they get a permit, so it can be checked. We have found that an appalling number of these houses with problems have been wired in a most peculiar manner. There is very little we can do except to say, "You have to get a permit and somebody in here to start all over again, because, regardless of why you did it, you can't go on much longer with this type of wiring or you are going to have difficulties." I throw out that statistic, because it wouldn't matter what kind of wire you had when that sort of thing is done.

I want to say to the members they must bear in mind that Professor Wilson said aluminum wire is safe. You must go into how it is installed. We are looking at that installation. It doesn't have much relevance to the situation in the United States, because one of their major problems, the zinc screw, was never allowed here.

I am hopeful of being able to put out a full and final report on the aluminum wiring resource centre some time before the end of January, and I think that report will address itself to the questions asked by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

I want to thank the members of the House and those who were in committee for their constructive suggestions. I go back to last year when, if it wasn't for the persistence of a member on a long-forgotten and long-neglected case, probably nothing would have been done. There is an obligation on the members here to constantly stimulate the minister and the ministry into reviving lost causes and taking another look. I find that sometimes, when you take that last and final look, you come up with—

Mr. McClellan: No cause is ever lost.

Hon. Mr. Drea: If it is left in oblivion, it is lost. I want to thank the members for their constructive contributions and, as I say, I will take care of certain matters with individual members as rapidly as possible.

There is one last thing, a matter of very urgent importance, particularly to the member for Niagara Falls. There will be no casino gambling at the CNE. We are not bereft of our senses. The policy is, no casino gambling.

What is happening at the CNE has already happened at Western Fairgrounds, the Central Ontario Exhibition at Kitchener, at the Oktoberfest and so forth. What we have done is provided Monte Carlo operations at fall fairs and special ongoing events like Oktoberfest, putting all of the wheels and the tables under one operation. The one stipulation is, it must go to the fall fair. It cannot be run by an operator; it must be run by that fair or, in the case of Oktoberfest, by the Waterloo Lions. It is a control mechanism, and it is a very useful way of diverting money into capital funds. It must be retained by the CNE or other fall fairs, and there is a dollar limit.

So it is not a deviation from provincial policy, which is no casino gambling. This is social gambling. We think it will provide a perhaps not substantial donation to the CNE but enough to carry out a number of building projects both there and at other places that would otherwise have to be borne by the agricultural societies, which means the taxpayers. But there is no inconsistency with that and the policy of no casino gambling.

It is also my very firm understanding from officials in New York that there will be no casino gambling in New York state, including Niagara Falls.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The resolution before the House is for concurrence of supply for the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Resolution concurred in.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1979

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

DUMPING OF LIQUID WASTE

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I have been in this House for a number of years now, so I feel pretty familiar with the type of political gamesmanship we all indulge in from time to time. However, on Tuesday the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) made some statements which I feel went far beyond that. Because of the seriousness of the allegations he made I would like him to clarify them for the benefit of the House.

During question period he stated my staff and I were aware of illegal activity at the Upper Ottawa Street landfill site in Hamilton and that my staff had decided to take no action on the matter. He also implied that a judicial inquiry could implicate ministry staff and that the charges we had laid in the situation were, in his words, a smokescreen.

According to at least three media accounts he then went on to say, outside the House, that the ministry had laid the charges to protect its own officials; that two top officials of the ministry were implicated in the plan to dump waste illegally; and that the ministry employees participated in a coverup of illegal dumping. Apparently he then refused to name either the two top officials or to supply concrete proof of his accusations.

As the members may remember, this is not the first time he has taken this tack. This incident has been characterized by his unsupported allegations that ministry staff have been involved in illegal activity in some way. He keeps making these statements, placing the integrity of the entire ministry under a cloud of suspicion, but he has yet to offer a shred of evidence to back them up.

In a letter dated January 5, I asked him to produce his proof. I repeated my request in the House on March 13. On March 27 I gave a complete report on the situation to the Legislature, and I again asked him to show his evidence or refrain from making such remarks. I told him that if he wished he could give his evidence to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), the police or the courts which were hearing the case. He chose not to do so on all occasions in favour of offering allegations to the media. He seems to be pursuing this same course again. Therefore, I feel it is imperative this situation be clarified today, once and for all.

I want to know if the Leader of the Opposition agrees that the media accounts accurately reflect his comments. If they do represent what he said, then in the interests of justice I would like to ask him to name the two top officials he feels have been implicated in illegal activity or a coverup of such activity.

I would also like to ask him to produce the evidence upon which he makes his charges. If he wishes, I will meet with him today for this purpose, or arrange for him to meet the Attorney General or other appropriate law-enforcement officials of his choice.

He has stated he will only give his evidence before a judicial inquiry. There has been no evidence produced by the ministry investigation, by the regional police investigation, by the municipality's investigation or by the court case which indicates a judicial inquiry is necessary. If he has proof that this is not so, he is under an obligation to this House, and indeed to the citizens of Ontario, to produce this evidence for the appropriate authorities. If he has this evidence and does not produce it, he is responsible for allowing illegal activity to go unchecked.

If he does not have this evidence then I ask him, on behalf of my staff, for an apology for his attacks on their integrity. For him not to comply will leave a cloud of suspicion over the lawyers who filed the charges and prosecuted the case, over the ministry's regional staff who participated in the investigation, and indeed over anyone in the ministry who was at all involved in matters relating to the Upper Ottawa Street landfill site.

Mr. S. Smith: I wish only to say, on a matter of privilege, that every word I have issued on the subject of the Upper Ottawa Street dump has been accurate and can be backed up. I wish to say further that whatever information has come into my possession with regard to the Ottawa Street dump will be provided to a judicial inquiry when such a judicial inquiry is held, as it should have been long ago.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of privilege, I think it's that simple. If there is evidence, the people of this province deserve to have that evidence—

Mr. Breithaupt: Then call an inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will call an inquiry on one condition.

Mr. Breithaupt: There are no conditions in calling an inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would suggest to the member if his leader is prepared to stake his seat on whether his accusations are founded—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of the Environment, by way of a ministerial statement, has stated the policy of his ministry with regard to a certain series of events of an environmental nature in the province. By way of a request, he has asked the Leader of the Opposition to take certain initiatives. It is not the responsibility of one member to demand certain action of another member. The minister has requested certain information from the Leader of the Opposition. He has stated his position quite unequivocally and the matter should end there.

FEDERAL BUDGET

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, before I begin my statement I would like to ensure that the leaders of the opposition parties have received their copies. I would like also to apologize. There are only three copies at the moment; more copies will be coming through in a few moments.

Today I would like to make some observations about the federal budget. I do not envy the Honourable John Crosbie, the Minister of Finance, his task. He has inherited the cumulative problems of 16 years of misguided financial management of this country's economy. The last five years in particular have added to the woes of any government for a Minister of Finance.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Members are not going to hear me because I am going to read.

The federal debt today—

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope the school children in the galleries do not act in the same way.

The federal debt today is eating up about 17 per cent of the government's spending. Obviously, such a gigantic and growing bite out of the budget must be turned about. Thus, I accept in principle the objectives stated by the Minister of Finance to reduce his spending deficit, to reduce the growth in spending and to eventually bring his budget into balance. What I cannot accept are all of the routes he has chosen in order to do so.

Had the federal government the foresight in 1975 to do what this government has had the courage and the wisdom to do, to cut its spending below the inflation rate, then the problems faced by Canada and by its present government would have been far easier to manage.

In fact, as the Lambert report stated a year or so ago, under the previous government the bureaucracy was virtually out of control of the elected representatives. I sincerely hope that the action started by my colleague will signal the end to such a bad state of affairs. Having agreed with his objectives I must now comment upon his means.

There are some features of this budget, particularly those relating to investments and small business, which will lead to a healthier climate for investment. It is our belief, however, that the issue of energy pricing and energy taxation will lead to some difficulty and serious economic problems.

The members are all aware of the stand this government has taken with regard to oil and gas pricing. We have strongly opposed, and continue to oppose, price increases which go beyond the current federal-provincial agreement without any changes made to the distribution of oil and gas revenues.

Many of the proposals of the federal government will not help our economic performance and not advance the capacity of our economy to grow. In the view of this government, there must be a positive up-front offset, or massive reinvestment of the enormous energy revenues to ensure that the economy of this country does not receive a mortal wound in the next year; that the excise tax increase of 18 cents to the gallon, while better than the predicted 30 cents, is going to mean an additional $2.5 billion annually in tax revenues. Wellhead price increases next year are going to take another $2.2 billion out of the pockets of business and consumers.

The price and tax increases laid out by Mr. Crosbie mean that Canadian consumers could be paying $19 billion a year more by 1983. Ontarians will bear the brunt of these increases. We're going to pay $1.6 billion more next year. That translates roughly to $575 for every Ontario household. In 1983 we'll be paying $6.2 billion more for current volumes of oil and natural gas. What that means, Mr. Speaker, is that in the four-year period to 1983 our consumers and businesses will have paid more than a staggering $15.7 billion for their oil and gas than they would have without these announced price and tax increases.

I'm sure that the honourable members realize the gravity of the economic burden this places on us. There are two impacts which will begin to reverberate and echo through the economy, impacts that will damage the economic fabric of our society.

The first is higher levels of inflation. The federal Minister of Finance is predicting an inflation rate of 11 per cent next year. I find that particularly worrisome. I do not think we're going to see an easy year ahead of us if that prediction comes true.

The second impact is that we expect to see a drop in consumer and business incomes. For those who say that the energy price increases will not be hard to take, let me outline the impact these increases will have on Ontario consumers.

In 1980 most people will pay over $200 more for their heating oil and gasoline. That's about four day's pay before taxes. What does this mean for the average Ontario worker? After taxes, the family breadwinner is going to have to work six or seven extra days just to maintain the 1979 standard of living, or they can all demand that wage increase—and I think the members know what that would do to the inflation situation.

The situation will be more difficult by 1984. Individuals will be paying out some $900 a year more for their heating oil and gasoline. Even if wages rise by 10 per cent a year consumers will be paying out more than two weeks' wages, and that's before taxes, to meet these added costs. These increases are going to finance Ottawa's deficit and to increase the already bursting treasuries of the producing provinces.

There is even some question as to whether these measures will produce the energy conservation the federal government is looking for. It has been estimated by some that for every 10 per cent increase in the cost of energy, particularly of gasoline, energy consumption drops by only one per cent. That is hardly enough to produce the goal of energy self-sufficiency, yet it will place heavy burdens on our economy.

There are four other reasons why we oppose this imposition of higher oil and gas prices.

First, there is a considerable time lag between the time energy price increases hit and federal offsetting programs begin to ease the burden. In 1980 there are no offsets announced. It is not until 1981 the energy tax credit for low income earners takes effect. That program will not be fully operational until 1982, two and a half years away. Because of this graduated timing its offsetting impact is far less than the cash loss of the higher prices. However, we are pleased that they have at least taken some action to cushion the blow. I might add this action was taken largely because of the urging of Ontario.

Although the revenues of producing provinces will literally be doubled and heritage funds will swell with new wealth, the federal energy bank will see no more than a trickle of money in its first two years and conservation incentives, like the expanded Canadian Home Insulation Program, will only get a small fraction of those massive revenue flows.

Second, the federal government has said for some time that all provinces are equal. If I remember my history, that was the basis for the foundation of this country. But what Ottawa has done in this budget is to say that some provinces are more equal than others.

I am extremely disappointed the Maritime provinces are being favoured at the expense of Ontario and the rest of Canada. The subsidy to those provinces to offset fuel cost and electrical generation will surely be paid for in large part by Ontario taxpayers. That will be in addition to the inevitable rise in equalization payment to the other provinces following these increases in oil and gas prices.

Third, our opposition to this energy policy relates to the traditions of taxation established in this country. As the members know, its original purpose was to subsidize the higher costs of imported oil used in eastern Canada. That is the excise tax.

Mr. Speaker, that purpose has now been lost. The federal government is now proposing to ease its budget deficit with those revenues.

Fourth, the fiscal balance within Confederation will be materially affected by this budget. The federal Minister of Finance said net petroleum revenues, excluding the excise tax, will amount to about $90 billion total accumulation in the next four years.

To get an idea of what that means, I would point out to members that Ontario's annual gross provincial product is now a little over $100 billion a year. We are talking about cash flows that cumulatively rival the size of our provincial economy roughly every four and a half years. To compound that problem, the federal proposals would double the annual flow of cash to the producing provinces in four years.

Without any doubt, this will produce the most massive unbalancing of the fiscal foundations of this country we have ever seen. Some $40 billion in revenue will flow to the producing provinces over that four-year period. This sum amounts to some 45 cents out of every dollar earned going to the producing provinces.

The federal government has shown itself so far to be unwilling to discuss the redistribution of the wealth arising from the production of oil and gas—a redistribution which the province of Ontario has, in the past, willingly shared in.

Federal levies have always been used for the benefit of all of Canada. Historically, when Ontario was the wealthiest of the provinces we supported the others through our taxes. Ontarians paid more so the poorer provinces could benefit from our wealth. There were never any strings attached.

Turning to the field of public transportation, I am greatly dismayed the federal government would levy a tax on fuels used in public transit. While these fuels are subject to provincial gasoline and diesel taxes, that is more than compensated for by the heavy provincial subsidies for public transit.

I find it extremely difficult to square the federal actions with this loudly-proclaimed priority on energy conservation. I have already written to Mr. Crosbie, asking him to reconsider that ill-advised move.

My initial reaction to the energy aspect of this rather complex budget is that while some of the features meet Ontario's proposals in principle, they do not go nearly far enough. The consumer is really left with the prospect of financing the federal government deficit with higher taxes and higher energy revenues, while the producing provinces will get a larger windfall again. We have no guarantees the federal government will ensure the stability and growth of the national economy by planning for, and insisting on, the reinvestment of these large petrodollar revenue flows in our economic future.

Turning for a moment to the area of corporate taxation; I must say I was delighted with the proposals for small business contained in the budget. The development bond should be a valuable financing tool for small businesses and will complement the equity incentives which we have introduced in the Ontario small business development corporations program. This program will be particularly helpful in getting small businesses through this difficult period of high interest rates.

I am also very pleased with the tax treatment which the federal government will be according to the capital gains and losses on SBDC shares. In essence, the Ontario share credits will not be subject to capital gains tax. This and other tax provisions relating to the taxation of SBDCs that had previously been agreed to reflect the very positive attitude by the federal government to our SBDC program and we appreciate it.

With respect to the five per cent corporate surtax I will only mention that I would have preferred to see small businesses and manufacturing and processing exempt from that tax. Also, I would have preferred to see additional incentives for Canadian research and development contained in the budget.

Finally, on the subject of corporate taxation, I want to mention that the provision of rental accommodation in Ontario continues to be of high priority to this government and I am disappointed that the multiple urban residential unit or MURB incentive will not be continued.

There are other tax changes which will affect the consumer more directly. Before moving on to personal income tax changes, let me outline our reaction to the changes in the consumption taxes introduced by Mr. Crosbie. I have already dealt at some length with the increase in the gasoline excise tax. I have made clear that we view this increase as an intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. I have similar reservations, Mr. Speaker, about the additional federal occupancy of excise taxation of liquor and tobacco. While the federal government has played a traditional role in this field, it has now assumed the dominant role in tobacco taxation and is getting close to that position in alcoholic beverages. The squeeze play on provincial tax room concerns me a great deal.

I am more encouraged by some of the personal income tax changes introduced by the Minister of Finance. I have already mentioned the energy tax credit and said we are pleased the government has taken this step. However, I am concerned that this system of tax credits—the energy credit, the mortgage-interest tax credit, the property tax credit, the child tax credit—is becoming extremely complicated. While I am not doubting the worth of these programs, there is no question that the tax credit system is increasingly confusing for the average citizen. Because of this, I believe that Ontario will have to review its own position in the tax credit field. I will have more to say on that when I present my budget in the spring.

In the meantime, I was pleased with the capital gains changes proposed in the federal budget for promoting equity investments by individuals through RRSPs and the new common stock investment plan. Naturally, I was also pleased to see the easing of capital gains taxation on farmers. Canadians have often been told that they are a nation of savers. I hope that these changes get the money out of the socks and into the stocks where it will generate increased investment, more jobs and a stronger economy.

It was also encouraging to see the federal government proposing a major review of capital gains taxation, a review that I hope will lead to the improvements in that legislation.

Finally, while on the subject of personal income tax, I might note that I am pleased to see the exemption for allowances paid to volunteer firemen increased to $500. But that is not nearly enough. I personally urged the Minister of Finance to increase this exemption to $1,000.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn now to the fiscal projections made by the Minister of Finance. It was with some interest that I noted that he tabled a four-year fiscal plan, something that Ontario pioneered in 1977. These federal projections show a reduction in Ottawa's deficit from this year's level of 4.4 per cent of the gross national product to 2.1 per cent in 1983-84. While that is encouraging, it still will be twice the current Ontario deficit of 1.1 per cent.

Although we applaud Mr. Crosbie's efforts to reduce the federal financing requirements from some $10 billion this year to $4.8 billion in 1984, the federal expenditure projections are a little disappointing. I am also concerned about the ability of the federal government to meet lower deficit targets. During the four-year planning period, the total federal spending is projected at a 10 per cent annual rate of growth. This hardly can be characterized as belt tightening on the part of the federal government. In 1980-81 federal discretionary spending, which is mainly on its own account, will grow by 10.6 per cent as opposed to the 6.3 per cent for statutory transfer payments to the provinces and to individuals.

There are two key reasons for my concern. First, the high growth in discretionary spending, which is primarily "own account," could continue to place upward pressures on Mr. Crosbie's 10 per cent spending target. If this happens, that target could be maintained only at the expense of federal transfer payments. In particular, those payments made to provinces to support social programs may be reduced.

The second, perhaps even more critical, dimension of the problem involves the structure of the federal revenue base itself. This federal budget is showing the cumulative effects of all the tax reductions which were undertaken by the previous federal administration. While there may have been good reasons for each of these reductions, the net result has been the creation of a serious revenue-growth problem for both the federal and the provincial governments. Both these factors together have produced a major gap in the capacity of the federal government to reduce its deficit.

This helps to explain what the federal government has really done in developing its four-year deficit reduction plan. It plans to achieve deficit reductions not primarily through cutting down expenditures, be they tax expenditures or otherwise, but by raising taxes on energy. In fact, a fair amount of what we have seen in this budget has relatively little to do with energy policy and a lot to do with raising taxes of Canadians.

As I said when I first stood up to deliver this analysis of the federal budget, I accept and admire the financial objectives stated by the Minister of Finance. As I said then, however, and as I think I have made clear, I can't accept the routes he has chosen to do so. There are some considerable economic problems that will arise as a result of this budget.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In the coming months the economic performance of the country will focus debate on four issues: the rate of inflation, the level of new job creation, the level of new investment in plant and equipment and the whole range of energy issues. What the federal budget signals, quite validly, is the difficult condition of our economy and the deep fiscal problems the country has drifted into in the past decade. However, this budget will result in a slower rate of growth across the Canadian economy.

At the recent first ministers' conference on energy we documented the potential impact of various influences on the economy, including the effects of oil and gas prices and excise taxes. Based upon the information we have now, it seems that the economic impact of this budget will be significant in 1980, amounting to a loss in real growth of up to 0.6 per cent of the gross national product, and for some regions that could be a little higher.

Inflation will be as much as 1.5 per cent higher than it otherwise would have been. The increase in unemployment insurance premiums represents both an employment tax to business and a loss of income to workers. In 1977, Ontario taxpayers contributed $613 million more to the unemployment insurance fund than Ontario's unemployed received in benefits. This will be probably closer to $1 billion by 1980.

The negative effects on Ontario's employment will not be offset by the proposed new employment tax credit. The total effect of budget measures will mean that job creation across Canada will be less than it would have been. In Ontario, the loss of new job opportunities could be as high as 20,000 jobs. That is the impact in 1980 alone. The cumulative impact on the national economy of these measures will be much more serious over, say, a five-year time span.

The areas where our governments would be in conflict were, I believe, eminently predictable. We took our position on energy pricing back in 1973-74 and we have remained consistent. In the past, we have been both pleased and disappointed with the policies of the previous administration as we are with the current government's. We will continue to press for broader reinvestment of energy revenues in public transit, conservation, energy exploration, economic adjustment and self-sufficiency. We will continue to defend the national interest as we see it. We have a commitment to the Ontario consumers and, indeed, to the economy of this province to protect and support these more specific interests. Whatever the government in Ottawa, despite our political affiliation, the government of Ontario's responsibilities and duties remain constant.

MEDICAL CONSENT

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I realize the new rule of the House about the 30-minute limit on Thursdays. Had there been time today, I would have delivered a statement and then tabled a paper to do with medical consent. With your permission, I would like to distribute it and consider it as having been given inasmuch as I can't be in the House tomorrow. I had promised at least one member of the House to say something about it this week.

[2:30]

RESPONSES TO PETITIONS

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order under section 29(i) which says, "The minister shall provide a response to a petition within two weeks of its presentation."

On Tuesday, November 20, members of this caucus presented a petition to this House. Some 275,000 people signed the petition expressing concern about medicare in this province. This morning the minister, again, received further petitioning of a sort, with another 75,000 names.

The minister has said in the House on two occasions now that he was going to personally write to each person who signed that petition. May I ask under this standing order when we might get the response to our petition?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of order I have signed a general response which was filed in the cabinet office and I thought had been filed here. I have certainly signed it. It's just a general response.

But on the other part I felt that my response to the members' campaign and allegations was so widely covered that we're going to help the Red Cross instead.

Mr. Breugh: Very briefly, does the standing order not call for a response to the House within the two-week period? Since we have not received that response, what is our recourse?

Mr. Speaker: Has the response been tabled?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On that I'm not sure.

Mr. Speaker: Unless it has been tabled it doesn't meet with the requirement of standing order 29. Perhaps the government House leader could look into that.

ORAL QUESTIONS

FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer, given that by his own analysis it is now clear to him as it is to everyone in Ontario that the economy of Ontario will be drastically, negatively affected by this budget.

We have lost on the matter of oil price, oil taxation and on the matter of redistribution of oil revenues. Is the Treasurer now then prepared to demand from Ottawa the $460 million accruing to Ontario by way of equalization payments under the existing equalization formula so we can use that money to cushion the blow of this dreadful budget on the middle and low income earners in Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That matter, of course, will be raised again. I have said that redistribution is the primary objective. To this point we still have Monday and Tuesday to discuss redistribution at the first ministers' meeting and I think one should wait until we've passed that point.

The act is being administered as if the bill had been introduced, I have been assured of that. The federal Finance minister said in his budget that he has still not worked out the details of the energy tax, for example. I would hope that at the same time he hasn't intended to work out the details of redistribution until after the arguments on Monday.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Given that there has not been a single word spoken on the subject of equalization in the federal budget; and given that the bill the minister mentioned the federal government will be bringing in is apparently not a bill which the people in the federal Ministry of Finance seem to be expecting in the next year or so, why does Ontario not demand the $460-odd million owing to the province?

We've paid our share in equalization, it's time now for us to accept what's coming to us. Why doesn't the minister demand that money so we can use it in Ontario to cushion the blow of this budget for this winter?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member has always tried to make the redistribution of oil revenues and the equalization payments the same thing. They are not. If no change is made in the redistribution I have assured the member that the rediscussion of equalization formulae would subsequently likely follow.

Mr. Cassidy: Since it is now clear from the budget we had on Tuesday night that a major purpose of the increase in the federal excise tax on gasoline has been to raise the $575 million cost of the mortgage tax deductibility or credit—which is going to high-income home owners in this province and other parts of the country—will this government go to Ottawa and tell the federal government that it should take away that mortgage tax plan in order to take the $575 million and direct it to people on low incomes to protect them against energy price increases?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The energy tax credit of $80 per adult and $30 per child, unlike the property tax and mortgage-interest deductibility credit, is refundable. Therefore it will have some impact on people at the lower end of the income scale.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary Mr. Speaker: After reading this long statement to the House detailing the enormously negative impact this budget of his federal friends and brethren will have in Ontario, will the Treasurer now do what one of his predecessors, Mr. McKeough, did after a budget he didn't think was very helpful to Ontario back in 1975? Will he bring in a counterbudget of some kind this session in Ontario to mitigate the effect of the budget?

I would remind the Treasurer what Mr. McKeough said at that time. He said, "No member of this Legislature can be unaware of the fact the government of Canada has tabled a budget, a surprising document, a document irrelevant to the needs of Canada and Ontario, a document that fuels inflation, that is mischievous in terms of the clear interest of the people in the provinces."

He brought in a counterbudget. What is the Treasurer going to do now that it is his friends in Ottawa who have brought in a budget that has been destructive to the people of Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Leader of the Opposition is a complex person. It is a happy season but he is not a happy person. I often wonder whether I am listening to Harold Smith, Stuart Greer or just good old SS himself.

If you look at the timing of them, Mr. Speaker, most of the impacts, except for the 18 cents on fuel, are phased over a period of time. That period postdates my budgetary period. I am going to take my time, as I should, to calculate the net impacts to my budget—which, by the way, is doing very well and will continue to do well through this fiscal year. I will have whatever action is required in my budget.

Even under the Liberal regime we always tried not to take counterproductive measures unless we are totally committed they would be effective for our people.

INDEPENDENT GASOLINE DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch). He was here. Does the Premier know if the minister is coming back?

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is coming back in many ways.

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask the question of the Premier. He may know something about it.

In view of the discussions between federal and provincial officials as recently as yesterday regarding Gulf Canada Limited and the announcement it would be cutting back gasoline supplies to independents. Since the minister didn't seem to know yesterday when that question was asked, has the Premier today any new information he can give to the House on what seems to be a situation where Gulf is cutting back to independents rather than to its own people in a situation where there is really no call for them to do that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that the Minister of Energy has dealt with this related to another quite similar question yesterday with respect to another company, I suggest he will be here shortly and will be delighted to share whatever information he has with the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Obviously I will have to wait for him, but I would just ask by way of supplementary, so it is on the record and the minister might wish to respond when he does get here, is the Premier aware that Gulf is dealing with its shortfall in supplies by cutting back independents by 40 per cent and only cutting back its own distributors by eight per cent when these independents are, of course, a source of competition for Gulf's own distributors?

By squeezing the independents Gulf is in a position to have much more control over retail prices. Surely it is up to the province to put whatever persuasive power it has to work to get Gulf to be a little more equitable in these matters.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: May I ask if the Premier is encouraging the Minister of Energy to give us an answer on this question and the related one of cutoff of supply to Safeway Fuels in eastern Ontario? Can I ask him to inquire of the Minister of Energy whether he is satisfied to watch a firm of that size go under in eastern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think I can say in advance of whatever the Minister of Energy may or may not reply that he would not be satisfied to see that particular firm go under.

FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Treasurer on the federal budget which came out on Tuesday and in the wake of his statement today.

In the absence of any manufacturing strategy by the federal government in the budget that was presented by Mr. Crosbie this week, and in view of the Treasurer's own admissions that this budget is going to cost us 20,000 jobs in Ontario, would the Treasurer say what plans this government has in order to protect those 20,000 jobs and make sure they are not eliminated?

Hon. F. S. Miller: In spite of the opposition of the honourable member's party, we continue, through the Employment Development Fund, to make moves that create jobs. We have done so across this year. I would say that we have had perhaps the best year-over-year increase in employment Ontario has ever recorded. The latest figure I saw showed that over November of last year, which was not a bad month, we had 145,000 more people working in Ontario than we did 12 months ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: The Treasurer said he is prepared to do nothing to replace the 20,000 jobs which will be eliminated from the federal budget. Could the Treasurer say what the government is prepared to do, since there are 13,000 automobile workers who are right now on indefinite lay-off and since there are 11,000 auto workers in Windsor alone who will be without work next week because of layoffs? Since all of that occurred before the federal budget started to have an impact, what action is the government prepared to take in order to restore those jobs within the automobile industry that affects so many communities across this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the other day I believe you ruled that was not a matter of urgency and a debate did not follow, but I happened to follow in my estimates. Mr. Speaker, you may have read the transcript of Hansard that day to discover that the debate took place within my estimates. I think a lot of the information was given that day, a lot of the points were raised. There were a lot of questions about the cyclical nature of that industry.

Of course we are concerned about it. Of course we are concerned about the current drop in sales, but I would argue with the honourable member that one of the best ways to support that industry is to have a reasonable supply of fuel and see that people are economizing. They will get their confidence back, because right now it's a matter of confidence in the buying side and basically in the States, not in Canada.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, yesterday on CFRB, I thought the minister—I don't know whether I heard him right or not—said that this new budget would cost each man, woman and child in Ontario—eight million people—$4,000 per capita debt. Did the minister say that yesterday?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Over the time, not in one year.

Mr. Sargent: Will he tell me what he said then?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have a calculation in my statement today that says the net amount is somewhere around $570 per family per year at the present rate. By the time we are in our fourth year we are reaching the higher levels. The cost of energy per person per year is in the range of $1,000, by rough calculation.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, even though the Treasurer has talked a great deal about the jobs created this year, since the forecasting agencies including the conference board are predicting as few as 30,000 will be created next year, and that was before this budget came out, is the Treasurer now prepared to tell us what his predictions are for 1980 for job creation, since he promised several times that he would do so? Is he prepared to table any plans he has to put in place for job-creation projects in Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope a good number of the jobs are going to be in the small business side. Looking at the complexities of the budget, it would be foolish today to give the member a figure, because obviously we have to put a lot of input in, for example, the differences the small business bond plan makes to the investment and expectations of little companies. That's important, very important.

In an area like mine in Muskoka, it can have a tremendous impact upon the kind of construction programs or expansion programs that go on. With small businesses it will do the same thing all across this province. I have to net out the positives and the negatives that are going to occur through this. I haven't got that figure yet; as soon as I do have one, I will be pleased to share it with the members.

Mr. O'Neil: I would like to ask a supplementary of the Treasurer. I wonder if the Treasurer could tell me, since I find it very hard to understand the reasoning in his statement today, where was he, where was the Premier and where were some of his party's members when they supported these Tory federal members? Did the Treasurer not discuss with them, prior to supporting them in the last election, what their stand was on some of these things we have heard in this latest budget?

Hon. Mr. Davis: How did you vote, Hughie?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Did the member ever get a commitment from Pierre Trudeau? The only commitment he would have got from him was to hospital.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question was, "Where were you?"

Hon. F. S. Miller: Where was I? I was here.

Mr. O'Neil: No answer.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Di Santo: In view of the fact that the Treasurer said the other day he was unable to answer questions about the automobile industry because they were questions pertaining to that sector; and in view of the fact that industry is the most important in the manufacturing sector in Ontario and is in a crisis, not only because of oil but also because of the inability of this government to negotiate with the big three companies for Ontario to have a fair share of the North American market, can the minister tell us if he has any clear idea of how he is going to deal with this basic industry, other than telling us we must hope and that things will be good?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope I heard the whole question. There were two leaders talking while I was trying to listen. Was it on the auto pact and what we are going to do? I am trying to answer and if I make a mistake in my answer or don't answer, would the member please stand up and repeat it? But one of the questions raised the other day and what I thought the member was implying is what are we going to do to get a fairer share of the auto pact? Is that what the member said?

Mr. Di Santo: Invest.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Or it is one example.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, it would be one example. There were a lot of people who said either the Canadian government, which is the negotiating agent, or Ontario, which has urged the federal government, should get out there and demand a renegotiation of the pact. That's a very sensible thing to talk about until one looks at the unemployment and recognizes it is an election year in the United States. There is more unemployment in the automobile industry there than there is here and they are not likely to want to make changes that would move unemployment from Canada to the United States.

TABLE WINES

Mr. Cassidy: Before the House drowns in the indignation which the Treasurer has been directing towards the federal Parliament, I would like to ask the Treasurer a question about Ontario's actions with reference to that federal budget.

Since the federal budget, which Ontario has resisted, is adding 13 cents to the price of a bottle of table wine, will the Treasurer undertake to dissociate himself from that particular measure by rescinding his decision to piggyback a 27-cent increase on to the price of a bottle of table wine? Will he stop ripping off the consumer by letting Ontario share in that federal tax increase?

Hon. F. S. Miller: One has to look at the whole budget to see what happens to the consumers of this province. As a result of three changes, we will have probably a net loss of something like $40 million in our revenue. It would be very foolish to make adjustments until budget time when I have the opportunity to look at markups on wine and liquor and the ability of the market to sustain them.

I would like to point out to the honourable member that for many distilled spirits the prices in fixed or constant dollars are considerably less than they were not too many years ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: How does the Treasurer justify adding this additional Ontario tax when the markup on table wines is already 123 per cent? If Ontario is so outraged over the federal budget, why is the Ontario government joining with the federal government? They are both putting their hands in the taxpayers' pockets and taking money from liquor price increases.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, if the member looks at my comments he will find that is one of the very concerns I expressed. We have traditionally been the dominant force in certain tax fields. We're concerned those fields are being occupied, more and more, leaving us very little room to meet our legitimate requirements at a time when this government has consistently demonstrated its ability to manage its spending.

Mr. Breithaupt: With respect to the increases and the 123 per cent markup referred to by the leader of the third party, will the Treasurer in his review of these taxing opportunities consider making some exemption or dealing with the rates of exchange and also the transportation cost matters so taxes added by the province of Ontario are not automatically added on to these other areas over which the importers, certainly, or the Liquor Control Board have absolutely no control?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, both parties have been hitting me quite hard about import substitution. Members should drink Ontario wine which has a 58 per cent markup.

METRO TORONTO CONVENTION CENTRE

Mr. Eakins: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the great job-creation potential of a major convention centre for Metro Toronto, can the minister tell this House at what stage his plans are to bring about the realization of a major convention centre here in Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Discussions have now been held with representatives of the private sector to see if there is any private sector contribution possible. Discussions are going on between me and the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto council with regard to supplying him with enough information so he might approach his council with the request, I hope, for some major funding in order to match the funding offered by the levels of government.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister approach the federal government for a fairer share of their contribution toward the Metro centre? Is there any breakdown between the minister and the Metro chairman in regard to the division of costs in regard to the centre?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, there is no breakdown between me and the Metro chairman. He has not taken a proposition to his council as yet. I think he is hoping to do that within the next four weeks. After he has been to his council and we have seen the response of his council, then we'll know whether or not there is a shortfall and whether we might not be going back to the federal government to make up the difference.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister announced three weeks ago in Vancouver that they are going to contribute a third of the cost of the convention centre in British Columbia. In view of the fact they are going to contribute only 25 per cent to the convention centre in Toronto, despite the minister's calculations on the value of the land, doesn't the minister think that is detrimental to the development of the centre in Toronto?

Second, doesn't the minister think this makes it very hard for the province and Metro Toronto to raise the money needed for the centre? Doesn't the minister think he should make a representation to the federal government so we have at least an equal share, as in British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Both the Metro chairman and I made very strong representations to the federal government, urging upon them the importance of contributing to our centre. That was done in the context of a commitment given by the former government and upheld by the current government that they would go through with the previous commitment to Vancouver to fund one third. There was no commitment by the old government or the new government to fund anything in Toronto.

Both the Metro chairman and I very forcefully took the case to the federal government. As a result, they developed a new policy which, frankly, I'm not happy with but which does support, by their calculations, 25 per cent of the centre.

What I think would be detrimental to the situation would be if we took the position right now that it is going to be 33.3 per cent or nothing. That puts us in a position in which we risk some 2,000 construction jobs and 10,000 permanent jobs simply because we're going to dig in our heels and say unless the federal government gives us exactly the amount of money they gave to Vancouver, there will be no convention centre for Toronto.

I don't think that's a reasonable position to take. I think the public looks for more leadership from this government and from the Metro government than to take an ornery position such as that, given the history of the situation.

I'm not happy with it, but I'm not prepared to see the convention centre go down the drain over the federal shortfall.

UNIFORM GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs. Is he aware that as a result of the federal government's excise tax grab on fuel, gasoline prices for unleaded fuel in a number of small communities in northern Ontario have jumped to a range of anywhere from 31.5 cents per litre or $1.42 a gallon, to 33.1 cents per litre or $1.50 a gallon, compared with about 29 cents a litre or $1.30 a gallon in Toronto? If he is aware of that, is the minister now prepared to reverse this government's policy and accept the proposal made over a year ago by one of his own back-benchers to set up a mechanism to establish uniform gasoline prices across Ontario to eliminate this 15-cent-a-gallon differential between the southern and northern parts of the province?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is certainly aware that the Treasurer has just made the position of this government, as it relates to the increased costs for fuel and gasoline across this province, very clear. I would remind the honourable member that we in northern Ontario enjoy some very extensive benefits relating to the registration of our automobiles. He forgets those little benefits we get. We also get increased municipal tax grants—unconditional grants—over and above what southern Ontario gets. There are a number of ways we in northern Ontario benefit from the high cost of living in that particular area.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary: Assuming a vehicle travels 15,000 miles a year, and assuming a fuel consumption of 20 miles per gallon, is the minister aware that the differential between the cost of operating that vehicle in Toronto and in northern Ontario is $112.50 per year, despite the differential in licence plates cost? What has his ministry got in mind to remove this discrepancy between transportation costs in the north and in the south?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the honourable member is aware, there are many areas of northern Ontario where the price of gasoline and fuel oil is equal to or less than that of southern Ontario. In Sault Ste. Marie, in Timmins and in many of the major centres the price of gasoline is equal to that of southern Ontario. The member mustn't bamboozle me with those kinds of figures because they're entirely wrong and the honourable members know it.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Wildman: The minister will recall that in my question I said "the small communities." I have a list of them here with the prices. What, if anything, is he prepared to do about the effect this is obviously going to have on employment in tourism and in other industries in the north when people from other parts of the province and from the United States are faced with these exorbitant gas prices across our part of the province?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We on this side of the House are very concerned with this situation. We've shown that concern in a number of different ways and we'll continue to react to it.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Food has the answers to several questions asked previously.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I've sat in this office since we opened early in October. During the six weeks I was here I had two questions. Two weeks ago today I took ill—I haven't been here since then, until today—and I find four questions have been raised during those two weeks. Agriculture is becoming pretty important.

Mr. S. Smith: We had a better chance of getting answers when you weren't here.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, you had to wait until I came back.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Can we hear the answers please?

HOPPER CARS

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The members for York South (Mr. MacDonald) and Huron-Bruce—no, Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell), sorry. I guess I'm too mixed up, Mr. Speaker, for some reason.

An hon. member: They're close.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They're close. They're pretty similar.

They asked a question on December 7 about corn marketing. They were apparently concerned that 20 per cent of the crop would not be marketed or harvested because of the limitations of storage and transportation services.

The corn crop in Ontario is estimated to be 25 per cent above last year's crop; about 170 million bushels. I am advised that the harvest is basically complete, except for the individual situation where the ground is too wet for harvesting.

[3:00]

In November the industry was very concerned about the availability of railway equipment. I sent a Telex message to the federal Minister of Transportation and the president of the Canadian National Railway and their responses were gratifying. Before the situation became of concern there were about 250 covered hopper cars suitable for moving grain in the southwestern Ontario fleet. Following our presentation Canadian National added 130 cars, Canadian Pacific 26, Conrail 20 and Chesapeake and Ohio, 30. The fleet moved from 250 cars to 445 cars, almost double. A review of the car supply situation indicates that an adequate supply is available and all orders are being met.

During the critical November harvest season, several elevators were forced to store corn outside until it could be moved through the system. I am advised this is no longer the case.

I have been assured that we have not lost sales to the Atlantic provinces because of the shortage of rail equipment or storage facilities. The market outlook for sales in eastern Canada this year is quite favourable.

The supply of western feed grains in the St. Lawrence region is lower than previous years, which suggests good demand for Ontario corn.

The chairman of the Ontario Grain Corn Council has called for improved vesselunloading capabilities in eastern Canada to reduce the dependence of the corn industry on rail shipments.

My government, over the years, has provided grants for the construction of grain storage and handling facilities on farms. Recently the federal government and my ministry offered a grain-storage program which involved grants of close to $15 million to Ontario farmers. There is also the inland elevator program, a federal program which provides a combination of loans and grants to commercial elevators locating in the grain deficit areas. The program operates in Ontario and eastern Canada. I am happy to report that the outlook for the crop appears to be very good.

Mr. Speaker, did you want to ask for questions on that?

Mr. Speaker: There don't seem to be any supplementaries, so will you continue with the other questions?

LIVESTOCK PAYMENT DEFAULTS

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I want to reply to the question the member for Huron-Middlesex asked in the House on December 10. His question was whether or not I consider the problem of default in payment for livestock to be of sufficient importance or priority to deal with in this session.

It is true that discussions concerning financial protection for livestock producers has been going on for a considerable period of time. I assure you that it is not my intention to prolong these discussions, Mr. Speaker. I recognize the producers' concerns and the reasons for them. A meeting is scheduled for next Tuesday for me to meet with the Ontario Cattlemen's Association, the Ontario Livestock Auction Association, the Meat Packers Council and some representatives of firms at the stockyards to hear their recommendations.

I am ready to proceed to develop a financial protection program within existing legislation, if this would speed up the introduction of financial protection for livestock producers.

In answer to the member's supplementary question, I am prepared to proceed with the plan for program protection against default of payment.

Mr. McKessock: Pertaining to protection, the minister says he is willing to proceed within existing legislation. Supposing he can't do it within that and has to have further legislation, is the minister prepared to give us a certain length of time within which this can be done? This has been going on for several years now. Can he tell us whether this can be completed within two or three months?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I have suggested to the delegations I have seen that if we could proceed under present legislation, we could possibly implement it about budget time. If we have to go ahead with new legislation, it would possibly take up to a year.

I am pleased to reply in detail to the question raised by the member for Huron-Middlesex concerning the chicken allocation in Ontario for 1980. I will now give him the facts in detail.

Mr. Speaker: How long is it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is about two pages. I think it's fairly important.

Mr. Speaker: It should be done by way of a ministerial statement then.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's in response to a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That's right, but the standing order provides that if the response to an oral question is unusually long, the response will be given by way of a ministerial statement.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE

Mr. Belanger: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the importance of the agricultural industry to the economy of Ontario and to the large number of French-speaking young farmers who would like to take a course in agriculture in their own language, would the minister undertake to have a feasibility study made to determine the establishment of a French-language college of agricultural technology in southeastern Ontario where there is a very large number of young people who wish to make their career in farming?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the honourable member's question, we do have a report, a partial survey, on this particular situation. The cabinet has now authorized me to take an additional step, namely, to send staff within the area to make comparisons as to what students might be available there. The Centralia College of Agriculture could be used.

An hon. member: Centralia is too far away.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Just a moment. We have suggested that they go into that area and take the number of students out of a similar population to see what number of students might be available to take the course if a school was set up in eastern Ontario. That is now in process.

Mr. Belanger: Supplementary: Could the minister give us any indication as to when the study would be completed and when the results will be available?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would hate to give a date a month from now, but I would hope before the next session opens we might have some idea as to what the possibilities are.

Mr. Roy: If I may ask a supplementary to the very excellent question asked by my colleague from Prescott and Russell, when he is looking at possible demand for such a college, would the minister keep in mind that perhaps the number of francophone students requiring this facility may not be an accurate reflection, in view of the fact that over 100-and-some years they have not had that opportunity and therefore, some of them may have been reluctant to enter agriculture because the facility was not available? Secondly, in making a determination, would the minister please not consult the present Minister of Education?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Don't consult the member for Ottawa East either.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If I may respond in reverse, yes, I will consult the present Minister of Education. Her advice is always accepted by this minister. I think I pointed out quite clearly that we are not making the survey of what French-speaking young people might be available. We are trying to make a survey of what might be available in young people. It doesn't matter what their background language is. We want to see the number of young people in that area who are willing to take this type of an education.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: When the feasibility study is completed, would the minister not agree that it would be far preferable, since the majority of francophones are in eastern and northern Ontario, to have such a college or facility in eastern Ontario and if at all possible, to have a separate, independent, autonomous college and not made part of a greater anglophone institution such as Kemptville?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is what the question is all about—do we need a separate agricultural school? That is what the question is centred around.

PENETANGUISHENE MENTAL HEALTH CENTRE

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health relating to a program that was on Metro Morning, CBC, yesterday morning, relating to Penetang and the story of two men who had been placed in that institution. I found what came out on that program very, very disturbing and horrifying.

Can the minister indicate if he is doing a study or a review of these two particular instances where these gentlemen were placed in Penetang, in that ward five I believe, which is usually reserved for people who are criminally insane, dangerously insane, and who have tendencies to violence, whereas these two gentlemen did not? Can the minister say whether he is investigating these two cases and whether he is satisfied that the present rules for incarceration or admittance for mentally disturbed people is satisfactory?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out for the benefit of the members and the media, that there are two facilities at Penetang: one is Oak Ridges, which is the facility for the criminally insane; the other is the regional centre. What we are talking about is ward five of the regional centre at Penetanguishene which is a secure unit, one that is maintained for patients who are difficult to manage.

One of the two people in question apparently had been on another ward and had proved to be difficult to manage, so was moved to ward five.

At our request the medical director and the administrator, Dr. Stokes and Mr. McKerrow, have reported that based on their review of the files about the patients—which of course I am not at liberty to discuss in much detail—the detention of these two patients as involuntary patients was appropriate at the time. One of the patients after being told that he could have his case reviewed by the local review board in fact did so. The board, comprising a lawyer, a psychiatrist and a layman, reported back or ruled that his detention on an involuntary basis was appropriate based on the information before them.

I can tell the members that even before these concerns were brought to the attention of the ministry, Dr. Stokes and Mr. McKerrow, both of whom are relatively new to Penetanguishene, had begun a complete review of procedures and staffing attitudes and the like on all wards. In the light of the concerns raised in these allegations they have paid particular attention in the first instance to ward five. They put together a team of people drawn from the rest of the hospital to act as a resource group, or whatever, to assist the staff on ward five in improving what is considered to be a less than desirable and less than optimal professional standard.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: I understand from the minister's reply that he considers the present admission procedures satisfactory because I gather that was part of the problem, that these people were in there because of some procedure that we now have, that perhaps the import of the program was that they shouldn't have been there in the first place; (a) is the minister satisfied that the procedures for admission are proper; and (b) will he be reporting back to the House, in view of the wide public dissemination of this, what Mr. McKerrow and Dr. Stokes report to the minister?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'd be glad to discuss it further with the honourable member, Mr. Speaker. There might be some aspects that I'm really not at liberty to disclose publicly but that I could perhaps share with him and I know he'd keep them confidential as a member of this House.

I can tell the member that one of the people was sent there by the court and therefore, because the person was on a court referral was put in the secure unit. The second individual had been in ward two and because of acting out and evidence of management problems, was moved to ward five.

Mr. Braugh: Mr. Speaker, during the course of that radio interview, there were several allegations of abuse of the patients. Setting aside how they got there or whether they should be there, there were several rather serious allegations made of abuse of the patients by staff. Has the minister taken any of that as grounds for further inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Certainly, the material which was sent to us about six weeks ago highlighted those same kinds of allegations and those were, I'm assured, looked into by Mr. McKerrow and Dr. Stokes. They have reported back that they cannot substantiate that. They agree and have already determined that they want to work on the standards and attitudes that prevail, but they could not substantiate any indications of patient abuse.

Mr. Conway: In connection with the general subject area that relates in part I know to this particular instance, can the minister indicate whether or not he has proclaimed all sections of Bill 19; if not, why not; and when will he proceed with the final proclamation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The sections that were unproclaimed, so to speak, a year ago remain unproclaimed. In the main, we are waiting on the Krever commission. There's one section, as the member knows, dealing with confidentiality and the other to do with the involvement of legal aid. As the member knows, I expressed concerns about the appropriateness of that a year and a half ago, when that was considered by the committee, but essentially the position is unchanged from a year ago.

PILKINGTON GLASS LAYOFFS

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

On Monday, the minister said it was not his job to take responsibility for the decision of Pilkington Glass Limited to lay off half its employees in Scarborough. Is the minister not aware that Pilkington Glass International spent an estimated $240 million buying out other glass companies this year and that it is now the largest glass manufacturer in the world? Is he aware that this Canadian subsidiary, the sole manufacturer of automobile glass in Canada, had a $2 million profit last year?

Does the minister not now feel that he has some responsibility for the 400 workers permanently laid off and to the industry in Canada to seek all avenues for maintaining its full operations at the Scarborough plant and to ensure that Canadians are not being used as patsys by this British-based multinational?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The fact that a company is large and profitable doesn't oblige it to carry on operations in any division it finds to be unprofitable and that it feels, in the sense of its overall corporate strategy, does not amount to a profitable or sensible operation. That is, in fact, how companies are able to stay in business, make a profit, and create employment throughout their various different outlets.

If they begin to carry operations which in their opinion are not profitable, then pretty soon one sees a profitable company turned into an unprofitable one. Rather than the closure of one plant, one sees the closure of the entire operation and a heck of a lot more jobs lost. It seems to me that some of those things ought to have been considered when the member and others were dealing with the situation around the Pilkington strike at the time at which decisions were made by the union. Again the company alleges the strike was the determining factor.

Just to put it in perspective, what I did say the other day was that it is not my job to overrule the corporate decision of the company. It is not my job to assess whether the strike was the determining factor or not. Just as the member expects a degree of common sense to be shown by the company, I hope he would put the same standard of care on the union when it takes certain decisions. Ultimately both the company and the union have to live with the consequences of whatever actions either of them take.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: One of the major reasons this company is using for not being able to continue is that it is going to spend $23 million on a full repair of this tank. Yet all it has been proposing is a minor repair of this tank which could be completed by January much more cheaply, with no effect at all on their overall costs.

Why is it the minister will not now investigate this company and find out why it is making these decisions? It is the only company making automobile glass in this country. Four hundred people, some with 20 years' experience, non-unionized workers, are being laid off.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have a company here, by your admission and others, that needs to make a major reinvestment to keep that plant profitable. In the face of that acknowledged and needed reinvestment, they faced a strike which cost them $1 million a week. In the face of that enormous cost, obviously when they were deciding whether to put a great amount of money into that plant, that very same plant suffered an unusual and unexpected loss of up to about $16 million. I must tell the member, whether one is a socialist or a capitalist, one doesn't need to be a genius to figure out when the company unexpectedly suffered a $16 million loss in its operation, it was bound to affect its ultimate decision.

I know it is very attractive for the members over there to try and somehow lay blame for the company's decision on this government. I am not going to allow this government to take the blame for the company's decision any more than those members would allow the union to take the blame for the strike which also was a factor in the company's ultimate decision.

We aren't going to take our share; we won't put it on the union. But I will let the public draw its own conclusion and I will bet the now laid-off workers are drawing their own conclusions a lot more objectively than the ones the members opposite are trying to pin on this government.

Mr. Kerrio: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. A statement has been made here this afternoon that there wasn't any other auto-glass manufacturer. I would like to correct the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kerrio: May I not correct the record?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Kerrio: There is one manufacturer in Niagara Falls.

Mr. Speaker: If you had asked to correct the record, I might have listened to you, but you got up on a phoney point of privilege.

Mr. Kerrio: On a point of personal privilege I would like to correct the record. What I would like to say is, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: That there is one in Niagara Falls.

Mr. Kerrio: That there is?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

CHRONIC CARE CHARGES

Mr. Conway: My question to the Minister of Health is a follow-up question to the concern I raised on Tuesday about the way in which the chronic care co-payment is being administered. I think it might be helpful to be more specific than I was on Tuesday.

Where does the Minister of Health see the justice and fairness of the application of his co-payment program in the case of Mrs. Betty Anne Graham of Downsview, Ontario? At age 68, like her spouse, she is a chronic-care patient in the Queen Elizabeth Hospital Toronto; she is paying the full co-payment of Queen Elizabeth Hospital in Toronto; she is paying the full co-payment of $300 plus while receiving less than $8,000 worth of annual income and knows that if she were three or four years younger with two or three times as much income, she and her husband would receive complete exemption.

Where is the fairness and equity in that particular situation? Surely the minister would agree that discrimination must be redressed in the interest of fairness.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In addressing this matter, we spent a great deal of time in working on the exemptions to avoid the kind of a system in place in Quebec and in the other provinces where they have a co-payment system where everybody pays the flat rate across the board and if they can't afford it they go on welfare. That is what happens in three other provinces. We were determined that wasn't going to happen.

Taking into account that where there are children involved and young families generally there would have to be some form of exemption built in, but maintaining the basic principle that in those cases where income support is provided by government to maintain the individual in the community and the individual is no longer resident in the community but is instead, as in many cases, a full-time permanent resident of a government-funded facility, then those income funds should be applied against that. That principle has been basic throughout and we have done that.

In looking at the exemptions with respect to families, we purposely erred on the high side as opposed to some recommendations for exemptions at about half the level we finally adopted.

One had to take into account that previously, as the honourable member knows, the concern was expressed that prior to this system being introduced the children were the recipients of those incomes and pension money was building up in trust accounts or simply going to the children for whom it was never intended, rather than being applied to the needs of the individual. That was borne in mind.

Conversely, we feel in the very rare cases we haven't covered in either the exemptions or what is known as a form 7 exemption for extraordinary personal expenses, the families do have a role to play inasmuch they will be the beneficiaries of the estates, home, properties and so forth for the individuals in question.

If there is a problem there, I have found, when it has been raised with me before, once we ensure the individual sits down with the hospital administrator and/or the social worker they find it is possible, using the existing policy, to—

Mr. Speaker: I really think that's a fairly detailed response.

Mr. Conway: It does come to our attention as a very serious discrimination which uncharacteristically, given most government policies—

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable member have a question?

Mr. Conway: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister give me and this House his assurance he will undertake an immediate review of this discrimination which is driving people like Mrs. Betty Anne Graham to no other choice but to sell her house under conditions which are very, very unfair and discriminatory when one considers that exemptions allowed for those under 65, the two-person families, are at least $15,000 and here she sits at less than half that and she has none of these exemptions whatsoever?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, the honourable member is ignoring the background information I have given him.

As I indicated on Tuesday, and the policy has only been in for six months, we have not found—and I can say we would be the first to know through the hospital administrators' departments—that is the case; quite the contrary. We have found it is possible to keep the families secure.

I can say to the member, as I did on Tuesday, we are keeping it under review. After we have had more experience with it, say three to six months, I intend to review the matter, report back to my cabinet colleagues and see if there is any need to adjust it. At this point there is no indication whatsoever that is happening regularly. In every case I have seen to date we have been able to point out ways the policy can be applied in a fair and equitable fashion to avoid disastrous impact.

Mr. Breagh: I want to ask the minister as politely as I can, to get off his horse and look at this one case. Now two members have said—and if he gives us time, more members of this House will say—here is at least one instance where his co-payment scheme is clearly wrong, dumb, doesn't work as has been carefully documented. Could he take the blinkers off just long enough to look at this one human being's problem?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have already said—the honourable member has selective hearing—that if the honourable member would give me some of the details I will make sure someone sits down with the individual concerned and I'm confident the matter can be resolved.

Unfortunately, the member has selective hearing and chooses to ignore that sort of thing.

U.S. PROCUREMENT POLICIES

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the fact that among other things, the buy-American policy requires that passenger rolling stock in the US must have at least 50 per cent US content and final assembly done in the United States in order to have federal aid, thus resulting in the virtual exclusion of Canadian companies from the $50 million US mass transit market, including the Urban Transportation Development Corporation, especially as a result of the present energy crisis, can the minister tell us if he has finally worked out a concrete procurement policy in order to counterbalance the negative effects of the buy-American policy?

Furthermore—

Mr. Speaker: The member is not going to get a response if he broadens his question any more.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As the member well knows, because we discussed this at some length in my estimates, we have a study on procurement going on with management board which will be reporting in March. As the member also well knows from my estimates, we have discussions, undertaken through our ambassador to the United States and through our own separate routes, with the United States with regard to certain changes and amendments which might be made to that legislation to give us some added access.

RESPONSES TO PETITIONS

Hon. Mr. Wells: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In answer to the point raised by the member for Oshawa regarding the tabling of answers to petitions in the required time, as required by standing order 29(i), I have referred to Votes and Proceedings of December 4 and I see there that the answers to those petitions were tabled.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has been made aware of that.

Mr. Breagh: One small clarification. Is it true that in response to the petition by 275,000 people the minister's answer is, "The matters raised in this petition are under review"? Is that the extent of the government's answer?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very clear and concise and easily understood answer.

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' RIGHTS

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege. On Tuesday last, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) announced to the House that he was withdrawing Bill 188, An Act to provide for the Rights of Handicapped Persons. In the course of his remarks he sought to blame the opposition parties for the consequence of this decision by implying that disabled persons are being denied protection against discrimination because of what he called the rigid position of the opposition parties.

As human rights critic for the official opposition, I resent and deplore these aspersions of the Minister of Labour. They are untrue and unfair. For the record, may I repeat the position of the official opposition on this question?

We have said for many months that we favour an amendment to the Ontario Human Rights Code to prohibit discrimination against handicapped persons. When Bill 188 was introduced, my leader said we would support it if the organizations representing handicapped persons found it acceptable. Those organizations made it clear to us and to the minister that they did not find Bill 188 acceptable. For good and valid reasons they want to be covered by the human rights code. We therefore proposed that Bill 188 be withdrawn and the principle reintroduced as an amendment to the human rights code. The New Democratic Party took a similar position.

Such an amendment could be drafted—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member has every right to stand up in this House and take exception to something that was said on the other side of the House. What the honourable member is doing now is just restating something that is already an official record of the House. He is just restating what somebody else has previously said. He has made his point; perhaps the Minister of Labour may wish to respond on a later occasion.

Report adopted.

MOTION

COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the standing resources development committee be authorized to meet the evening of Monday, December 17, 1979.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON
NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I wish to table the answers to questions 368, 369, 370 and 387 on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 5493.)

MOTION TO SUSPEND
NORMAL BUSINESS

Mr. S. Smith moved, pursuant to standing order 34(a), that the ordinary business of the House be set aside to discuss a matter of urgent public interest, namely the impact of the proposed federal budget on the economy of Ontario and on the Ontario consumers of energy, and for the purpose of urging the Premier of Ontario to introduce forthwith a resolution condemning the proposed federal budget.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House I did get the required notice of this motion under standing order 34 and I will hear from the honourable member reasons why he thinks the ordinary business of the House should be set aside at this time.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, tonight the Parliament of Canada will meet and a vote will take place which will determine whether or not the government of this country shall continue in office, or whether an election shall be held. It is absolutely vital that all members of Parliament elected from the province of Ontario, who have to consider which way they are going to vote in that particular meeting this evening—that urgent and essential meeting this evening—know how the people of Ontario and the elected representatives in this House feel, regarding a most iniquitous budget which has been proposed.

Anything that can be done to get that particular budget changed should be done, despite the obvious support it enjoys from the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), who seems to be calling out on their behalf. Anything that can be done to show the members of that House how the people of Ontario feel, should be done before it is too late, because that particular vote is vital to the future of this province.

During the four years I have been here, I do not remember any time that Ontario has received a body blow of this magnitude: a drain from the revenues and from the people of Ontario of hundreds of millions of dollars going into the federal treasury, going into the Alberta treasury, and going into the treasury of the oil companies.

I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that over the next four years the oil companies will receive $33 billion net of all production costs and taxes. There is no justification for that. That money will be taken from the pockets of Ontarians. That money will be taken from people this winter so they will not be able to spend money to buy those products manufactured in Ontario; so they will not be able, in point of fact, to purchase the products which would keep Ontarians employed.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a certain degree of disorder in the House. I can appreciate that the Conservative Party in Canada and in Ontario, that particular united party, is in some disorder today. I can appreciate the embarrassment of the people opposite.

They may think—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Every honourable member has a right to speak in this forum and a right to be heard.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as I look at the smiles on the faces of the members opposite, it may be that for the Ontario Conservatives 11 per cent inflation, eight per cent unemployment—a recession—is something they regard with amusement.

[3:45]

We know the first minister of this province went to a meeting and in front of the television cameras stated his opposition, generally speaking, to the kind of proposals which came forward in this budget. We know Ontario for the first time went to such a meeting and took a posture of begging. We know every single item asked for by Ontario has been refused by the government of Mr. Clark. If that posture didn't work, one wonders what the next posture is going to be taken by the government of Ontario at the next first ministers' conference.

The fact of the matter is the people of this province—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. S. Smith: How much of the time was utilized by my comments and how much by theirs?

I will say one final sentence. I should have known better than to expect a reasonable attitude on the part of Ontario Conservatives. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, this winter will go down as the worst winter for the manufacturing industry in this province. It will go down as a gloomy winter indeed for the middle- and lower-income people in this province. We have a right to have the viewpoint of the Legislature—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Ottawa Centre for up to five minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the call for a debate on a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the impact of the federal budget on Ontario. This is an urgent matter that requires debate because of the fact that decisions being taken in Ottawa right now will affect whether or not this budget is going to be implemented to the disbenefit of the people of Ontario. It's an urgent matter as well because of the extraordinary impact of this budget, which ranks with the former Liberal government's introduction of wage and price controls as the most ill-conceived policy of our generation.

This budget is clearly a continuation of the policy of the previous Liberal government of attempting to control inflation and unemployment by absolutely total reliance on the private sector. It also continues the policies of the previous Liberal government because of the way in which Conservatives and Liberals alike want the multinational oil companies to take billions of dollars from the people of Canada in the hope that will somehow solve our energy problems. It is urgent that we bring that to an end at the earliest possible opportunity.

I trust the government is going to agree with this call for a debate and resolution, in view of the comments of the Premier on Tuesday night. It is worth noting, however, that this budget effectively translates to the federal level the kind of misguided economic policies we have had from the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), and from his predecessor, the policies of cutbacks for their own sake and a preoccupation with deficits to the expense of all other priorities, whether national or in this province. It indicates a willingness, which this government shares with its federal counterpart, to make people on low and modest incomes the victim of the government's fight for what it calls fiscal rectitude.

This budget must be urgently discussed in this Legislature because of the way it impacts on people in Ontario and Quebec more than any other part of Canada. We will be compelled to pay more than $1 billion a year because of a new excise tax on gasoline. Our transit systems are going to have to pay as well. The overall increase in oil prices will have an extraordinary impact on Ontario families, very quickly increasing the bill on those families from $600 next year to more than $1,000 a year in 1983. Even as the Premier has recognized, our industries' competitive position will be put in jeopardy. There is absolutely no action taken to counter the impact of these increased costs, particularly for small consumers.

The federal budget also fails—and this is urgent for us in Ontario—to take any noticeable action to implement an industrial strategy for the manufacturing firms of Ontario. It repeats what Tories have done in this House. The Tory promises about support for research and development at the federal level have been broken. The Tory promises of a $2-billion tax cut have been broken. The Tory promises of a simulated deficit have been broken. The Tory promises about combating high interest rates have been broken. The Tories were elected on false pretences on May 22, and this government, the “big blue machine,” the Premier (Mr. Davis) himself, went out and elected that government on false pretences. It is about time they turned around and took the other stand.

Now we have promises that the unemployment rate will rise from 7.5 per cent to 8.3 per cent. We have promises that we will get double-digit inflation and that is accepted by John Crosbie and even accepted by this particular government. As I said on election night, this is a pay now and a pay later budget. It proves that Tory times are hard times. It proves that Joe Clark is no better than R. B. Bennett was when he became the Prime Minister of the country back in 1930.

I want to make two final points. One is that Joe Clark is perpetuating Liberal economic policies and that is why I am puzzled that the Liberal Party should suggest having this debate rather than having the debate on the environment. The second is that broken promises have come from both the Liberal and the Conservative parties. They are not prepared to be sincere and carry through their promises in running the government.

The third point is that if the Conservative government wants to demonstrate to the people of Ontario that it has really parted company, it has to do more than bathe us with indignation and statements like the one we got today. It has to do more than oppose the federal government at the first ministers' conference. If the Premier wants the public of Ontario to believe these Tories are not the same as those Tories up there, there is only one thing he can do. I challenge the government, if it doesn't like what the federal Tories are doing then run independent Conservatives at the next election.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the other day during question period, the Leader of the Opposition accused me of having contempt for this House because I ran outside and said things different to those I said inside.

I was intrigued during the question period today, when I saw him disappear, to find that he didn't have enough time to sit here and discuss what was an important issue. He was outside talking to the television cameras about his environmental problems. If he has the courage to stand up here and say this is an important thing, he should have sat through the question period today, as I did.

An hon. member: You went out yourself.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I went out because I wanted to make sure he wasn't saying anything.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. This minister labels my leader with contempt, when the Premier of this province should be in his seat today, right here and now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I said he labelled me with contempt.

Today's statement clearly put Ontario's objections to parts of the federal budget on the record. That was something we felt we had to do. It in no way stops us from being Conservative. We don't really try to dissociate ourselves. What we do is say we can honestly find things at the federal level that we have to disagree with while, on balance, supporting the party.

Mr. S. Smith: Some balance.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Listen. The honourable member is a married man, I think. I am, and I have often found it necessary to disagree with even my wife's wisdom. I have managed to carry on my marriage in spite of it.

Second, one of the interesting things is that, in spite of this great debate, in spite of the great urgency of the problems, I don't recall seeing very many people here during the hours I have been here for my estimates lately. They are still on; in fact, we had to have a quorum call not long ago. I don't recall the member's being here for one minute, let alone one hour, of my estimate debates.

Today the federal House is properly debating a national issue. It is true the honourable Leader of the Opposition has federal aspirations. There is an opening in his old home riding; it might be one he'd want to go home to. Let us leave the decisions for the federal House to make tonight. It is their job to decide whether this government has the confidence of this country and the federal Parliament. I'm sure tonight it will be very close and I'm sure the measures will be seriously considered.

We, of course, are concerned about the matters but we had problems with other governments and other budgets and we've always used one basic technique, no matter what, and that is we go prepared to Ottawa to discuss, debate and make the changes in the orderly ways governments of all stripes have done in the past. I think we have as much chance or more to make our voice heard as time goes on.

At least I have openly laid it on the line and, I'll say it publicly, not behind closed doors. One of the things the Leader of the Opposition has said is all these things are happening this winter. Again, if he checked my statement he would find the large price increases occur across the end of the summer and late fall next year.

That gives us some time for some of these negotiations. I would argue, Mr. Speaker, in spite of all he has said, we do not think this is a matter of urgency and we urge you to rule in that way.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to advise all honourable members, this motion calling for a debate did give some problems. I think it meets one of the criteria. It is of urgent public importance, but one of the reasons the honourable member moved it was the impact of the proposed federal budget on the economy of Ontario. The second reason was the impact on Ontario consumers of energy. I must remind all honourable members that we did have an emergency debate all last Thursday afternoon that dealt very, very comprehensively with the energy situation in Ontario hinting to a large extent on what might be the actions of another jurisdiction.

On the matter of the emergency debate condemning the actions of another jurisdiction, I must remind all honourable members we do have members from this jurisdiction and, indeed, from all jurisdictions in Canada, discussing the impact of that budget in another jurisdiction. So I would have to rule that on the basis that the honourable members' concerns are already being aired and expressed in another jurisdiction, it doesn't fall within the parameters of standing order No. 34. I would have to turn it down on that basis.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, with regret and great respect for you sir, I believe this ruling is not one I can accept and I would ask that it be changed.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton West has challenged the ruling of the chair, so I would have to put the question.

[4:00]

The House divided on the Speaker's ruling, which was upheld on the following vote:

AYES

Ashe; Auld; Baetz; Belanger; Bennett; Bernier; Birch; Bounsall; Brunelle; Bryden; Cassidy; Charlton; Cureatz; Davis; Di Santo; Drea; Dukszta; Eaton; Germa; Gigantes; Grande; Gregory; Grossman; Havrot; Henderson; Hennessy; Hodgson.

Mr. Speaker: The ruling of the chair is sustained. The challenge is lost.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

ONTARIO ENVIRONMENTAL RIGHTS ACT

Mr. S. Smith moved second reading of Bill 185, An Act respecting Environmental Rights in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes and if he wishes to reserve any time for a windup or a response he can notify the table officers.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to reserve five minutes at the end for a chance to respond to any other comments made in the course of the debate.

The occasion to debate this particular bill is one of very real importance to me and I believe it will go down as a day of some importance in the history of people's attempt to come to grips with the industrial age and to make this planet a liveable situation for generations to follow us.

Whatever policies we may adopt on one issue or another, sometimes with the passage of the decades one looks back and the argument so important at the time seems less important later on. What we do to our environment, the kind of planet we leave for our children and the children who follow them is something that is very real, it's something people will be able to look back on and either thank us for or blame us for, depending on the actions we take.

When I speak to my own children about this I have the feeling there's nothing we do in the Legislature more important in the long run than the decisions we take with regard to the preservation of the natural environment. That is, after all, a trust and a heritage we are supposed to keep for future generations, not to exploit to the point where future generations will be without the benefits we received from those who have gone before.

The bill I have put forward proposes to do the following: To further the rights of Ontario citizens in determining the quality of their own environment; citizens would be allowed to take action to protect the environment without first having to prove that they had been personally damaged or injured. There would be a shift in the burden of proof concerning environmental contamination. Under this bill the defendant would have to show that an activity does not harm or does not have the potential to harm the environment.

Currently, as you know, Mr. Speaker, it is the plaintiff who shoulders this burden of proof and, given the technical information required in many environmental disputes, this burden is an unfair impediment to effective action. Furthermore, under this bill citizens would be given increased access to information so they may participate in a more meaningful way in environmental matters.

In spite of environmental legislation on the books for several decades, it is clear that serious problems have continued to occur. Violations of our laws are far too numerous and have become quite predictable. But let us look around us. We're entering the 1980s faced with energy shortages, a huge provincial debt, a weak Canadian dollar, higher inflation and a continued reliance upon raw resource extraction and exploitation, much of which, if not carefully supervised, could be a disaster for the environment.

Companies and government are going to argue, falsely, I might add, that we will not be able to afford environmental protection if we are to stay competitive. They will argue that environmental controls are hampering production and squeezing profits. They will say industry will relocate. When asked to clean up they will shrug and say the technology doesn't exist, even if they haven't put much research and development money into trying to find solutions. Or, if the technology does exist, they'll say it's the wrong time to install it if they want to maintain a competitive edge. Those industries that have cleaned up will, in a real sense, be penalized for having done so.

Environmental legislation in Ontario provides the government with the power to act but not the duty to act. When the government fails to act there is no device that permits private citizens to act on their own behalf. The best legislation in the world, unless we can be assured it will always be acted upon, won't save us from future examples of pollution such as those we've seen with Dow Chemical; the mercury contamination in the St. Clair River; Reed Paper in Dryden; arsenic in the Moira River; sulphur dioxide from Inco in Sudbury; excessive emissions from lead smelters, and so on.

It is very important to consider just how many of the aforementioned pollution episodes would not have slid by government completely if government had felt the pressure that comes from knowing citizens could have acted when government was not prepared to do so.

When citizens have a right to act, the government is then put in a position where it might be embarrassed if a citizen takes a polluter to court and shows plainly that polluter has been in violation of the reasonable standards and has not done what it was reasonable to do in the circumstances to clean up. The government would obviously suffer great embarrassment. Consequently, there would be an incentive to people within the ministry to take action before the matter is taken up by a private citizen in front of the court.

In fact, the Canadian Environmental Law Association has pointed out, in a recent letter to a Toronto newspaper: "It is quite clear this bill is meant to supplement, where possible, existing regulatory mechanisms, not displace them. The bill would at long last bring Ontario environmental law into the 20th century. At the very least, it should be subject to legislative standing committee and public review."

Many have phoned in or written in to say they support the bill. Among these are the Conservation Council of Ontario; the Ontario Branch of the Consumers' Association of Canada; the World Wildlife Fund; the Sierra Club; and Pollution Probe, to name a few. There is also the Algonquin Wildlands League; the task force of the major Christian churches; and the Canadian Bar Association—particularly the Ontario branch of that organization.

There are also some who have written in to say it would be better to change the government than to attempt a bill such as this. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I am all for changing the government. This doesn't prevent me, however, from trying to introduce legislation that would improve the conditions between elections. The notion that there are no precedents for the kind of legislation I am proposing—that it is somehow very revolutionary or whatever—is actually drawn simply from a lack of familiarity with the events taking place around us.

Under Bill 69 Quebec has granted its citizens, in a qualified form, a type of standing before the courts on environmental matters. In Michigan the very principles I am putting forth in this bill have been accepted and put into practice for the past 10 years. How has the Michigan Environmental Protection Act worked? Let me quote from one of the many reviews of the act, this one from the Journal of Urban Law:

"During the first six years the legislation was invoked 119 times and only 17 instances involved were appealed. Measured over the life of the act, the inescapable conclusion is that the 119 cases filed under this act constitute only a minuscule fraction of the more than 600,000 civil cases initiated in Michigan circuit court over the same period."

I could go on to quote a very lengthy article here indicating that the Michigan experience has indeed been an excellent one. Those who say this is somehow a new departure, giving judges the right to make law, totally fail to understand that in fact we have two kinds of laws. We have laws that are passed by the Legislature and codified; we also have a judge-made law—so-called common law.

When a judge makes a law in the sense of rendering a decision in a common-law case, of course, the standards he sets and the rulings he makes apply strictly to the people involved in that particular case. Each further case that may come before the courts is decided on the merits of each case successively, although judges will naturally look back on earlier cases from the point of view of precedent. It is not the same as saying the judges are writing codified legislation.

In fact, there are some who say that to give standing to ordinary individuals in front of the court would be a terribly revolutionary thing to do. I would point out there are several actions which already can be taken in the court. Individuals, for instance, can bring private nuisance claims to seek redress where they have suffered personal damage or injury. The Attorney General may bring a public nuisance case where harm is done to the public as a whole. The problem is that no individual may bring a public nuisance case himself or herself, unless either the Attorney General gives consent or that individual suffered injury of a nature and degree different from that of the general public.

Under the circumstances, the law of standing is clearly too strictly prescribed against the people who wish to bring matters before the court. I am happy to say that in the last decade the courts have actually been chipping away at that particular law.

For example, I show you the case where a person by the name of Thorson was suing the federal government to have the Official Languages Act held unconstitutional. He was granted standing, based on the importance of the issue, even though he couldn't show that he himself would be in some manner dealt with in a way different from the other people in the population. He was not going to suffer more personal damage than his neighbour, for instance. But he was granted standing.

The same thing happened in the case of the Nova Scotia board of censors versus McNeil, reported in 1976. In fact, there again, a person who couldn't show that he himself would be personally damaged was able to be granted standing on the matter of challenging the board of censors in the determination of what films could be seen. The same is true in the Canadian Broadcasting League versus the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission, a judgement in 1979.

What I am saying is the ability of people to use the courts to argue general circumstances rather than personal damage is coming little by little, anyhow. The judges are becoming more liberal in their interpretation of the law of standing. What I am saying is nothing revolutionary or radical. What I am saying is that we should put into law in the Legislature this tendency on the part of the courts. People are being given standing. It may well be that in some years people will be given standing on environmental matters with or without the law I am suggesting.

What I am saying is rather than wait for the lengthy and difficult and arduous way in which these things are done little by little over decades, we should take a good principle and establish it in legislation as soon as possible.

There are those who say that judges mustn't make law. I point out that judges and courts frequently set standards in the most complex financial, technical and social issues. Look at obscenity laws, at patent laws, at matters of professional negligence, price fixing and securities fraud. In all of these instances, judges are asked to set standards which have a certain technical quality. In the act we are proposing the courts will have access to the environmental experts on the matter, not only as witnesses but also via the boards that exist under legislation.

It is a novel attempt on our part to in a sense marry the common law and the judges' attempt to set reasonable standards with those boards that are presently under legislation responsible for gathering the information and the setting of standards.

The Ministry of the Environment has said that a person could sue a smoker under this bill. In fact a person could sue a smoker under existing legislation. This bill is clearly not designed for anything of that kind. The truth of the matter is that what we are talking about is public nuisance. Private nuisance can already be sued for by an individual if he so wishes.

There are those who argue we would be flooding the courts with cases. The experience in Michigan shows that simply is not so. There is a penalty for those who bring an action which is not meritorious and reasonable. Any case that is vexatious or frivolous would be thrown out. A deposit is required. It's an expensive matter to go to the courts. Therefore I would say the courts will not be clogged with nuisance cases. There is no evidence of that whatsoever.

I say simply that some years from now, if the good Lord allows us to live some more decades we are all going to have to look at ourselves and our children and we are going to have to tell them, what we did to make this planet liveable, to stop fouling our own nest as only we human beings seem able to do. No other animal fouls his nest the way we do. We are going to have to tell those children when they are adults and we are elderly what we did.

This bill gives the individual the right to go to court on behalf of a very clear right that he or she should have, the right to a clean environment. He should be able to go and take action so that a company will not be able to hide behind some private conversation they may have had with a ministry official. They will have to show, in the light of day, everything they have been able to do to in order to clean up and if they took every reasonable action then, of course, that would be accepted.

I say to the minister I am proud to present this bill to the Legislature. I hope it will receive second reading and go to committee. I think that's where it belongs, so others can bring testimony before such a committee. I am grateful to the many groups representing millions of Ontarians who have written in to give me their support for this act. I am grateful to them for their public interest and I hope this House will accept this bill.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that the member for Hamilton West did not consider his environmental bill of rights to be a matter of more urgent public importance than a two-day old budget now being debated in another House by the elected representatives from Ontario in that House and the people who are responsible for what happens to that budget.

At any rate, his attempt to adjourn the House this afternoon has resulted in the debating time of this bill being virtually cut in half.

Mr. S. Smith: That's because of the way you voted.

Mr. Breithaupt: If you could have made up your minds as to how to vote, it wouldn't have taken half as long.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Ms. Bryden: We make decisions with due deliberation.

Mr. Speaker, we have not more than 35 or 40 minutes for the entire debate on this bill, of which the Leader of the Opposition gets 20 minutes. I have only a very limited time to discuss this bill.

I will say it does embody a very important principle which is long overdue in our environmental legislation, namely access to the courts by citizens on environmental matters, regardless of whether they themselves have suffered pecuniary loss or direct damage but where their environment has been degraded.

I will support this bill because I have been advocating this principle of standing, as it is called, for all the years I have been environment critic—which is almost three years. My predecessor, Dr. Charles Godfrey, not only advocated this principle but actually obtained from the then Minister of the Environment a commitment to bring in legislation to implement this principle.

I would like to read what the then minister, the member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr) wrote to Dr. Charles Godfrey in October 1976, "I am recommending the amendment of our environmental legislation to provide wider scope for citizen prosecution and class actions, as I have stated recently in public."

We have still not been able to get that commitment of the Minister of the Environment in 1976 fulfilled by either of his successors. If the members opposite should vote against or block this bill they are repudiating that commitment of the then minister and they will be unable to boast that Ontario leads in environmental legislation.

This kind of legislation, as the member for Hamilton West mentioned, has been in Michigan since 1970. It's in a number of other US jurisdictions. It's recommended by the bar association. It's recommended by many environmental associations.

If the members opposite should block this bill, they are leaving the citizens of Ontario to protect their environment with one hand tied behind their backs. The other hand, unfortunately, is the Ministry of the Environment, which is a very weak hand. We do need the supplement of the opportunity for citizens to take polluters to court and to try to establish their right in that way.

As the member for Hamilton West mentioned, it is not the entire answer to the protection of our environment. It will be hit and miss. It will only work where there are flagrant violations, where the cases appear to be potentially successful, where there are people with the time and the money to go to court and to bring the polluters before the courts. It does not provide for the preventive action necessary when violations are discovered, unless the courts so order preventive action, but the courts may not go into all the ramifications of the prevention that is needed. So it is complementary legislation to a committed Ministry of the Environment; to a Ministry of the Environment with the political will to set strong, tough standards and enforce them.

It is also complementary to the spills bill which we have just passed and which the government is taking some credit for, although I think the committee that worked on it also should take some credit. But, Mr. Speaker, if you're going to have a spills bill to compensate people after the event, when accidents occur through the use of toxic substances, you should also have a bill to protect people before the event, to protect them from dangers that may result in damages to them.

We also need a third kind of legislation. That is an overall compensation bill for the people who suffer from environmental degradation or lose their livelihood because of environmental effects like the fishermen in the St. Clair River. They lost their livelihoods but under the government's suit against the Dow Chemical Company for $35 million they got $250,000.

While I support this bill I should point out I hope it will go to committee and we will have an opportunity to improve it, because there are a number of shortcomings in it.

First of all, there is no specific provision for class actions. There may be group actions if this bill is in effect but in this province we do need more adequate legislation regarding class actions. My colleague, the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), has brought in a bill for the past two years to introduce the principle of class actions into our legislation.

Another glaring weakness in the bill is the lack of any provision for funding of people who will use the courts as a remedy for the degradation of their environment. We need either legal aid extended to this area, or a fund into which all users of hazardous substances would make a contribution that could then be allocated to people who produced a prima facie case against the polluter. Some form of providing a fund is needed so it is not, as I have said many times, a David and Goliath affair in the courts; so people do have an opportunity to use their access to the courts without having to run horrendous risks of very high costs. We know cases can go to appeal to the Supreme Court and the costs can be prohibitive if somebody loses. Therefore, the use of this legislation will be greatly inhibited unless there is some limitation on the risks the litigators have to take.

In this bill there is also a useful requirement of freedom of information. You cannot go to court if you do not have the evidence or all the rulings that were made; how the standards were arrived at; what kind of studies were made in setting the standards and whether you can challenge them. But the exemptions in the bill under the freedom of information clauses are very sweeping, much more sweeping than in the proposed bill before the federal House. I think they should be looked at very carefully because we may end up with very little more freedom of information than we now have.

Also in the bill, it is permitted that a person who is sued has a defence. If he is fulfilling a standard that has been set, he is more or less let off; it is a defence against the charge, regardless of whether the standard is good, bad or indifferent. I think that's a weakness in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I will support the bill but I hope we will have an opportunity to improve and clean up the very serious deficiencies in it. I think it is perhaps the only way we are going to get the government to look at the necessity of extending access to the courts for all citizens in environmental matters.

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a crime—and this is not a criticism of the Leader of the Opposition in that he didn't have total control over this matter—that we didn't have an opportunity to have more people participate in this debate in view of the importance of the topic. I just share that with them; it is not a critical comment in total directed at him.

When I first heard about the Leader of the Opposition's private bill, Mr. Speaker, I was anxious to speak to it. Anxious, because I have deep and personal commitments as an environmentalist myself; anxious because the constituency I represent, Armourdale, is not atypical of a lot of constituencies in the urban and, more specifically, Metro Toronto area, where environmental concerns rank high on the list of daily concerns and outlooks for the future in that community.

It takes nothing away from the title or the principle of this bill to say that the issue has some political sex appeal in the urban centres, a fact which was not lost on the member for Hamilton West when he introduced the topic. I think the topic is important; I think the principle of the bill is important; I don't think the bill, though, is worthy of our support.

When I heard about the topic several weeks ago, I was one whose initial reaction was that this bill should go to a committee. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), for whom I have a great deal of respect, knows that. We talked about it at some length, then I read the bill.

It is the whole core of the bill, this borrowed piece of what I consider to be inappropriate US legislation, that makes me feel that it is not salvageable in committee—indeed, that nothing would be accomplished by it, that the bill would not in any way do anything to improve the state of the environment in this jurisdiction. Had I felt otherwise, I would have persisted, I think—and I know I would have been joined by a lot of my other colleagues—that we would have pursued that route.

As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I think it might be appropriate right at the outset to get on the record that the number of people in this province and in this Legislature who have concerns about the environment is quite high; in my judgement it is a growing number. But the people who sit on this side of this chamber have every bit as much commitment to the environment as any member who sits on the other side of this room, and it is important that be acknowledged.

By the same token, this is not a private member's bill like other private members' bills. Clearly, because it is a bill introduced by the Leader of the Opposition, it has some special importance. One assumes, and I think properly, that he and his colleagues and advisors would have spent some time on finding the appropriate topic to pursue in the important time set aside for his bill and I am mildly disappointed, when I support the concept, to find there was not as much thought as I for one would have hoped would go into the bill.

In the very few minutes I have I want to get a couple of things on the record. I would quote very briefly from a Toronto Star editorial of last week entitled, "Smith's Idea Fatally Flawed." I think most members probably read it; it was dated Thursday, December 6.

"Opposition Leader Stuart Smith's environmental rights bill would violate such basic tenets of our democratic system that the government is fully justified in opposing it.

"In effect, judges would be given legislative powers.

"This clashes with the primary principle of democracy: That laws can only be made by popularly elected legislators and that they are implemented by government ministers who are directly accountable to those legislators."

The same editorial goes on: "Formulating an effective environmental protection policy is not a simple task. The authors of the environmental rights bill assume that the government lacks the will to combat pollution, but that a judge hearing an environmental case will take effective anti-pollution measures. There is, however, no basis for this assumption." I think that is at the guts of the issue—the guts of my criticism and concern about the bill—Mr. Speaker.

If I can I will very briefly get at least one illustration on the record. The Minister of the Environment has an excellent record and if we were going to get in line around here as to who has real concerns about the environment—commitment to environmental protection—I submit the Minister of the Environment himself would be at or very near the front of that line. Even the most cynical opposition member would have to publicly acknowledge that. I know that, privately, this minister's openness and candour and commitment are supported by virtually everyone in this Legislature. If he were any more open, he would be arrested for indecent exposure.

Let's take a look at one fairly contentious issue, the matter of acid rain. The whole question of acid rain, Mr. Speaker, was brought to the forefront by the Minister of the Environment. He referred this topic to the committee where the opposition in the majority could address the issue. Experts were available to get information on the record and all of this was conveyed to the public by extensive media coverage.

I repeat, this government brought the acid rain issue to the forefront and it has committed $2 million to research on this topic alone. The minister has met with representatives from the federal government to get more progress on international abatement and he has had discussion with Inco in preparation for a new and tougher control order.

The daily accountability of the duly elected Minister of the Environment is a principle every single person in this chamber should uphold. You can see him, Mr. Speaker. You can reach him. You can touch him. You can pat him on the back when you think it's appropriate, or you can even give him a little kick when you think that's necessary. But the daily accountability is the central and important part of this system, and we want to protect it.

If the government errs, the government is daily on the line through question period. My goodness, when you look back at the order of questions in question period over this session, the lead question has come from one of the opposition spokesmen to the Minister of the Environment practically every single day. I think that's a good thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has now expired.

The member for Hamilton West for a wee bit more than four minutes.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is clearly regrettable that we have ended up with so little time for the debate of the private members' bills. It was of course our intention to debate what we sincerely considered to be a matter of urgent public importance. We saw no particular reason why the bells should have been so prolonged in the discussion with regard to that particular question of public importance. Unfortunately, the way things have worked out, there is not much time here.

I want to comment on the two speakers who have spoken. I obviously realize that had they a more reasonable amount of time, as they might have expected originally, they might have made other remarks as well. I can understand it's sometimes difficult to compress a speech into a brief period.

With regard to the member for Beaches-Woodbine, I want to thank her very much for the support she's offered to the principle of the bill and for her willingness to see this bill go to committee. She has made a thoughtful analysis and has come up with a few comments where she feels there are deficiencies in the bill.

One is that it has no specific course for class action. I agree that class action would be valuable, but we feel that the way to go, perhaps, is with a bill like the member for Lakeshore's, or some other bill to provide for class action generally, rather than specifically within this particular bill.

As far as the lack of funding for those who use the courts goes, we feel the legal aid system could be used. Again, we didn't want to put in funding because a private member's bill is not supposed to allocate funds; we had a problem there. If you allocate funds with a private member's bill there can be difficulty. In any event, we certainly agree that funds will have to be there. Legal aid is one possibility.

With regard to the exemptions in the freedom of information, I can assure the honourable member that we are quite prepared to look at that a second time. As to whether a defence should or should not be meeting the standard, we put a lot of thought into that, because I also have some suspicions about it. We decided to go with it, and figured that we could hear arguments on both sides in committee.

As to the member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey), apart from some friendly statements about being in favour of the environment, it was very difficult for me to hear any specific points against the bill. The first thing he said, basically the only thing he said, was quoted from the Star editorial. One, judges would be making laws. I thought I dealt with that in my original statement. I pointed out very plainly that the Star editorial is simply, totally in error. Judges make laws all the time, in the sense of setting standards in the most complex issues. There is nothing new about this. It is simply something new to the person who wrote that editorial.

I have sent a letter to the Star explaining just how wrong they are in that instance. I trust that if it hasn't been printed today it will be printed shortly. I haven't seen today's edition of that worthy newspaper. The Ry-lands versus Fletcher case is a perfectly good example of a judge making law.

In addition to that, there is the point he quotes from the Star editorial that judges may not take effective action. Of course they may not take effective action, but that is what judges are about, they have to make a judgement. Judges judge, that's what their job is.

I fail totally to understand why the member for Armourdale, who is a very nice chap I am sure, even bothered to make an intervention in today's debate. It is totally beyond me, since he didn't say anything whatever other than to quote one line from a Star editorial, an editorial which as far as I am concerned is simply, utterly wrong.

Our laws certainly already allow judges to give protection to citizens in the form of setting certain standards, and they have done so for years. I am mystified by the apparent inability of the Star editorialist to understand something as basic as that. I will be glad to send the member for Armourdale a copy of the letter, dated December 11, that I sent to the Star.

What it comes to is this: Individual citizens have a right to a clean environment. They should be allowed to insist upon that right in the courts of the land. With such a law in place the ministry would be much more likely to act, knowing individual citizens could take things into their own hands if necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That completes the time allotted for ballot item 11; it will be dealt with further at 5:50.

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Bounsall moved second reading of Bill 187, An Act to Amend the Education Act, 1974.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require school boards in Ontario to develop a definite, orderly, rational procedure and policy for determining, in this period of declining enrolments in Ontario, whether or not schools should be closed.

The Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), in her opening remarks before the committee discussing the Ministry of Education estimates this year, indicated in over three pages of that report that she would be requiring school boards in Ontario to submit their closure policies and procedures for approval by the minister and the ministry. I felt very strongly, however, in looking at the remarks contained in the minister's opening statement, that the requirements and procedures should be legislated. Hence my private member's bill that it should not be simply left, in perhaps as non-detailed a way as was given in the minister's remarks, to the school boards to come up with their policies and procedures.

[5:15]

I must admit, too, that the main points around which I wrote the bill were flagrantly plagiarized in the minister's basic five points which she mentioned in her estimates. Basically there should be little disagreement in principle between the ministry and myself about the need for this bill. I have added some additional points which I feel to be important but which were not spelled out by the minister in what subsequently became the minister's note to all boards of education in the province indicating that she wished to receive their policies and procedures. Basically the tone of the minister's remarks in the estimates differed from the memorandum which was sent to all chairmen of school boards and directors of education.

The difference in tone between what I would like to see happen and what has happened in the directives sent around by the minister is that the minister, while requiring policies and procedures, seems to be embarked upon a course of encouraging closures. She mentions public input, but she does not provide for orderly public input and the provision of all information to the parents and citizens affected by a particular school closure, which is of particular concern when it is a community school. Her remarks seem to be encouraging closure rather than encouraging a policy of keeping community schools, in particular, open.

We differ, perhaps, in philosophy at this point. I think community schools should be kept open rather than closed and that there should be policies to encourage keeping those schools open.

What concerned me further in the minister's remarks, and what took up a fair amount of discussion in the estimates, was that the minister had surveyed, through the regional offices, the surplus school situation to 1985. I was appalled to find that the best estimate of those regional directors was that there will be 352 elementary schools closed and 37 secondary schools closed by 1985. That is one secondary school every two months between now and September, 1985, and one elementary school per week between now and 1985. I find that number shocking and totally unacceptable. It is a body blow to communities, community schools and the quality of education across Ontario to have that many schools close in our province. We are clearly going in the direction of moving our children into large population schools outside their immediate communities and away from the often intimate settings of community schools not very far from their homes, which they have been used to attending. Certainly those children in the kindergarten to grade three level should be able to have the opportunity to continue attending those schools.

I asked in the estimates, roughly one month ago now, for the criterion used by the regional directors in arriving at that particular number. At the time the ministry said it did not suggest to the regional directors any particular number of students which would make school closures appropriate. At that time I asked that those numbers they had used in their own minds to arrive at the numbers of schools across Ontario that would be closed be given to us, and for the ministry to investigate what criterion they had used in their minds about community acceptance of the closing of a school. That has yet to come forth. That was one day shy of a month ago. Perhaps that survey of the regional directors has not even been taken by the Ministry of Education.

I have in my hand the memorandum to the chairmen of school boards and directors of education about school closure policies. Although it is more detailed than what the minister said in her opening statement at the estimates, in some areas, particularly in the way in which input would be obtained from the affected citizens, it certainly leaves something to be desired. Again, when one looks at the tone of this memorandum and the way it is phrased, one gets the feeling the ministry is, on balance, encouraging the closure of schools rather than encouraging keeping schools open.

Mr. Wildman: Just ask them in the Sault about that.

Mr. Bounsall: When you go a whole month and this ministry somehow cannot determine from the regional directors—and there aren't that many of them—what they had in mind in providing those numbers of 352 elementary schools and 37 secondary schools—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is the directors of education.

Mr. Bounsall: It was stated in the minister's opening statement and it was not denied throughout the estimates: "The regional offices and each director of education"; that still isn't a large survey to be taken in over a month's time.

They have already made that best estimate. They must have done that best estimate on some criterion. That criterion, therefore, is very easily gathered.

My private member's bill certainly encourages full discussion with the community, and furthermore it would require that there be a moratorium on boards closing any schools until they have submitted their criteria, and that criteria is approved by the ministry. To me that is a very reasonable step to take.

Further, and rather important, my bill provides a means to allow an appeal process for the people of Ontario after procedures have been followed. In thinking very carefully about the various appeal processes available, I have chosen one which has been greeted with quite some degree of acceptance, certainly by the teachers' federations and various groups across the province which are indeed having problems with their boards in closure of schools.

I have chosen the Ontario Municipal Board as the board to which a school board's decision could be appealed. They would consider all the matters involved, not just whether the procedures as accepted by the ministry for that particular board were followed, and also listen to the arguments presented as to why the school should remain open.

I have indicated in my bill the type of analysis and report on the financial effects which the board should be prepared to present; such as the financial effects as well as the social effects of not closing the school or of altering the school programs and the effect that would have on school programs generally, the proposed combination of uses that could be made of that school building; and finally the financial effects on the taxpayer-householders and upon the board of closing the school.

The effect of closing the schools it is proposed to close in North York would have meant a very small increase to taxpayer-householders. If one takes into account the cost of busing students to somewhat distant schools, one finds this to be the situation that pertains. The cost saving in closing schools is negligible, if indeed it exists at all. There is money saved to the boards only if they are able to dispose of school buildings and dispose of the properties. If they have to retain a property because there is no particular sale for it in that particular area or for other reasons, there is virtually little or no saving to the board of education. Certainly where there is an expense, when one puts it on an average taxpayer-householder basis the cost is negligible to the average taxpayer-household. A calculation was made in North York and it is roughly 50 cents per year per taxpayer-household. If the electors of North York were asked by their board: "Is it worth it to close these schools for that kind of money saving?" I am convinced the answer would be a very definitive no.

In closing my remarks, because I am concerned that other members in the Legislature have a chance to speak on this bill, I would just like to indicate that today I received support for my bill from the Glenorchy residents association, some 20 signatures, and a communication that the Glen Avon Home and School and the Avondale community associations are very much in favour of the principles embodied in this bill, particularly those of citizen participation and that there be an appeal process and a moratorium on all school closings until the procedures and policies have been met.

In looking back at a few clippings over the last month from areas in the province that have had this problem, there are quite a few of them. I will read out the comments by the education writer for the Sudbury Star with reference to the Sudbury Board of Education's decision on whether to close the Copper Cliff High School: "If the Sudbury Board of Education would expend as much effort to maintain Copper Cliff High School's enrolment as it is expending to close it there would be no problem." There has certainly been a problem with having enough time for citizen input in Sault Ste. Marie, in the proposed closing of Sault Ste. Marie Collegiate Institute. And on and on.

We need a very careful procedure for citizen input. The board must be required to provide all the financial information that would cause them even to consider designating a school for closure. We need citizen input throughout after the school has been identified. Again, there must be co-operation from the board in providing all figures they have available, including the average cost per taxpayer-householder resulting from the closing.

Finally, if an affected citizen feels strongly that the board has, after having had all the public input, made an error, he can appeal that board's decision to the Ontario Municipal Board. If it is only one citizen who feels that way that would become fairly evident at the Ontario Municipal Board hearing and it would not need to be a long one. If it involves the majority of citizens of that community affected by that community school that would be a somewhat larger hearing, as it very well deserves to be.

I feel very strongly that school enrolments could get down as low as between 60 and 80 per cent of normal before programs are seriously affected. There is nothing wrong in our educational system today with the triple grading that might result from that. I wouldn't want to be the teacher in a triple-graded class, but that was the academically accepted and recommended method of teaching prevalent in 1974-75, that is what it was felt should be done pedagogically in our schools at that time.

I have no aversion, in fact I think it would be of benefit, to see that sort of education come into our community schools, even if it meant triple-grading, so that our schools are kept open. Only when a majority of the parents of the children decide, for program reasons alone, that that school should close and there are other alternatives in the area acceptable to them should that school be closed.

The boards of educations that have closed schools have noticed there has been a falloff in attendance by children from those schools that are closed. This bill also requires the board to survey the parents of a school expected to be closed with respect to their future intention, for example where they would send their children should that school close. That would be rather interesting and relevant information. It would be information which has heretofore not been gathered across the province in determining what schools should be closed and where the children who had been attending those schools were likely to turn up.

We want to get away from the tendency of moving our children to large-population schools out of their community area. We want to keep them in the small schools in their community area, which in many cases is indeed a community school and a community facility.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has two minutes remaining. Do you wish to reserve the two minutes?

Mr. Bounsall: No, Mr. Speaker. If that gives more opportunity for other persons to speak I would prefer that.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this bill, it's interesting to look at the bill and what has probably brought about its development. It's interesting to look back and see a memorandum that came from the Minister of Education. Reading through the wording of that memorandum, I find it almost word for word with the language of the bill the member has proposed.

It's interesting to go back just a little further on that and find that it came from a statement by the minister in the House on November 13, maybe even further back than that.

I know that in discussion with my colleague the member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey), many of the items in the memorandum were items he proposed because of discussion in his riding regarding schools. Certainly he had great concern and wanted to speak on this bill; however, the way the time schedule has worked out today he wasn't able to do so as he had another commitment.

I do point out though, that he gives considerable support to the principles involved in the memorandum. I say the memorandum because it went out to the boards as an item of discussion.

I might just quote a paragraph from that memorandum. "This memorandum is to advise boards and their officials that it is the intention of the minister to require that all school boards in Ontario establish policies and procedures appropriate to its own set of circumstances with respect to the closing of schools within a general policy to be established by the ministry." I emphasize "to its own set of circumstances," because to cover the whole province is something very difficult to do in one bill.

I think that's very important. It is setting some guidelines but not imposing on the local board something which they find very difficult to deal with in their particular situation.

It would seem from our discussion and debate here this is something entirely new that has come upon us in the last year. I would tell members I served on a school board 15 years ago and we went through the closing of several schools in our community. Perhaps we were much closer to the situation than some of the larger school boards now facing this development. We had a lot of discussion. We followed a lot of the criteria in that memorandum and were able to work out our problems locally, dealing with our own local voters who elected us as members of that particular school board and to whom we were answerable. I think that is something that is very important.

All of us have become more aware, of course, of the complex arguments that can be brought to bear on the boards of education. They have been thrust into positions fraught with problems that challenge their very existence. My honourable colleague has been very closely involved with such a situation in his riding. I think that's why he was so concerned and put forth some of the suggestions in this memorandum.

I think everyone has been given a fair hearing. School closures are a no-win proposition, no one is ever going to be particularly satisfied with the decisions that are made; but someone has to make those decisions, someone has to make them and that's what the people elect their local board members to do. In my riding of Middlesex many students are bused to and from school. It might not always be possible to have another school within reasonable walking distance, as is stated here. There is no definition, either, of what reasonable is. If a high school is being closed, older students can travel a lot farther than can public school children. It would be ideal if we could maintain our community schools at any cost, but conditions do change and the school system must respond to those changes; and that response must be at the local level by the locally-elected boards.

School boards have little control over the direction or growth of a neighbourhood, especially in settled areas. Some parts of a city may experience a revival of a particular neighbourhood, but nowadays this is no guarantee there is going to be a new group of children in that particular community. I think we've all seen communities where people have established, their children have grown up and they now own their homes; they're going to stay there for quite some time but the school population is not going to be quite the same for many years to come.

It's not always possible for a board to prepare a detailed plan for the alternative use of school buildings. There may not be any short or long-term options for using the school resources in a constructive way. Some parts of a school, such as playing fields, tennis courts or a swimming pool of course can be put to good use in the community. To convert buildings into, say senior citizen centres, may be fine in theory but very costly to implement. Many schools in urban areas are situated on very valuable pieces of land. It may be quite sensible to sell the site to a developer or retailer. In some cases the building itself might impede the development of a property it sits on and the funds from the sale could be put to much better use in the present school system.

I think back to some of the schools we had to close in our particular situation. Two of them are being used for community centres; one was developed into a small apartment building; another one is being used as a small manufacturing building in the community; and another one is now our local Canadian Legion headquarters. So they all became of good use to the community. I think it is important that those things can happen so we don't sit there with a white elephant.

Another thing; if a school stays open and has pretty much of a borderline enrolment the school board is going to be watching the attendance figures closely. To say a school should not be identified as a candidate for closure before five years unless the parents request it is particularly unworkable for the boards.

How many parents are going to write to the board saying, "Please close the local school"? It doesn't matter how few students you have you're probably not going to get that 50 per cent the member is talking about. Parents are hardly going to do it while their children are attending that school anyway.

What about program choices? If the school population is getting lower and lower is a board supposed to freeze the number of teachers or transfer them to other areas where they may be needed more? I think that makes much more sense.

What costs would be involved if the teachers and pupils stayed in a half empty building? Surely this type of situation does not have to deteriorate to the point where the parents have to tell the board to shut the school. It is not beneficial for the children, their parents or the board. Surely some kind of agreement can be reached before this stage is reached. I think, in many cases, this is what has happened; it's been practical.

It is no easy decision to close a school; all parties have a certain reluctance to make such a move. Most schools have a tradition of academic and sporting abilities; and we all tend to remember our school days and our old school as a pleasant one we want to see retained. To close a school means the end of an important component to a lot of people.

While I do not dispute the usefulness of studies and hearings to determine all the factors that affect school closures, this bill drags out the process still further by involving the Ontario Municipal Board. This really does get ridiculous. If any school is to be closed, "the decision for closure may be appealed to the Ontario Municipal Board." How the devil are decisions supposed to be made when either the parents or the boards are supposed to appeal each others' arguments to a body that has absolutely no educational concerns or authority? I think the OMB has better things to do with its time than listen to a rehash of all the board and parents' proposals that were put forth. Who, pray tell, pays for this; the parents, the board or the taxpayers at large?

It may very well be, Mr. Speaker, that both sides of the presentation in a decision-making process have valid concerns; however, the boards of education have the ultimate responsibility for making such decisions. Their trustees are elected officials and they must answer to the local electorate, as we all do.

No decisions about the school closures are being made in an arbitrary fashion. This is a painful learning experience for everyone. Most of the larger school boards have worked out some sort of procedure for a meeting with parents to discuss the impact of school closures. Any interested parent has the opportunity to make his or her views known to the local board at any meeting.

The Ministry of Education is sensitive to these problems. This bill, if adopted, would impose unnecessary costs on the parents and the boards. Although I am not against boards having policies on school closures, I think many already do have a policy set up. I feel this amendment would add more fuel to a potentially delicate situation. We would be imposing on them, from the provincial level, a set of guidelines or rules they might not be able to live with.

The boards should continue to exercise their own judgement and their own discretion. I call upon the members to defeat this bill.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, I want to support the basic principle of this bill. I will point out there is one section of it, however, with which I have some difficulty. I hope that if the bill gets to committee we will be able to make some amendments in that one section.

The basic thrust of this legislation, as I see it, is twofold. The thrust, first of all, is to recognize there is a serious problem in the province right now in particular with respect to the closing of small community schools. Secondly, there is a problem with the parents whose children go to those schools having sufficient input into the decision.

I noted with interest that in the Minister of Education's opening statement when she presented her estimates to us, she said, "with respect to the local guidelines." She also said, "However, since the policies of individual boards will be affected by provincial policies, and since the phenomenon of declining enrolment is province-wide and of an extent that requires provincial response, the need for provincial guidelines relating to school closure, in addition to and complementary to those prepared and applied locally, is recognized."

I point that out only to show the need for provincial involvement. At the same time, I want it to be very clear that I recognize the final responsibility of the local board to make the decision. I believe there needs to be a review mechanism, but I think it is important for us to recognize that once we have very clear guidelines, and once there is evidence that the board has followed those guidelines, the final decision must be the board's.

Where we need a review or an appeal mechanism is in those situations when any number of parents are able to demonstrate that one or the other set of the guidelines and the procedures, whether we are talking about the minister's guidelines and procedures or the guidelines and procedures as outlined in this bill, has not been properly followed.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that when a school board wants to open a school they very clearly must get the approval of the ministry. The ministry sets out to determine first whether or not there is a need, and second, the minister has to determine what the financial impact will be, whether it be on the local board or on the ministry itself. Therefore it seems reasonable that if the ministry is going to be involved in the process of opening a school it must also be involved in the process of closing it.

One of the things this kind of legislation requires is a clear understanding of the impact of closing of schools. We have discussed this with the minister previously but it needs to be repeated. We need to have some research to be sure we understand clearly what effect closing a school down has upon the quality of education given to those students and what effect leaving a school open with a smaller number of students has upon the quality of education. There is all kinds of speculation as to what it does, but we do not yet have any clear evidence.

Second, we need to find out exactly what the financial impact is when we close a school. There seems to be, not in the province of Ontario but in other jurisdictions, considerable evidence that there is very little dollar saving, that the offsetting costs, the fact you have to prepare another school to receive these students, the fact you have to make renovations and the fact you have to provide more busing result in the board saving very little, if any money.

This minister, on a number of occasions in her opening statement, indicated the importance of family relationships, school relationships, and parent and teacher relationships. We do not have any evidence yet what kind of conflict arises between parents and teachers, between home and school, when the local school is closed. These are very important issues.

We also have to understand the social impact on young children when their local community school is closed. We know that young children today are having a great deal of difficulty coping with family stress, coping with community stress and coping with social and economic stress. We therefore have to ask ourselves, "Do we need to put more stress on these young children?"

This bill doesn't answer those questions, Mr. Speaker, but it clearly points out that we are going to have to understand this kind of an impact if we are going to have procedures and guidelines.

In closing I want to say that we need a review mechanism, but I do not think the OMB is the appropriate one. I think an appeal has to be made to some body set up by the ministry, so that when it's finally decided that things are not going right that appeal body has to make a judgement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 13, I wish to indicate to the House the business for tomorrow, and with the consent of the House only for next Monday and Tuesday. Then next Tuesday I will indicate the further order of business for the House from Tuesday on.

Tomorrow the House will be in committee of supply to continue the consideration of the estimates of the Treasurer.

On Monday, December 17, afternoon and evening, the House will consider legislation, continuing the consideration of Bill 173 in committee stage, followed by Bill 174, second reading and committee stage if required; Bill Pr5 in committee stage; and Bill 154, second reading and committee stage if required. We will then go to the following concurrences, as time permits: Community and Social Services, Education, Colleges and Universities, Culture and Recreation, Attorney General, Solicitor General, Health, Industry and Tourism, and Agriculture and Food.

On Tuesday, December 18, we will consider legislation in the afternoon and the evening in the following order: Bill 204, second reading and committee if required; Bill 202 and Bill 203, second reading; Bill 127, second reading; and following that budget debate if time permits.

As I indicated, I will indicate to the House the order to be followed after next Tuesday. At this time it is considered that the House may meet Wednesday morning and Wednesday afternoon, and Thursday morning, in addition to its regular sittings.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

APPENDIX
(See page 5477)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

INDUSTRIAL WASTE WAYBILLS

368. Mr. S. Smith: Will the Ministry of the Environment table industrial waste waybills for the following companies: Tricil Limited, 551 Avonhead Road, Mississauga, Ontario, for wastes received during 1977 from any branch or division of Occidental Petroleum; Johnson, Matthey Limited, 130 Glidden Road, Brampton, Ontario, for wastes received during 1977 from any branch or division of PPG Industries; Lido Industrial Products, (Plastics Division), 40 Queen Elizabeth Blvd., for wastes received during 1977 from any branch or division of the Borden Chemical Corporation? (Tabled November 29, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Ontario Regulation 926/76, "Transfers of Liquid Industrial Waste" came into effect April 1, 1977. At that time, compilation of data was performed manually, and it was not attempted to match the forms submitted separately by the generator and receiver of the waste. Data of types and quantities of wastes produced and received were recorded.

An automated system was not implemented until late in 1978. The average number of forms being received during 1977 was about 3,000 per month or 36,000 forms over a one-year period. The regulation requires all parties to retain their forms for a period of one year. Ministry records beyond two years may not be complete. Manual cross-referencing between the old type forms is a very time-consuming task.

Inquiries involving more recent data can be and have been handled much more expeditiously.

Assuming that the old records are complete, it is estimated that an additional three weeks will be required to complete the manual task of matching the forms and provide the information requested.

COMMUNITY COLLEGE FACULTY NEGOTIATIONS

369. Mr. Van Horne: Would the Minister of Education please inform the House of any contingency plan she or her ministry officials may have to assure community college students that they won't lose their academic year or program in the event that the council of regents force a strike of the faculties of our community colleges? (Tabled November 29, 1979.)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The council of regents is bargaining in good faith and will do all it can to avoid a strike rather than "force" one.

In the event that a strike cannot be avoided, the length of time that the academic staff is away from duty will determine each college's ability to complete the instructional program in this academic year.

In so far as the program offerings of each college and campus are unique, any contingency plans must be determined locally.

370. Mr. Van Horne: Would the Minister of Education please inform the House by what authority she is able to instruct the council of regents not to agree to binding arbitration with the faculties of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology? (Tabled November 29, 1979.)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I did not instruct the council of regents not to agree to binding arbitration to resolve the issues in dispute between OPSEU and the council of regents; furthermore, it is not my intention to give any instruction, at this time, to the council.

The council of regents, pursuant to section 2(3) of the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act has the exclusive authority to bargain on behalf of the community colleges in Ontario.

EAST OF BAY PROJECT

387. Mr. R. F. Johnston: Would the Ministry of Government Services please provide any and all current proposals the government may have for the east of Bay sites usage; any and all preliminary drawings that might be prepared; any and all estimates of square footage requirements the government projects it might require for expansion; any requests by the ministry for additional space on the location or in the vicinity of Queen's Park; any rationale for precluding housing on the site; and any planning documents indicating that the property would be suitable for a bus terminal? (Tabled December 4, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: This question was answered during debates in the House on November 29 and 30, 1979.

To briefly reiterate, we have had some preliminary discussions with bus companies, at their request, concerning a possible site for a new bus terminal and with the YMCA, at their request, concerning a possible site for a new YMCA building. No decision has been made with respect to either of these two possible sites. If a decision were to be made to sell any of the east of Bay property for these purposes, the sale would be at market value and the purchasers would be responsible to negotiate or meet any restrictions placed on the property by the city of Toronto. In the late 1960's the provincial government assembled this east of Bay property to meet the long-term needs of the province. The province currently leases about two million square feet of office space in the downtown area which underlines the need to consider the future requirements of this property for government uses.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Williams moves that order of the day No. 24 be discharged as the recommendations contained in the first report of the standing statutory instruments committee, dated June 1979, have been incorporated in the second report of the committee set out in order of the day No. 26.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS COMMITTEE (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the second report of the standing statutory instruments committee, dated November 1979, being sessional paper No. 229.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise to lead the discussion with regard to the report before the assembly this evening. In commencing my remarks, I would like appropriately to cite the provisions of section 12 of the Regulations Act, RSO 1970, which states:

"(1) At the commencement of each session of the Legislature a standing committee of the assembly shall be appointed, to be known as the standing committee on regulations, with authority to sit during the session.

"(2) Every regulation stands permanently referred to the standing committee on regulations for the purposes of subsection 3.

"(3) The standing committee on regulations shall examine the regulations with particular reference to the scope and method of the exercise of delegated legislative power but without reference to the merits of the policy or objectives to be effected by the regulations or enabling statutes and shall deal with such other matters as are referred to it from time to time by the assembly.

"(4) The standing committee on regulations may examine any member of the executive council or any public servant designated by any such member respecting any regulation made under any act that is under its administration.

"(5) The standing committee on regulations shall, from time to time, report to the assembly its observations, opinions and recommendations."

That is how the section reads. I think it sets the tone for the discussion this evening as it clearly sets out the function and purpose of the regulations committee, which has since been renamed the statutory instruments committee.

I would point out that those basic terms of reference hold valid even to this day. They were broadened in March 1978 by order of the House. The powers of the committee were expanded twofold. First, the role of the committee with particular reference to the recommendations of the select committee on the fourth and fifth reports of the Ontario Commission on the Legislature were to be reviewed and considered, as well as the practices of the parliaments of Canada and the United Kingdom.

Further, the committee was charged with the responsibility of establishing guidelines to be observed in the delegation by statutes of power to make statutory instruments and the use made of such delegated power. Needless to say, the committee was equally charged with the responsibility to report its recommendations to the House.

I suggest this evening that it could be well demonstrated that through the past two-year period the statutory instruments committee and its successors in the presently constituted committee have fulfilled that mandate. In making my point, I would point out that the first substantive report of the committee, which was introduced in June 1978, has spelled out very clearly the role of the committee which I have highlighted here in my opening remarks. It clearly identified the various types of regulations. It set out and recommended certain guidelines for the making of regulations. It cited the authorization for making regulations. It covered definitions and penalties dealt with under regulations and indeed touched on the matter of exemptions from the Regulations Act itself.

The report also dealt with retroactive regulations and lastly, but of equal importance, dealt with a review of all of the then existing 1977 regulations.

The committee at its outset was given authority to retain counsel to assist the committee in vetting all of the current regulations to ensure that the regulatory process was being followed within a framework spelled out in the Regulations Act and which we, as a committee, have more clearly defined by new, more precise guidelines which I will refer to in a few moments.

Consequently, it is clear the first report of the committee in 1978 did deal with the first part of its extended mandate, namely, to consider the fourth and fifth reports of the Ontario commission on the Legislature and to establish guidelines that would be observed in the delegation of statutory powers.

In December of that year the second report of the committee came forward to fulfill the second part of its vastly extended rules of responsibility, namely to consider the practices in other jurisdictions with regard to the processing and enactment of secondary legislation as encompassed primarily in regulations that complement the laws enacted in the various jurisdictions. In fulfilling that responsibility we did, as that report points out, deal with and consider the regulatory process in our neighbouring province of Manitoba. As well, we visited our federal capital to determine how the regulatory process is dealt with at the federal level.

I point out to you that in the spring of 1979, the committee in carrying on with its mandate dealt with specific statutes and devoted a great deal of time to the vetting of the 1978 regulations to satisfy ourselves that regulations coming in under statutes from the various ministries were being drafted and brought in and given the force of law in a manner consistent with the guidelines we had established in our initial report of June, 1978.

The report we have before us this evening is a culmination of the efforts of the committee in its two years of ongoing work and effort. As you will see from perusing the report, Mr. Speaker, it is essentially a summation of the findings and recommendations of the previous three reports. In touching on those recommendations and conclusions, I would like simply to highlight our findings as set out in this fourth report of the committee.

I know all the members of the Legislature have read the report on one or two occasions, if not more, and are well versed in its content. Nevertheless, I think it is incumbent upon us to refer to specific portions of the report to refresh the memory of those who may have read the report a month or two ago.

The report is broken into two basic components. One deals with our ongoing work in the vetting of regulations. As you know and appreciate, Mr. Speaker, one of the main functions and purposes of the committee is to monitor at all times the regulatory process to ensure that we maintain a high standard of performance in that area. As reflected in this report, I am pleased to advise that up to the third quarter of this year the committee, with the able assistance of its legal counsel Mr. Lachlan MacTavish, QC, has completed the vetting of the 1979 regulations to that point. So from the beginning of our efforts in 1978 to the present time, this report indicates that we have now made ourselves current as far as vetting of regulations is concerned. I am sure that with an ongoing effort by the committee we will continue to keep on top of all new regulations coming forward, to satisfy ourselves that they are adhering to the guidelines on the formulation of regulations and that we will be able to continue to report so in our ongoing work.

I will keep the reference to statistics to a minimum, but I think it is interesting to note one or two of these statistics in this report. I refer to chapter two of the report dealing with the 1979 regulations on which I have been commenting.

It is interesting to point out that a total of 660 regulations have been filed in the first three quarters of this year. They are found in 131 different acts of this Legislature.

Of equal importance is to note that of the 131 statutes to which there are related regulations or secondary legislation, nine of those statutes represent over half of the regulations enacted in this current year. In other words, 329 regulations have been the subject matter of expansion of administrative procedure under only nine of those 131 acts.

The fact we do indeed maintain a high quality of performance in this area is reflected in the further statistical revelation in our report which points out that in the vetting of all 660 of these 1979 regulations the committee had found only 15 upon which it could make any constructive criticism whatsoever. So it is without question that our various ministries and the legal counsel within them charged with the responsibility of preparing regulations, are indeed performing at a high level. Of those 15 particular regulations we cited, eight of them had to do with regulations we felt had been made without clear authority. The other seven were related to the matter of regulations being made retroactive without authority.

The other major ingredient of the report and the one I think will stand the test of time once this report has been adopted is the setting out of a clear and precise set of guidelines. Those guidelines are set out in chapter four of the report. The manner in which they were arrived at is identified in chapter three. The committee has gone far afield considering guidelines established in other jurisdictions and only after a thorough investigation of those other areas did we find that perhaps the best and most succinct of guidelines had been developed right in our own back yard.

I refer specifically to the findings of the Honourable then Chief Justice McRuer, who was acting in his capacity as chairman of the royal commission inquiring into civil rights in 1968. At that time he dealt with the matter of subordinate legislation by the Legislature. It was a significant and important chapter in the substantial and substantive report of his royal commission.

In its first report of June 1978 and again in this summarizing report this evening, this committee recommends to this Legislature that we can do no better than endorse in toto the recommendations that had been set out by Chief Justice McRuer as the appropriate guidelines to follow in dealing with regulations. Those recommendations are set out precisely in chapter four. Following the basic set of guidelines, the members will find an additional 18 recommendations that again are a summary of the earlier recommendations set out in the earlier reports to which I have referred.

These recommendations speak for themselves. There may be specific ones to which other members will wish to address themselves this evening. I can only commend all of them to this Legislature and in so doing I would say we will be well served if the Legislature sees fit to accept the motion to adopt this report that is before us. It will then bring the regulatory process to a new plateau by the establishment of these guidelines and give the official stamp of approval of this Legislature to a set of guidelines we think will serve the Legislature and this committee well in their ongoing work and effort.

There are just two further points I would like to make at this time before yielding to other members so they may address themselves to this report. The further evidence that, by and large, the regulatory process in this province has maintained a high standard is found in the very fact there is virtually no recorded case law in this province that deals with regulation and having to interpret regulations that have in some way been defective or deficient. I can find only two recorded cases on the subject, which would indicate the process has worked well. We have so stated this in more than one of our reports. We have commended the people involved in this process and we are only trying to make a good system work even better.

Before concluding my remarks I would refer to those two cases as an example and point out that up until this year there was really only one case of significance that had been reported. That was the case of Rose versus the Queen in 1960, in the Ontario Reports, 1960, page 146. In that instance there was a matter that had to deal specifically with the regulatory process. It was a situation where the province of Ontario had purported to revest the title to an abandoned portion of the King's highway to a local municipality. They did it by way of order in council.

It turned out an individual sustained injury on that portion of the highway and saw cause to bring a lawsuit against the crown. The crown denied responsibility, saying they had enacted an order in council which vested the abandoned roadway in the local municipality. The court found the order in council was in effect a statutory conveyance and as such beyond the powers of regulation. It was clearly legislative in character and therefore a matter that should have been dealt with by legal conveyance, in adherence with statute law and not with the secondary administrative legislation we find in regulation.

Until this year I know of no other case of any significance that has dealt with regulations until the reported case this year regarding the town of Durham et al versus the Attorney General, reported in the 23 Ontario Reports, second edition, page 279. I'm sure this case will be of particular interest to my colleague who represents that area and who will speak in this debate this evening.

Very simply put, that case pointed out that the regulation used by the government to merge two registry offices was found to be intra vires and the power was vested in the Lieutenant Governor in Council through orders in council to order that a registry office be closed and merge with another registry office within the same jurisdiction.

The municipalities involved challenged the order and questioned the validity and power to do so by regulation. The very wording of the Registry Act and its regulations were so prepared that they were shown to clearly demonstrate that the authority was there through the regulatory process.

Ironically, after the crown had proved its case from a legal point of view, I believe the merger from an administrative point of view did not follow through and actually occur. Nevertheless, the case does point out the importance of ensuring that regulations and the regulatory process are carried out within the specific set of guidelines. In this way we know those responsible for these areas will not get themselves into difficulty.

The adoption of this report this evening by the Legislature of the province will give its recommendations, as I indicated earlier, an official stamp of approval and give the committee cause to continue in its ongoing efforts.

I might point out in closing that these efforts will be greatly assisted in the future, as they have been throughout 1978 and 1979, by the sage advice and guidance provided by our legal counsel, Mr. Lachlan MacTavish, who has been ably assisted throughout by our clerk, Mr. Smirle Forsyth.

As I pointed out, the vetting of the regulations in the first instance by Mr. MacTavish, has contributed greatly to the effective monitoring of the regulations by the committee as a whole. We feel that with the adoption of this report the committee has established a firm base from which to build and with the support and endorsement of these efforts by this Legislature this evening we will continue to carry out the monitoring process that will serve us all well in the future.

Mr. McKessock: I rise to speak on and support the motion for adoption of the standing statutory instruments committee's first and second report of June and November 1979.

I must say I'm glad to see you're here tonight, Mr. Speaker, because as I look around the Legislature I am sure you and I were the only ones listening.

Mr. Ruston: You tell them.

Mr. McKessock: When I look up, I'm sure the boy scouts in the gallery don't find this very interesting. But I feel the member for Oriole, as chairman of this committee, has done a good job in his remarks. I'm not going to add very much to them.

I might say this is a bit of a boring committee to be on, Mr. Speaker, because of the nature of the business it involves.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether I should rise on a point of privilege or not.

Mr. Speaker: You just did.

Mr. McKessock: The reason it is such is because as our capable legal counsel, Mr.

Lachlan MacTavish, would put it, we are watchdogs for the kind of regulations set up under the act. The government committee that sets up the regulations for different acts must do so in a way that the act directs. They cannot divert from the authority or intent of the act. If they do it is our job, with the help of our counsel, to bring it to the attention of the ministry involved and then to the House.

Although it is sometimes boring, I have learned a lot about government and legislation by sitting on this committee. It is our job to suggest any changes or improvements that could be made to improve the process of regulation. In this regard, we met with the federal statutory instruments committee in Ottawa last year to compare their process with ours. It is possible other Commonwealth procedures may be looked at in the future.

I think it is important the public be aware of the statutory instruments committee. If they find a regulation they feel doesn't reflect the intent of the act they could bring it before this committee and have it looked at and changed if the purpose of the legislation has been abused in the regulations. This could be done by the committee without the individuals having to take it to court and spend their own money to have it corrected. The member for Oriole mentioned the Durham registry office and as this was in my riding I know the great extent to which one has to go to take anything to court these days. If an individual finds something wrong with the regulations there is no reason why we can't bring it before the statutory instruments committee and have it corrected through the committee without costing them any money.

As I said before, this committee is a watchdog for those making regulations. Having someone watching, needless to say, makes those people making regulations more responsible. If mistakes are found by the regulations committee they would have to be corrected and would show up in our report and brought before the Legislature.

When we started into this committee some time ago it was of interest to me too because we also looked into some of those regulations under the Niagara Escarpment Act.

I feel it is important this first and second report of the statutory instruments committee be adopted.

[8:30]

Mr. M. N. Davison: In my remarks I will try to fall, in terms of time, some time between the previous speaker and the one before him.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the member for Oriole on the job he has done as chairman of the statutory instruments committee. Given the membership, at least from my party on that committee, he has done a remarkable job to get these reports before the assembly in time.

Mr. Speaker, I can't object to a single recommendation found in the report of the statutory instruments committee. I support them all wholeheartedly. On the other hand I should warn you, Mr. Speaker, in case you haven't been able to read the report completely, the world will not come to an end upon the passage of these reports. In many ways, the business of the government of Ontario will continue as it has continued since this province entered into Confederation.

One of the reasons for that has nothing to do with the chairmanship of the committee, the committee's counsel or the members of the three parties who make up that committee. Rather it has to do with the terms of reference of the committee.

I noticed at the beginning of his remarks the chairman of the committee pointed out the terms of reference the committee received, not only from the assembly—at each opportunity, the assembly had to structure or restructure this committee—but also from the Regulations Act. It might do well to put that one extract from the Regulations Act, RSO 1970, chapter 410 on the record again. That dealt with section 12(3), which I think is really the outstanding issue still for that committee and that committee's future.

“The standing committee on regulations shall examine the regulations with particular reference to the scope and method of the exercise of delegated legislative power, but without reference to the merits of the policy or objectives to be affected by the regulations or enabling statutes and shall deal with such other matters as are referred to it from time to time by the assembly.”

Therein lies the difficulty with making a standing committee on statutory instruments a committee with real influence and real import around this place, or in any other jurisdiction where we deal with delegated powers or government through regulations. The difficulty is twofold.

The first difficulty for the regulations committee or standing statutory instruments committee in this province is that they deal with regulations after the regulations come into effect. There is a counterpart, I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, within the government. As I recall it is a committee composed by parliamentary assistants who do a vetting, a review of proposed regulations before they become regulations. So, if there is a major problem with a regulation, the parliamentary assistants' committee hopefully gets it and tells somebody that it doesn't work; it isn't a good idea; they had better not go ahead with this particular regulation. Then no matter how many hundreds or thousands of regulations we pass in a given session or year, we should have very few with some very serious defect in them.

Of course, in spite of that process, the assembly's committee managed to find a few regulations that were defective. The one that comes to my mind particularly is from the first report, June 1979, which was the Environmental Assessment Act error in regulation. It is a serious defect. It is a technical defect. But there is a lot more wrong with that legislation than just that particular defect.

The difficulty is, by getting to look at the regulations after they are law, the people of the province are placed in a situation where the assembly's committee is looking at something that has already caused damage. It would be a much better system if the committee of the assembly were able to vet those before they became law.

The most serious and substantial problem lies in the words of the Regulations Act 12(3) “. . . but without reference to the merits of the policy or objectives to be effected by the regulations or enabling statutes . . .” That's the real difficulty that our standing statutory instruments committee has in becoming an effective tool. It would be much more useful as a forum or a mechanism for debate and decision if it could look at those aspects, whether or not it's a good idea in terms of public policy to make a change in a regulation.

Any member who's been in the assembly for a period of time knows we have government by regulation in this province just as much as we have government by legislation. Many decisions made behind closed doors in the cabinet room find their way through the regulations process and then become part of the body of law which in effect governs the lives of our citizens. Those are laws that may not have been debated in the assembly in the past 20 or 30 years, but the government can take advantage of that particular law by way of regulation to make a change that can have a serious effect within the province. The assembly has no way of talking about the merits of that policy or the objectives that are effected.

I think that's the most important question before the assembly—admittedly it comes through the back door—with this report. What is the appropriate way for this committee to be acting? If we're going to have a committee that can do nothing but look at them after the fact and can only check to make absolutely sure that they fit within the four corners of the act, then we're not spending our time usefully and we're not providing people in this province with the best possible type of committee. I suggest that the people of this province would be better served by a standing committee on statutory instruments that could examine those regulations before they became law, question the policy involved, consider the merits of that policy and the objectives to be effected.

Certainly in a minority situation that would lead to the odd regulation, if not many regulations, coming out much differently. If I can be partisan, it would lead to much better government in Ontario.

Mr. Cureatz: Mr. Speaker, I thank the members of the opposition for the tributes. It gives me great pleasure to say a few words in regards to our report on the standing statutory instruments committee.

Might I first compliment you, Mr. Speaker, in persevering with us. It's not exactly one of the livelier reports presented into the House. It's a little dry, but it certainly is worthwhile. I'd like also to congratulate the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk for coming into the House and listening to our few pearls.

Mr. Nixon: I wouldn't miss it for the world.

Mr. Mancini: What about the rest of us?

Mr. Cureatz: As he's well aware, the regulations in regard to legislation are quite often drafted and carried out by that infamous group, the lawyers of Ontario. We all know how appreciative he is of the men of the bar.

More specifically, I want to congratulate those other members of my committee, the member for Grey (Mr. McKessock), the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins). From time to time it's always pleasant to roll in on a Thursday morning, when I'm sure we have more interesting things to do involving constituents' work, to find them there, faithfully plugging away. I might also add that the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. Davison) had had the opportunity of coming in and representing his party. As a matter of fact, I think he was the one who mentioned to me once that he heard a rumour the member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey) was going to show up, but I don't remember him showing up. However, we are a close-knit family and we have had some interesting little family discussions in regard to statutory instruments.

Finally, as the member for Hamilton Centre brought out, we have to congratulate our chairman who has been persevering with this committee for some time and has, as always, brought forward a report of some substance, working in conjunction with our solicitor, Mr. MacTavish. This particular report again pays tribute to the chairman.

The frustration I have in making some comments on this particular report is that one could go two ways in exploring it. One could look either at the specific recommendations that are presented or at the overall concept of statutory instruments and what we are trying to accomplish in the committee. Personally, I felt it would be futile and a little dry, not to mention a little boring for the clerk, to listen to the detail-by-detail investigation of each point. So I decided to reflect them in my concerns and overall view in regard to our committee.

Let me refer first to a statement made by Mr. Justice McRuer in his inquiry into civil rights. He stated that in an ideal political system all rights and liabilities of the individual in relation to others and to government would be established by rules of law applied by the ordinary course of law. New rules would be made by the Legislature, which is representative of all the people, with constitutional and political safeguards for the exercise of its power. There would be no arbitrary or discretionary powers vested in bodies or persons other than the Legislature or those directly responsible to it.

It is obvious that the practical demands of modern government could not be met under such a statement. A legislature cannot state in complete detail all the rules to apply under the statutes that are passed by this House. Notwithstanding my personal views of the amount of regulation I would suggest should not come through the House, we have looked over in the last year many regulations. As our chairman has indicated, some 600 regulations have already been received. Since 1974, there have been some 6,000 regulations made. That has involved a large amount of behind-the-scenes work with respect to the large amount of law that supports the legislation that comes from this House.

My concern in regard to the accumulation of all these regulations is that we are tending continually to codify our law. To my way of thinking this codification is a detriment to the people of Ontario. What happens when people are applying in regard to a specific circumstance, where they are affected by a regulation, is they encounter the administrator of the regulation. He says "I am sorry, you do not fall within this ambit of the regulation". The regulation is drafted following the passing of the statute.

This strict codification does not allow for flexibility. We have to think in terms of less regulation and allow a degree of latitude by the administrator so that people in Ontario can have the assurance that administration will be followed out and that they will fall within the ambit of the regulation.

I found from sitting on the committee—and I think other committee members agree—that more than often we have instances created where people in Ontario who are represented by their solicitors are worried that they don't fall within a regulation. As soon as legislation is passed, everyone starts to clamour at the doors to see whether they fall within or without that specific regulation. Here we are met head on with a dual collision. Do we try to keep down the number of regulations that are coming forward so the administrator can have some flexibility, or are we going to continue on a decodification of regulations so people are always clamouring if they fall within those bounds? [8:45]

Through the last almost two years of my membership on the committee it seems to me the way we have to be approaching some of these difficulties is to leave some discretion to the administrator of those particular regulations, so that we allow some flexibility and some generality into the regulations to ensure that people can be wrapped within—or for that matter possibly without—the regulation, depending on the effect the regulations have on the people of Ontario.

The committee has tried to tackle some of these general areas and I might say we have not been overly political in our investigations. We haven't been awfully controversial. We haven't had the news media in attendance. We haven't had staff members from that wonderful morning paper the Globe and Sale—I say "Sale," S-a-l-e, because we are not sure what is going to be happening to them in the next few months—inquiring about the kinds of work we have been doing. We have not had them coming in every Thursday morning at 10 o'clock wading through the occasional drudgery but much-needed and much-requested work of our committee.

I think it is safe to say that all of us on the committee have been persevering because this is an important area. It affects so many people in the province and yet people do not realize the ambits and the degree to which they are affected by regulations.

The final general conclusion I want to bring to the House is that, as the chairman has already stated, we are seeking support from the Legislature. I am not confident that every member in the House has had the opportunity of sitting in on our committees but I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the work we have done has been diligent; we have been sincere and we are asking for the members' support because we need that kind of support to keep plugging along with this work to show to those people carrying out the regulations it is an important area, it is a concern of the people of Ontario, and that they have to be on their toes in carrying out the regulations, or for that matter drafting the regulations, because the final superior body—our committee, the statutory instruments committee—continually reviews those regulations.

I want to state finally, Mr. Speaker, that if the House does adopt the report we trust it will give some consideration to a greater emphasis, possibly to a greater degree of power, for our committee to further look into and examine regulations that are passed and possibly have a bit more power to direct those people who are drafting the regulations, if indeed they have gone beyond the ambit of the statute. I trust the House will take into consideration my few humble words and those few humble words already given by the honourable members opposite who are sitting on the committee and adopt this report.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short input in this debate—perhaps somewhat from a feeling of guilt that I have not made a great deal of input into the committee.

I want to repeat what some of the others have said. First of all, the committee's report is perhaps not the most exciting thing that has hit this Legislature and on an evening which is perhaps going to be one of the most exciting and dramatic evenings of the year, I doubt if it will make the front page of the Globe and Mail or the Toronto Star tomorrow afternoon.

I also want to concur with the other members of the committee who have said a word of praise for the chairman of this committee. He has been thorough and in fact the whole committee has done a rather thorough job of vetting the regulations. I can't think of anyone who would do a more detailed job as chairman than the member for Oriole who did do that kind of a detailed, rather boring job. I want to commend him for what has been done.

I am sure everyone on that committee, and those who may not have attended very frequently, questions whether that is the best way of dealing with regulations; the best way a member can spend his time as a legislator or as a person working on behalf of his constituents in other fields. I have to say I have rather mixed feelings about this. One could have an officer who reported directly to the Legislature to examine all of these and pick out the 15 or so out of the 1,000 that perhaps didn't totally conform with the acts, or which were made retroactive or which in some other way should have some corrections made to them, and then let the Legislature deal with them—or he could report directly to a committee.

Certainly there is a great deal of time spent on this work by the chairman and other members of that committee. We must question, sometimes, whether that is the best method. I must say now that the setting up of the guidelines, their adoption here this evening and bringing the vetting of the regulations up to date are all important, but from here on some consideration should be given by this Legislature and by the committee to the amount of time involved.

I am not suggesting the work hasn't been done efficiently up to now. It is true to say, however, the committee doesn't have the time to look at the 1,000 or so regulations; they are increasing year by year. They haven't time to look at the statutes in detail and at the regulations in detail; they have to delegate that to a very able counsel. If we are going to delegate to that extent, perhaps we should delegate a bit further and just ask counsel to make a report on the issue.

As I say, I have mixed feelings about this. Not only are there more regulations but the government is doing more things. The statutes seem to be getting more vague, the bones are fleshed out by the regulations and the regulations are becoming more meaningful. We haven't yet debated the Aggregates Act, but we will do so this next week. If anybody examines that act he will realize how meaningless it is until the regulations are attached to it. So I feel if the government is going to move more and more to governing by regulation instead of by legislation, then the importance of that committee will increase.

I am therefore of two minds on this. For the time being at least the committee should carry on with the work they have brought up to date. It is true that committee—and I am not taking any of the credit upon myself—has done a better job than the committee had done for years and years before their time. The members who have worked so hard on it are to be very much commended for what they have done.

I have had an opportunity to read the report and the guidelines and just say I fully support every recommendation established therein.

Mr. Nixon: Did you read the report, Mel?

Mr. Swart: Yes, I read the report. I don't know why the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk would question that unless he perhaps feels a bit self-conscious about it himself.

The members of that committee who have worked so hard really do deserve some congratulation here. There aren't a great many votes for working on that committee; they do it for the good of the detailed legislation in this province. But I still have to question the time it requires to do the kind of job that committee has done. I think some further thought has to be given to the procedures connected with it.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to discuss one particular recommendation of the committee in its first report, which was tabled in June 1979. In that report, the committee came up with a rather startling discovery. It looked at the use of the exemption power by the Ministry of the Environment under section 30 of the Environmental Assessment Act and came to the conclusion that exemption power is perhaps being used in an illegal manner.

For the past three years the ministry has been using section 30 to exempt a great many government undertakings from the Environmental Assessment Act. These include such things as major highway construction, provincial parks development, industrial parks, large Ontario Hydro projects and a host of other provincial government undertakings.

One of the most significant exemptions has been the exemption of the proposed Darlington nuclear generating station. It was exempted on the grounds that its time schedule was such that there was no time for an environmental assessment; it was too far advanced. The latest revision in Hydro's estimates of energy needs has changed that timetable and there would now be time for an environmental assessment. The use of the section 30 exemption for the Darlington station should be questioned. If, as the statutory instruments committee suggests, it is illegal, the ministry really should order Hydro to undertake an environmental assessment of the Darlington station immediately.

There have been over 70 exemptions under this section by the Ministry of the Environment, some of them covering whole groups of projects. The clause in the act simply states that the minister can exempt any undertaking if he "is of the opinion that it is in the public interest," but he must weigh his view "against the injury, damage or interference that might be caused to any person or property by the application of the act . . ." The statutory instruments committee looked at that power and said this: "The committee is of the opinion that the validity of the exemption orders made by the Minister of the Environment under section 30 of the Environmental Assessment Act, 1975, is, to say the least, questionable. We recommend that steps be taken legislatively to put their validity beyond doubt." That is on page 21 of the report.

I asked the minister, in his estimates I think it was, or in the House, whether he intended to take that advice and perhaps amend the legislation to put that exemption power beyond doubt. My recollection is that he took the attitude that the courts should decide and that he intended to carry on using that section until such time as it was challenged.

The basis upon which the committee challenged it is interesting. The committee said the exemptions were of a legislative nature and therefore came under the Regulations Act. Consequently, they must be registered with the registrar of regulations and published in the Ontario Gazette. The ministry contended before the committee that they were not of a legislative nature and therefore did not have to be registered with the registrar of regulations, but the ministry did state that it was in effect following the procedure of gazetting the exemptions and that they were kept in a place in the ministry to which the public had access. In effect, they are complying with the same rules that would apply to a registered regulation but they are not complying with the letter of the law for a regulation that is considered of a legislative nature.

The committee took a rather serious view of this deviation from the normal treatment of regulations. That is why it questions the validity of the exemption orders.

It stated that the deviation amounted to a serious undermining of the Regulations Act, "to a point where its purpose would be completely frustrated." Therefore, it recommended that steps be taken to put the matter beyond question, but it made no suggestion as to the steps. Presumably it left that up to the ministries.

This is why I rise to speak on this matter. I would like to ask the minister to take some steps to put those exemption orders beyond question. I would like it to be clear whether an environmental assessment is now required on Darlington, if the exemption order is invalid.

I would like to suggest that the use of the exemption power has been excessive and that it has rendered the Environmental Assessment Act virtually a piece of window dressing, or if you want me to be stronger in my statement, Mr. Speaker, a nullity.

We have had practically no assessments under the Environmental Assessment Act since it was passed in 1975. The whole of the private sector is exempt except by designation and not more than half a dozen projects have ever been designated. The municipal sector has not had the act applied to them because they are still considering, as they have been over the past four years, how it should be applied to the municipal sector. A great many projects in the government sector, as I have mentioned, ranging from hydro projects to highway projects to parks projects are exempt. When the act came in, it was touted as requiring environmental assessment of all new undertakings or additions to existing undertakings to see that they were environmentally sound. We have had very few real environmental assessments under that act in the four years since it was proclaimed.

If we want to make that act operative it would be very valuable to make sure that section 30 exemptions are valid and that section 30 is used only for situations where there are good reasons for not having an environmental assessment, such as the project is so far advanced that there could not be an assessment within the time required for its completion without causing great public hardship.

I think the committee did a very important job in drawing attention to that possible illegality. It did note that there is another section in the Environmental Assessment Act which also gives some power to exempt. They thought that these two sections should be clarified as to which one takes primacy and which one is the one under which exemptions should be given. They felt the other one was probably valid but had not been used to any great extent. That is section 41(f).

The committee pointed out: "The present two alternative methods of making exemptions from the act, i.e., under sections 30 and 41(f), are redundant and ill advised. We recommend that the ministry study the situation in the light of our comments and decide upon one or the other and, in any event, making it perfectly clear whether or not the Regulations Act is to apply." That quote is from page 22 of the report.

Now you can't get a much stronger statement from the committee that it has found something very ill advised in the present setup under the Environmental Assessment Act. I think it is up to the minister to see that situation is clarified.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I only want to speak very briefly on the report of this committee. Interestingly enough, the existence of this committee for practical purposes came about through the concern and consideration over a long period of the then member for Woodbine, Kenneth Bryden, who sat here and who was very much concerned in this whole topic. In the final event I don't think the form of the committee and its limitations quite accorded with what he intended, but it was at least a start.

I want to refer particularly to the problems put forward in guideline (a) of paragraph 1 on page 11 of the second report, chapter IV: "The regulations should not contain provisions initiating new policy, but should be confined to details to give effect to the policy established by the statute."

Perhaps the members of the House will recall that I spoke at the time of the second reading of the bill to amend the Securities Act to draw attention to the kind of problem this assembly was faced with in a very technical bill to which the commission was devoting the total amount of its time and the difficulty which an assembly like this had in dealing with that kind of expertise. I pointed out that the Securities Act, having gone through four or five drafts as a bill, was finally passed by this House as a complete revision of the Securities Act and there wasn't a single amendment initiated by any member of the House. All of it was done by consultation between the industry and the government.

The net effect of the practice which has developed is that many policies of the Ontario Securities Commission find their way from practices of the commission into regulations and then into statutes, so that, in fact, it is an inversion and a reverse procedure to what is recommended by the guidelines. The policy matters should be in the statute, should have their origin in the statute, should come through the statute by debate in this assembly and not because they have been formulated first of all as regulations and then find their way into the statute.

The second point I want to make is that the Ontario Securities Commission has done one very good thing—it has done a number of very good things but in this particular field it has done one very good thing. It held public hearings with respect to the draft regulations under the Securities Act to give people the opportunity to see the regulations before they were enacted into law.

I would earnestly hope that this committee of this assembly would be the body which in the future, not only for proposed regulations of importance under the Securities Act but for proposed regulations of importance under any act, would be the body to which those regulations would come in draft form. It would be that committee which would have the responsibility for holding public hearings about those regulations to inform the public and to inform themselves, so that at the time they were about to be published in the Ontario Gazette and filed with the registrar of regulations a committee of this assembly would be knowledgeable about them, rather than to have this practice where the filing takes place with the registrar, the publication is in the Ontario Gazette and the first that any of the members of the assembly or anybody accountable to this assembly sees of them is when they are published.

I think it should become standard practice. If, for example, the Minister of the Environment were to publish a new set of regulations about a specific area in his area of responsibility, they should be done in draft form and referred to this committee with the obligation to hold the hearings before they become law by filing with the registrar of regulations. It would be immensely comforting to the members of the assembly to know that delegated legislation had been looked at by a committee of the assembly before it became part of the administrative law of the province.

There are many examples which would be equally important, for example, the regulations that have been published under what has been known as Bill 70, the occupational health bill. It would have been very important that they be seen to be reviewed by a committee of this assembly and public hearings and submissions received by a committee of this assembly before they were finalized, filed with the registrar, published in the Ontario Gazette and became law.

It's a matter that I'm sure is not going to be done overnight. I hope to speak on it again. I do hope that the members of the committee, when they meet again to consider these matters, would take those remarks under advisement and perhaps consider whether there is, after exploration and consideration of them, any real merit in proceeding in that way. If the committee were meeting at some time and wished to have any elaboration on those matters I would be glad, of course, to accept an invitation to appear to discuss it with them in some further depth.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Is there any other member wishing to speak to this motion?

Report adopted.

BUDGET DEBATE

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to move into chapter 18 of my budgetary address, or so it seems, based on the rather broken manner in which I've had to bring my thoughts to the Legislature. I hope this evening I can continue to provide some continuity by quickly touching on the highlights of the things I've mentioned, while addressing myself to the two last issues that have given me some concern and which I'd like to speak on for a few moments this evening.

I just want to remind the members of the Legislature that when I commenced speaking to the budget I clearly pointed out that the budget had been designed to reaffirm the co-operative stance of this government with regard to its dealings in the private sector. I think I clearly demonstrated ways and means by which the budget was designed, along with the activities of this government, to help rather than to hinder the private sector and that we should continue to work in a co-operative manner rather than in an adversarial stance in dealing with the business concerns throughout our province.

I've never felt that an approach of confrontation and mistrust really brought about any productive results. To operate in that type of atmosphere is not conducive to encouraging the private sector to improve upon itself and, in so doing, to improve upon the wellbeing of the economy of this province and the standards of living which flow therefrom and which the citizens of our province at large enjoy.

I think this government can take pride in the fact it has enacted positive legislation and developed a positive legislative climate, as reflected in the budgetary papers, along with a general government attitude that is favourably disposed toward the industrial sector. There is a need to create this confidence.

I pointed out that while the function and role of the opposition parties is to be critical, sometimes they can take those criticisms to excess.

Instead of endeavouring to make points against the government of the day, they are doing irreparable harm to our province as a whole as a result of the way these criticisms are viewed by people beyond our borders. Those industries and business concerns that feel there may be justification in wanting to invest or come into the province to set up business and shops can sometimes be discouraged just by the general attitudes that may be expressed by the legislators of the jurisdiction.

We always have to be mindful of how we criticize. There are differences between positive and negative criticism. While it makes good press at home to be critical and show that the opposition is fulfilling its role in that regard, sometimes it has been carried to excess and it hasn't helped anyone, particularly the workers of this province, who can only succeed if there is full employment and opportunity within the province.

Those were issues I pointed out at the beginning of my budgetary remarks. Moving from there, I addressed myself to another problem that gave me considerable concern at that time, which was a need I felt existed to destroy the myth that had been conjured up by the opposition parties in trying to portray Ontario Hydro as a secretive, cringing crown agency that was without desire or intent to be accountable to the people of this province. On more than one occasion, opposition members have seen fit to use Ontario Hydro as a whipping boy in this type of setting. I think I clearly set the record straight when I pointed out that, factually speaking, Ontario Hydro is anything but those things which the opposition occasionally has endeavoured to characterize it as being.

I pointed out, in particular, that Ontario Hydro is a crown agency that probably has more need to be accountable to the people of Ontario through different boards and agencies and commissions than any other crown agency heretofore. I pointed out that Ontario Hydro in the past five-year period has had the responsibility of reporting to four different boards, three different committees of this Legislature and four royal commissions.

The number of hearing days held involving those different groups over that five-year period totals 771 days; in other words, over two years of hearings. Those hearings have involved hearing from no fewer than 1,600 witnesses, of which over 440 have been Ontario Hydro witnesses, not to speak of the support staff it has had to make available at all times to assist those witnesses in making their representations to those various boards and commissions.

The number of transcript volumes that have been published is in excess of 980. Last but not least, I pointed out the immense cost, not only in time but in money. I pointed out that to the end of June of this year over $11.5 million had been spent in these various hearings by Ontario Hydro. I think, Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly concluded at that time that, contrary to the way in which Ontario Hydro had been portrayed by the opposition parties, never before has any crown agency testified so frequently, so continuously, so readily, so openly, so fully, so willingly and so capably.

I think that Hydro has bared its soul in accounting to the people of Ontario and in so doing I think it has served an important purpose not the least of which is to ensure to the people of Ontario, through its accounting, that indeed there is and will continue to be a security of supply of energy to this province that can be provided in an economical and efficient manner at cost.

Mr. Speaker, at the time of my concluding remarks on that particular concern, my time expired and I was obliged to return to the debate. I am pleased to take up again this evening where I had left off by coming to two further matters of concern to me.

The first concern, Mr. Speaker, relates in a way to remarks that I had made at the beginning of my address on May 11, so I want to indicate there is this continuity flowing through these remarks, even though they have been widely spaced through circumstances beyond my control.

I had commented, as I said a few moments ago, on the negative factors working against industry in this province and working against our economy. Some of those negative factors have been legislative in nature. There have been international economic conditions. There has been the bureaucratic red tape that the private sector experiences at all levels of government. There have been the geographically-advantaged provinces—such as Alberta and Saskatchewan, with their vast raw resources—that have made them exceptions to the economic programs we have been experiencing, in Canada as a whole and in the world beyond. Those provinces, because of their rich resources, have attracted a large pool of manpower. So these have all been negative factors, in a way, working against full-employment opportunity in this province.

I wanted, however, to touch in particular on one specific negative impact of bureaucracy that has affected one of our larger and more important industries. That, Mr. Speaker, is the housing industry.

We all know that the housing industry cannot exist without one essential ingredient, namely land. The history of the industry since the end of the Second World War has been marked by two important considerations. First, the phenomenal growth in every town and city of residential, industrial and commercial development. In conjunction with that phenomenal growth we have seen growth in government of the checks and balances introduced with the enactment of planning legislation to regulate and appropriately control land development, such as has impacted directly on the housing industry.

This concern and involvement in the public sector has been reflected in the enactment at the provincial level of our Planning Act in 1946, which has proved over the years to be one of the cornerstones of provincial legislation that has served the people of this province well in an orderly growth and development within the land development field.

The Planning Act has been a blueprint of planning practice and procedure that is still in place and intact 32 years later. It is one that has been studied by other jurisdictions and has even been copied because of its proven worth, both in principle and in practice. Notwithstanding the fact there have been revisions and expansions of the original act since its enactment in 1946, I think one must realize there had been no comprehensive reappraisal of the Planning Act until 1967. I think it is important that no matter how good our legislation may be, and no matter how well it has stood the test of time, one must always be prepared to review, reconsider and reassess those laws to see whether they are still relevant in a later day and age, under given changed circumstances.

In 1967 members will recall the Ontario Law Reform Commission published the first of several reports that formed the first reasonably detailed study of municipal planning in Ontario since the original 1946 Planning Act. That review process has evolved continuously since that time.

Subsequent studies by the law reform commission have indicated there is room for change and improvement in the system, bearing in mind that we have changing community and social values, including new housing concepts and land-use needs, coupled with greater public involvement and refined and more complex municipal planning procedures. All of these have begged for a comprehensive review in light of this changing environment.

Mr. Kerrio: John, are you going to run out the clock?

Mr. Williams: I think that's a possibility.

Mr. Kerrio: I thought you should just tell us in fairness. For this festive season, you shouldn't lead us on.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Order.

Mr. Williams: If you want to invite your friends in, please do so.

Mr. Kerrio: Thanks, John.

Mr. Roy: Not too fast, John; I'm taking notes.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The drama in Ottawa tonight is only secondary to the tension in this chamber.

Mr. Williams: Members may recall that the next significant development since the Ontario Law Reform Commission reported in 1967 was the establishment of the Planning Act review committee in 1975. That committee was asked to review the nature of municipal planning in Ontario to do three things: first, to determine what it should be directed towards; second, to define the rules of the different levels of government in the planning process; and, third, to look at the legislative framework, administrative procedures and regulatory mechanisms that are at the centre of the present system.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Planning Act review committee report was published in June 1977 and received wide distribution among many interested parties and municipalities. As a result of that wide distribution and great public response, along with our own intergovernmental review of that committee's report, we published a white paper on the Planning Act which came out in the spring of this year. There is no question the white paper proposes sweeping changes, although they are basically in accord with the recommendations contained in the Planning Act review committee report.

I think we realize the white paper proposes the provincial role be dramatically revised, giving the municipalities much greater powers. The paper stresses the importance of official plans being continued. That whole concept is deemed an integral and important role within the success of the planning procedure.

The report recommends subdivision land procedures be improved and public involvement in official plan, zoning and subdivision proceedings have their procedures standardized. At the same time, the report recommends the role of the Ontario Municipal Board be somewhat contained so the greater powers can remain with and now he vested in the municipalities and dealt with at the municipal level.

There are two concerns that arise out of this process and where we're at today. One of the concerns I have is the recommendation contained in the report that planning boards, as such, be eliminated. It is suggested that in this manner the planning process could be expedited and would eliminate one step in the planning process.

Many of us who have had involvement in municipal government as elected representatives are well aware of the important role the independent, citizen-appointed planning boards have played in the planning process since the inception of the 1946 Planning Act. I have had the privilege, as I am sure a number of us have, of serving on local municipal councils and sitting on local planning boards as one of the elected representatives.

I have found through my experience, and I'm sure other members will agree, there is a great deal of merit in having an independent planning board deal initially with planning proposals that come before it to consider all facets of the applications, whether it be a subdivision application or a rezoning of existing land uses. I've always found that local planning boards—certainly those I have been involved with—acted fairly and objectively in trying to deal with matters on a strictly planning basis. I felt this provided an appropriate buffer between the elected representatives and the people so that the initial problems and considerations could evolve and crystallize in an environment that was less political and more directed to the true planning process.

While the recommendations would eliminate that particular step in the proceedings, I'm not sure in the long run it will be proven to expedite the process, but rather it may remove an important element we will regret losing from the planning process. I do have grave reservations about that particular recommendation endorsed in the white paper and proposed by the Planning Act review committee.

The other concern is the one I don't see clearly addressed in the Planning Act review committee report or in the white paper. I refer to the one of coming to grips with the social cost of delay in bringing housing programs and projects on stream.

The bureaucracy and red tape involved when developers of residential projects bring them before the municipalities, and on to the provincial level, have discouraged developers in bringing the necessary housing into place. It has been shown that the discouragement has been so great that some of our more substantial business concerns in this industry have found it to their advantage to bypass this impediment in their development programs and have gone to other jurisdictions where they have found they could undertake the same works in half the time.

Quite often people say: "Why do we care? If it's not in the social interest, let the proposer or the applicant bear the cost of it." The unfortunate thing that's said all too seldom is that it's the consumer that ultimately winds up bearing the cost, because there is no question the builder and the developer do not absorb that cost beyond a certain point. Where there are diminishing returns and no reasonable profit to be made, they simply pass that add-on cost to the consumer.

This government, on more than one occasion, has chided municipal governments for taking too long in the processing of land development proposals. I must say we do not come out with clean hands at the provincial level either, because there is no question that, once it's passed through the municipal offices and departments, delays have been experienced at the provincial level too. So we're not totally blameless in that situation.

The important point is that government at all levels has got to recognize the harm it is doing in not addressing itself seriously to this problem. We cannot afford to have our responsible industries in the housing market going to other jurisdictions and leaving us devoid of the necessary resources and skills to provide the necessary housing to meet the social needs of the people in our communities.

To illustrate the point, I will simply refer to one case. I will not identify it specifically but I can assure honourable members it is a specific instance of a land development project within Metropolitan Toronto. In the spring of 1975 a developer started to bring forward a residential proposal, hoping that he would be able to bring the project to fruition within a 12- to 18-month period. There was unofficial encouragement from the local municipality.

It turned out it was a full year before the particular builder even got his project before the local planning board because, after he had made his initial expenditures, investigations and cost projections, the municipality decided that the applicant probably should not proceed until the adjoining land owners were also ready to put their property into the housing pool and let not only the applicant's lands, but also adjoining land owners' lands, be developed concurrently.

Notwithstanding the fact that the adjoining land owners had no intention or desire to develop their lands, nevertheless the municipality stood firm for more than a year before it finally agreed to let the applicants proceed on the merits of their own particular property holdings and the proposal they wished to apply to their property holdings.

In 1976, they were finally able to go through the normal municipal process of going before the planning board, having public hearings, awaiting the return of reports from the various municipal departments to the planning department so they could submit their reports to the planning board and hold a public hearing.

One of the strengths of new Planning Act review committee, as endorsed by the white paper, is that the public involvement process and procedure will be strengthened by standardization through regulation—regulations we talked about earlier this evening in a different context. That is encouraging, and any of my remarks must not be taken to suggest that I would discourage public involvement and participation. It is an extremely important ingredient in the whole planning process.

However, governments at all levels must have some criteria, some ground rules by which they can set some reasonable time limits so all parties know they have full opportunity to have their say, and yet not to the point where time becomes so heavy that it makes it uneconomical to consider proceeding further or even to embark upon a reasonable project.

In the particular case I referred to, I found they ran into great difficulties after they had them before the planning board with their various hearings. A number of conditions were imposed on the developer that had not even been contemplated at the time of their initial discussions with the municipal planners involved. It was two years later, after further deliberations and meetings and discussions, that the matter came before the local council. Then, once having received approval, because it was within the Metropolitan Toronto area, the whole proposal had to go from the local council to the Metro planning board for its input and consideration.

Three years later, in 1979, to my knowledge, a brick has yet to be put in the ground or a foundation constructed on this project, the physical housing project has yet to come off the drawing board, and the frustrations experienced by this particular applicant are only illustrative of the problems confronting the housing industry in the private sector.

Some recognition of this problem has to be spelled out more clearly and addressed specifically in any major revision of the planning laws we bring forward in the ensuing months, after the white paper has been fully considered and the final legislation prepared for debate by this Legislature. I am sure that is a consideration that will be addressed carefully in the coming months and will be an integral part of the ongoing work of the ministry involved and the members of this Legislature. I can't stress too strongly, however, that we must give more serious consideration to that aspect of our planning process than we have in the past.

As I've said, I can find nothing in the documentation published to date on this matter indicating that particular problem has been addressed as clearly as many of the other issues, as spelled out in the white paper. The expeditious dealing with these matters at all levels of government has to be an important consideration if the system is to be truly improved and capitalized upon.

I would like to conclude my discussions on the budget by moving to a second area of concern of mine. It's one of a more general nature, yet probably fundamentally more important, since it pertains to the role of government and the leadership it must provide, than any other single issue. This government can clearly take credit for having shown leadership in a number of significant ways over the years that it's had the opportunity to serve as the government of this province.

First, through the enactment of progressive legislation that meets the needs of the people throughout the width and breadth of this province, the government has shown leadership in the development of policy that provides the people with both the hard and soft services to which they are entitled and for which they have a need. We've certainly shown leadership in the maintenance and preservation of a fiscal policy that is both responsible and responsive in providing the services to which I have just referred.

However, within this framework there is also a much broader obligation on government to show leadership by way of a demonstrated support for the rights of the individual, coupled with clear endorsement of the basic traditions and values that have been the strength of our western civilization and culture.

It's not so much a matter of program or of identifiable projects, but rather a matter of behaviour or attitude, a matter of response to societal activity.

Mr. Conway: Williams for family unity!

Mr. Williams: I'm particularly addressing myself to this concern tonight, because I know the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) is here and he encouraged me to speak on matters that are close to his heart. I will be alluding to the concept of the family unit, because I don't want him to go away feeling cheated this evening.

Mr. Conway: You're the poor man's pope.

Mr. Williams: If the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) can refer to the Premier as the Oral Roberts of the Legislature, I guess I'll take my friend's comment as a compliment as well.

Governments traditionally have passed laws and set policies supposedly to reflect public attitude and aspirations, but governments must not be hesitant to defend the status quo in the area of individual rights and in preserving the basic moral values and traditions of our society.

Mind you, talking about the fundamental rights of the individual means different things to different people. For instance, self-indulgence in pursuit of material wellbeing without assuming responsibility for or accountability to any other person or persons is very much in vogue in our society today.

Let me illustrate the point by referring to two educational commencement ceremonies, apart in time and place, yet each in its own way and from a different perspective coming to grips with the fundamental freedoms of the individual. The only similarity between the two, however—and I am going to refer to it—is that each was charged with a certain sense of despondency—but for very different reasons.

First, I refer to a high-school commencement ceremony I was at not too long ago at which the valedictorian was making his presentation to the students. He chose to cite the case where three students in the school had been denied participation in school activities because they had committed a physical assault on one of the teachers.

The valedictorian came to the conclusion that the establishment was wrong, that the school board should not have invoked that type of restraint on the students, because he had investigated the incident and was satisfied that the students were only having a bit of fun and that the assault on the teacher didn't justify that type of reprimand and restriction of their activities.

He felt a distorted sense of justice had been applied, the students should have had more freedom of opportunity and they shouldn't have been imposed upon.

He went on to discuss something that was quite timely, because it was at the time of the Lord's Prayer incident in the Toronto School Board setting. He indicated support for objecting to the use of the Lord's Prayer in the schools, because he felt he might not want to recognize it; therefore, others shouldn't have it imposed on them either.

He pointed out too that he felt his own personal individual rights were being imposed upon because we have a censorship board in Ontario with regard to the movie industry.

Mr. Conway: Is it true that the government caucus gets to look at the year-end tapes?

Mr. Williams: Not to my knowledge. The member will have to ask the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea).

He pointed out how these were some of the individual freedoms that he felt were being imposed upon improperly by this society, and his only consolation was that he had his friends there at the school who somehow would help him fight that mean old world out there.

In concluding his remarks that evening, he felt that the only solution to the problem was to go out to the party they were holding after the commencement ceremony and get drunk.

This type of speech didn't make me angry. But it did make me rather sad, because it was full of despondency and despair. It was devoid of high hopes or aspirations for the future which you normally would anticipate would be contained in a valedictorian's speech. It seemed to condemn the present social conditions and values by which we live, and yet it offered no alternative in return.

The other commencement ceremony was starkly different. It was one that involved a speech given by the noted writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn. This was given in a commencement ceremony at Harvard University in 1978. I want to cite three paragraphs from that speech, because it gives a marked contrast of attitudes here.

He pointed out first that "destructive and irresponsible freedom has been granted boundless space. Society appears to have little defence against the abyss of human decadence such as misuse of liberty for moral violence against young people, motion pictures full of pornography, crime and horror. It is considered to be a part of freedom and theoretically counterbalanced by the young people's right not to look or not to accept.

"However, he went on to point out that such a tilt of freedom has come about gradually but it was evidently borne primarily out of a humanistic and benevolent concept wherein the world purportedly belongs to mankind and all the defects of life are caused by wrong social systems which must be corrected."

He went on to make one further statement that ties in with that, when he stated: "It is feasible and easy everywhere to undermine administrative power and, in fact, it has been drastically weakened in all western countries. The defence of individual rights has reached such extremes as to make society as a whole defenceless against certain individuals. It is time in the west to defend not so much human rights as human obligations."

Mr. Roy: If the member doesn't stop here soon, I won't send him a Christmas card.

Mr. Williams: I just saw my friend sign it; so I am not worried. In fact, if he would have a page send it over I would be most appreciative.

Mr. Speaker, humanism and pluralism are concepts which today appear to dominate our social thinking and attitudes and as such would tend to give a different meaning and emphasis to the two basic considerations: (1) rights of the individual and (2) retention of our basic traditions and moral values.

I have just illustrated a point with regard to the rights of the individual, and I would like now to turn to the matter of retention of our basic traditions and moral values.

There is a lot of talk about our changing values system and the supposed inevitability of it all. The basic traditions and moral values that are the real cornerstones of our society in the free world are founded largely on religious beliefs. In western society those beliefs are entrenched in the Judaeo-Christian religions. This is not to deny the powerful influence that other major world religions play in other parts of the world; Islam, Hinduism and Buddhism are examples. In some countries of the world, any one of these religions may be not only the official religion of that country, but also the only religion practised and recognized in that country.

In North and South America the Judaeo-Christian religions flourish, but not exclusively. Nevertheless, they are the predominant official religions in this part of the world. In countries of the Middle East and Far East, their religions are totally integrated into their whole social fabric without question or challenge. In contrast, in this part of the world, when we talk about basic traditions and moral values, particularly in the political arena, we seem to do so reluctantly and to associate those principles with basic religious beliefs seems to be approached with a sense of fear or trepidation. Some people do so almost apologetically for fear of being ridiculed or considered old-fashioned or even of being accused of proselytizing.

Governments must not be caught in the trap of trying to reflect in legislation and in policy contemporary thinking and attitude if it is but transitory, illusory or without basic value or substance. Governments at all levels must show leadership in speaking out in a constructive and aggressive way in support of our conventional values and traditions, whether or not they are founded on religious beliefs, whenever they are challenged or rebuked in the political arena.

These are not the times for showing complacency. On the other hand, legislators should not rush headlong into legislation and policy decisions which might be deemed politically expedient simply because such action might appease a militant minority group intent on dismantling some of the traditional values of our society.

The dilemma that is created by contemporary pluralism and the current climate of virtually limitless tolerance that it engenders, was addressed frankly and skilfully by the prominent Toronto surgeon, Dr. Harley S. Smythe, in a speech he gave at the Ontario prayer breakfast this past May. At that time he pointed out that:

"The mainspring of pluralism as we know it today is political liberalism, which says that the state must not interfere with the actions of its citizens except where those actions infringe upon the external freedom of others. The role of the state is thus limited carefully to the preservation of the external freedoms of all. Moral freedom must be left to the individual. It is thus paradoxically on moral grounds that the best state is the morally neutral state."

I would like to quote one paragraph from his speech that pointed out some of the paradoxes that existed and confronted him as a surgeon. He stated:

"Let me, as a surgeon, sharpen the focus on this issue by exemplifying it in some current deep concerns arising within my own profession. We are faced with numerous current paradoxes and sometimes sharp contradictions. Consider this paradox: There is an entirely new speciality known as perinatology which devotes a wealth of new medical technology to the care of the foetus, the unborn offspring of man as a patient, seeking to make his nine-month journey to birth as safe as possible. Against that, we have the political reality that over 50,000 new Canadians for whom one plan was full citizenship have not arrived amongst us this year, their journey is interrupted by the practice in our midst of mass elective foeticide.

"Or consider this paradox: We have remarkable new programs to help our mentally retarded citizens play a fuller role in our community, and our own Ministry of Community and Social Services sets a commendable example in this regard. Over against this, however, we have strong advocates of a policy which would seek to prevent, by any technical means available and by foeticide, the arrival of any new children who would be retarded. In the same connection, there are medical papers on record advocating infanticide for the multiply handicapped. As a final example, we have seen the emergence of new palliative-care units devoted to skilled, high-quality medical care for the terminally ill; yet, over against this, we have seen in our own Legislature the tabling of bills which form the early basis for euthanasia legislation.

"These three examples—and they represent only a few of such paradoxes—all speak from the outward surface of a sphere of much deeper conflict, a conflict of basic belief about man. They also make it clear that the persistence of the most nearly absolute value in human history, the value placed upon a single human life, is far from guaranteed in our society."

For those who see merit in wanting to tear down our present value system and replace it with a new code of ethics, there are those within that movement who see the need first and foremost to remove the core from our traditional social standards and values, which core is unquestionably the religious component. Hence, it is not surprising that in recent times there have been efforts made by some groups to remove from any government institution, program or function any passing reference, tacit knowledge or fitting recognition of society's reliance on that belief or in that religious component.

A case in point, which I alluded to a few moments ago, as the Lord's Prayer issue within the jurisdiction of the Toronto Board of Education, where it was argued that the use of the Lord's Prayer should no longer be tolerated because it would offend certain people in this pluralistic society, and that it is better to have no recognition than one which purportedly would offend in this way. I must refer to the Premier's comments on this posturing by referring to the letter he wrote to the chairman of the Toronto Board of Education in rebutting the board's supposed justification for taking the stance it has.

The Premier stated: "I believe the people of Ontario and the people of Canada do share some common strands of culture and identity which are not an unfair imposition on the cultural heritage or freedom of many who have come to our country as a matter of choice and who have justifiable pride in their own culture heritage. I also believe that the Lord's Prayer establishes a common respect for a society where morality, humility and faith in God are important pillars of stability and social norm.

"I offer the view that it is not a prayer which imposes an exclusive religious doctrine upon anyone and, while it may not have specific meaning for some, its general application for so many surely is sufficient to evoke respect from all. From time to time Canadians express legitimate concerns about the shape and fabric of our society and the values which determine that fabric. I believe the Lord's Prayer is important to that set of moral values and that it could in fact be continued in the school system without at all threatening a society which makes tolerance, freedom and cultural diversity basic tenets.

"I do not believe I am being old-fashioned when I state to you my belief in the need for a spiritual basis to our society. I personally remain opposed to any move that would erode that basis, for in so doing I believe we jeopardize not only an important aspect of the society we know today but that of future generations as well."

Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest that all members of the Legislature recently received correspondence from Reverend Leonard Self of the Westminster Presbyterian Church in Toronto who has, along with many other people, shown a great deal of interest in this particular situation. He wrote to all members of the Legislature on October 18, sending us the views he had communicated to the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) on the breakdown of values in the public school system and citing the Lord's Prayer issue as but a symptom of the broader issue.

He made an interesting comparative study of humanism and Christianity. I believe he did make a strong case about the materialistic influence today of humanistic philosophy on our traditional social values and morality.

There is no question that Reverend Self raised an issue which we, in the secular community at large and in the field of politics in particular, seem to have chosen to ignore in large measure. The inevitable involvement of religious considerations in any discussion of our moral values gives the politician an excuse for handing the issue off to those within the ecclesiastical community. Some prefer to leave this issue clearly within the realm of the theologians—for discussion behind the closed doors of our churches and synagogues.

In fact, it is not inappropriate for theologians and politicians alike, within their own fields of endeavour, to address themselves to the same issue that raises concerns deserving of consideration in both jurisdictions.

Recognition by the government of this shared responsibility was made evident this past October, when the government of Ontario saw fit to honour His Eminence Gerald Emmett Cardinal Carter. It's unusual—or it certainly had been up until recent times—for any government representing the state to recognize any important occurrence in the religious community. I think there is a great deal of significance attached to that function, because the government had no hesitation to acknowledge that there had been an important event within the religious community and that it did, unhesitatingly, deserve recognition.

What troubled me about the event was the fact that some people treated the whole affair as petulant schoolboys—criticizing the event for even occurring, and being critical of the pomp and ceremony that surrounded the event, without really looking at the substance of what transpired that evening in the form of the very significant and important address made to all those assembled by His Eminence Cardinal Carter.

I would like to highlight the significance of that evening, and to speak to two specific points that he articulated so well and which cannot really be improved upon. They come to grips with some of the issues that have concerned me and which I have tried, in my humble way, to address in my remarks this evening.

[10:15]

First, Cardinal Carter stated as follows:

"A great deal of ink has flowed, and a great deal of breath has been expended to laud the virtues of the American formula of the separation of church and state. I would like to believe that we in Canada, in general, and in Ontario in particular, have achieved something more mature than separation. We have developed mutual respect for our fields of confidence and jurisdiction, and therefore can pool our common interests and our common resources without feeling threatened one by the other.

"No compartmentalization is possible in human affairs in any absolute degree. Church and state are both dealing with the same prime matter, namely, persons. It is impossible to postulate a kind of order in which interests would not meet, at times appear to conflict and at others to show a reality of co-operation and common concern."

After setting that tone, which I think was extremely important, given the occasion and the circumstances of politicians coming together with religious leaders, His Eminence Cardinal Carter went on to deal about the conjunction of interests that exist. He pointed out that "the challenge is not only one of accepting and respecting our various ethnic groupings, but also of channelling in a common purpose our interest in those values which have created our civilization and which, whether we understand it or not, underpin and support it."

It was at that point, Mr. Speaker, that Cardinal Carter came to the very heart of his address that evening when he posed the question: "Are we witnessing the collapse of our civilization?"

In response to that question, he stated:

"In order to answer the question I had to develop the present status of our civilization, and I must confess that I could not do so in entirely optimistic tones. Our concentration on the things of the moment, on the profit motive, on material possessions, on a headlong pursuit of pleasure of all sorts to the detriment of any concept of man's most notable aspirations and of his eternal life, are the classic signs of the decay and collapse of all of the great civilizations which have preceded us.

"In the view of almost everyone in this room, the moral order is not some artificial set of norms concocted by one set of men to control another. They represent the very freedom of the human individual and the human community to achieve the purposes for which it was created. We may despise it and pretend to push it aside, but with this action we are making for ourselves a jungle in which we will all be lost and destroyed."

That was a very powerful statement, in my judgement, the sight of which unfortunately was lost by some of the assembled guests who saw cause to be critical of the more superficial aspects of the event when they were critical of the pomp and ceremony, rather than the true substance of the evening as reflected in the cardinal's very astute and relevant comments.

He was making clear—and I hope I have made clear, in some small way, my view—that there is a responsibility on government to show some leadership in preserving our basic standards, our basic values, whether or not they be couched in and strongly supported by religious beliefs and the Judaeo-Christian traditions in particular in this part of the world. It is something we have to recognize, rather than to sweep under the carpet and leave to someone else to care about and speak out about.

The cardinal clearly put it that we have distinct areas of responsibility; yet inevitably they overlap and they're all intertwined in creating that basic tradition and set of values that have given this province, this nation, this continent, the strength that it has in its people and in its total resources.

I feel strongly that we, as elected people, must show more leadership than perhaps we have in the past. I'm pleased that this government has demonstrated some of this leadership in a very tangible way. I've referred to the Premier's comments. Our ministry involved with social services has, along with the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) in her area of responsibility, spoken out strongly on the importance of the family unit as a very integral part of that strength of our society and an inseparable component of our value system.

I spoke on the family concept and unity, and its importance, on another occasion in this Legislature; so I won't go into that at length this evening. I simply want to conclude my remarks this evening by stating that while my remarks this evening may go beyond strictly budgetary matters, our fiscal policies, our legislative programs and our public policies are of little value if we do not concurrently make an effort within these disciplines to contribute in a meaningful and positive way to the stabilization of the legitimate rights of the individual, in balance with the strengthening of the moral fabric of our society.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the patience you have had in hearing me out over the past few months, with the somewhat lengthy interruptions in the presentation of my remarks with regard to the budget. I hope that I have maintained the continuity notwithstanding those interruptions and that I have been able to make some worthwhile contribution to the budget debate.

In concluding my budgetary remarks, I would point out as a footnote that another significant event has occurred this evening in that the government of the land apparently has been defeated in a vote of no confidence in Ottawa. I'm sure that my important remarks of this evening may be lost sight of because of the ensuing consequences of that particular event in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, again I thank you for the opportunity and conclude my remarks.

On motion by Mr. Worton, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 10:25 p.m.

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' RIGHTS

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. In Wednesday morning's edition of the Toronto Globe and Mail a news story appears on page five which bears the headline "Elgie To Withdraw Disabled Bill." The article which follows relates to the statement I made on Tuesday in the House, with respect to Bill 188, An Act to provide for the Rights of Handicapped Persons.

My point of privilege is that the headline, together with the first paragraph of the article referring to the withdrawal of the bill, are incorrect, misleading and not in accordance with the statement I made on Tuesday. At that time I stated that, in view of the stand taken by those in opposition to the bill, I can see no purpose in proceeding with second reading. At no time did I indicate that it was my intention to withdraw the bill.

I remain prepared to honour that commitment given in my statement that the bill could be treated as interim legislation, to be incorporated in the provisions of the Ontario Human Rights Code, once the broader revisions to the code are introduced.

If it is felt there should be opportunity for public submissions, I would be quite prepared to have the bill referred to a standing committee for that purpose. However, I remain ready to proceed and the decision whether or not to continue to oppose the principle of separate legislation lies clearly with the opposition parties.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

TILE DRAINAGE PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Henderson: For more than 100 years, this province has encouraged farmers to increase productivity by improving the drainage of their land. When good drainage is added to good management practices, farmers can as much as double their production. Not only that, but they can often grow new and different crops on their land.

To date, I estimate that drainage has been improved on about 3.2 million acres of land in Ontario. Another three million acres still require improved drainage. At the current rate of improvement, the remaining land will be tiled within the next three decades.

In the last 10 years farmers spent about $245 million on maintaining or improving the drainage on 1.3 million acres of Ontario farmland. About $111 million of this was borrowed from the province under the tile drainage program. At present, under the current program, drainage is being maintained or improved on about 200,000 acres every year. About one third of the money comes from provincial loans.

It has become necessary to change the program's allocation system so we can provide assistance in a more uniform manner to a larger number of people. For 1980-81, I am recommending the following guidelines for use by municipal councils:

Initial drainage allocations will be announced following the Treasurer's budget in the spring. They will be based on the applications received over the previous three years.

A municipality may apply for a reallocation of funds for tile drainage debentures, based on the applications received by the municipality prior to August 31 of each year.

As in previous years, applications are to be based on not more than 75 per cent of the estimated cost of the project, up to a maximum for 1980-81 of $200 per acre tiled.

The maximum amount any one farmer may receive in loans in one year is $10,000 and the maximum cumulative loan for a farmer is not to exceed $40,000.

These criteria have been designed to ensure that as many farmers as possible will be able to take advantage of the program. I strongly suggest that municipalities bear them in mind when considering and approving future loan applications.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH PROJECTS

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have another statement regarding research projects.

A few months ago, my ministry was allocated $5 million from provincial lottery funds to use for research. The fund was established to support special research in the broad areas of food supply, food safety, nutrition and health.

I am pleased to say that when we asked for applications, we received 85 research proposals. These have been evaluated and 12 have been chosen. They will be supported by grants from the fund over the next one to three years.

One of the major areas of concern to both producer and consumer is chemical pest control. One of the projects chosen is a biological control experiment. Sterile onion maggots will be mass reared and released to compete with wild flies and prevent their reproduction. This will be an extension and evaluation at the commercial level of laboratory experiments which the ministry has supported in previous years. If this project is successful, attempts will be made to apply the technique to other pests. The University of Guelph will undertake this project in the Keswick marsh.

In the food safety area, two projects are of a particular note. One of these will be aimed at developing a health management system for dairy and swine herds that will reduce the reliance on drugs. Lowered costs of production and improved meat quality are also aims of this project.

The second will be directed at the poultry industry and the elimination of salmonella contamination. This project will review the entire production and processing system. A rapid, economical mass screening test will also be explored.

In the area of food supply, a group of researchers will examine ways to improve the handling, storage and treatment of peaches for the fresh market. We hope this project will extend the storage period, making fresh peaches available for a longer period. Another group will select grapes for experimental planting in southern Ontario, outside the traditional grape-producing area. In this way, we hope to expand the area in which wine grapes can be grown to supply Ontario's expanding wine industry.

In two other projects associated with the poultry industry, researchers will examine immune responses in chickens and will attempt to develop a vaccine to protect turkeys from a fatal disease. Other fruit and vegetable projects include an attempt to predict serious outbreaks of apple scab, a study of ethylene gas in the breakdown of quality in leafy vegetables and an effort to develop new mushroom species for commercial production.

An additional livestock project will develop an insemination program for sheep that may be applied on commercial farms.

These projects will be undertaken by a number of different organizations, including the Ontario Tender Fruit Producers' Marketing Board, the University of Guelph, Brights Wines Limited, United Breeders, the University of Toronto and J. M. Schneider Incorporated.

For the first year, we have set aside $800,000 for projects to be funded this year. A total of $1.8 million has been committed for two- and three-year projects. I am providing members with a list giving the title of each project, together with the name of the recipient, budget figures and a brief outline.

All of these projects, Mr. Speaker, have the object of improving the supply and quality of Ontario-grown agricultural products. I need hardly say that we in Ontario already enjoy very high standards in food products, but we're always looking for ways to improve; that's how we stay on top.

The projects are listed on the attached two pages with the statement and the awards.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Statement number three.

Mr. Conway: It is about those cheapskates in Ohio.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Might be, give it time.

CHICKEN QUOTAS

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to review a few facts regarding Ontario's position in the national chicken marketing plan.

The Quebec and Ontario chicken boards, under the direction of the Canadian Broiler Council, agreed voluntarily on production targets in the early 1970s. These targets were for equivalent broiler chicken production in Ontario and Quebec. Subsequently, this 50-50 relationship was reflected in the base allocation for Ontario and Quebec in the national plan agreement. That agreement was signed by both the Ontario chicken board and the Ontario government.

However, these base allocations in the national agreement refer only to 1974 conditions when the national production was 650 million pounds of chicken. The national quota we are looking at today is for 880 million pounds of chicken. The question is: how is that additional 230 million pounds of chicken above the base to be allocated to the provinces? This question is answered in the criteria set out in the national agreement for determining provincial allocation above the base and nowhere do these criteria refer to base allocations.

The voluntary agreement between the Quebec and Ontario chicken boards in the early 1970s and the base allocations in the national plan do not determine provincial allocations above the base allocations in the national plan.

Clearly, since the individual provinces signed the national agreement, each province is a market area, as referred to in the national plan. In order to ensure there could be no possible misunderstanding on this point, I instructed my assistant deputy minister, Bill Doyle, to attend the meeting of the national chicken agency before they establish the allocations for 1980, to reiterate our position on that very point and to remind them that the base allocation figures in the agreement in no way constituted permanent shares of the national quota.

I was the first to launch the appeal to the National Farm Products Marketing Council against Ontario's allocation of chicken quota recently established by the national chicken marketing agency for the year 1980. I authorized my staff to proceed with the appeal on Friday, November 30—two weeks ago today. This decision to launch the appeal was discussed with the Ontario chicken board as soon as we became aware of the full facts.

The chicken board agreed with us that the allocation should be appealed. Both the government of Ontario and the Ontario chicken board went to Ottawa on December 13—yesterday—to present this appeal. Bill Doyle, my assistant deputy minister of marketing, represented me at that meeting, together with other members of my staff.

The position of my ministry and the government has always been clear on these points. Certainly the Ontario chicken board and the chicken industry in Ontario has always understood our position and has been in agreement with it.

Mr. Riddell: You should have gone down and shown your weight, not just send some civil servants. You should have gone down, Lorne, that's your responsibility.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I appreciate the member's comments, Mr. Speaker. They are well accepted.

I have now been informed that in hearing this appeal yesterday the National Farm Products Marketing Council committed several serious errors in procedure to which our representatives took strong exception. The council, after having decided to allow our legal counsel, John McMurchy, the right to be present while the national chicken agency defended its position in order to be able to respond to the agency's position, later reversed itself and excluded all of our representatives from the room during the agency presentation. This is contrary to any concept of natural justice.

[10:15]

Of even greater concern was the behaviour of one council member, Mr. Adrian Levesque of New Brunswick, who early in the proceedings clearly stated he had made up his mind and left no doubt in the minds of our representatives that he was opposed to Ontario's position. This is unacceptable behaviour on the part of a member of a body given the responsibility of settling disputes.

CHILDREN'S LAW REFORM

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Today I will be introducing for first reading only the Children's Law Reform Amendment Act, 1979. This bill is a further step in our program of family law reform and expands the Children's Law Reform Act, 1977, which abolished the status of illegitimacy.

The bill represents a comprehensive reform and consolidation of child custody law and procedures in order to strengthen and elaborate the principle that the best interests of the child should be the focus of legal proceedings in a family dispute about custody of the child. Included in these reforms are extensive provisions for the enforcement of custody orders and deterrence of child abduction. The bill also cures a small but important problem with respect to the rights of parents to administer their children's property. It re-enacts in modern language the provisions of the Infants Act concerning disposition of children's property and permits a limited revival of the power to provide for custody by will.

At present, the Ontario law relating to custody disputes is very fragmented. There are two statutes, the 50-year-old Infants Act and a single section of the Family Law Reform Act, 1978, and two sets of court procedures, one for the Supreme and county courts and one for the family courts.

In addition, the courts have made a number of innovations in recent years to serve the best interests of the child. Accordingly, one of the primary purposes of this bill is to provide through legislation uniform powers and procedures, so far as possible, in all courts hearing custody matters.

I would like to highlight just a few of the many provisions of the bill.

While the concept of the best interests of the child is universally accepted, it is sometimes difficult to assess what factors are most relevant in determining the best interests of the child in individual cases. To ensure no significant factors are overlooked, the bill provides that in determining the best interests of the child the court is to have regard to a list of seven factors, including the love, affection and emotional ties between the child and the members of the family; the views and preferences of the child; the capacity of the parties to meet the needs of the child; the stability of his current home environment and the proposed home environment; and his natural relationship to the parties. The ability of the court to make the best decision on behalf of the child is directly related to the amount of relevant information available to the court.

While the evidence presented by the parties will continue to be the main source of information, the bill also specifically recognizes the right of a child to make his views and preferences known, permits the court to obtain assessment reports, streamlines the system under which reports of the official guardian are provided and allows the court to interview the child.

To reduce the amount of time a child must exist in a state of conflict and uncertainty pending final determination of the dispute, the bill requires that as a general rule the hearing should be completed within six months.

As members know, in custody cases there is no matter of greater concern to the people of Ontario than the problem of enforcing custody and access rights and preventing one parent from abducting the child from the other parent. A major portion of this bill is therefore devoted to these problems.

While Ontario is without power to enact legislation that will govern Ontario residents while they are in other provinces or countries, we have taken a number of steps to strengthen the enforcement of custody orders in Ontario and to make it more difficult to remove a child from Ontario unlawfully.

In this regard, under the bill a court would be permitted: (a) to order third party supervision of custody and access rights; (b) to appoint a person to mediate custody and access provisions; (c) to order one party not to harass the child or another party; (d) to punish contempt of court orders; (e) to direct a peace officer to apprehend a child who is being unlawfully withheld from the person entitled to custody or access; (f) to order public agencies to disclose the address of a person in breach of an order; (g) to order a person to surrender his or her passport while exercising custody or access rights; and (h) to order that a person provides security when he or she proposes to remove the child temporarily from Ontario.

While these provisions will make it more difficult to remove the child from Ontario, a second set of provisions will make it more difficult for parents abducting children in other jurisdictions to bring the children to Ontario to seek a new custody order here. This second set of provisions is based on a refinement and expansion of the uniform extraprovincial custody orders enforcement act, now in force in eight provinces.

Under these provisions, Ontario courts will be required to enforce custody orders made in other jurisdictions, except where the child is in danger of serious harm. This will deter kidnappers from breaching custody orders in other provinces and bringing the children here in hope of gaining a favourable order from an Ontario court. Furthermore, if there is no custody order in another jurisdiction, Ontario courts will be directed not to make a new custody order unless the child is habitually resident in Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There seems to be a number of private conversations that are rather noisy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Rules are prescribed for the determination of habitual residence. Among other things this will deter parents from abducting the child before or during court proceedings in another jurisdiction.

With respect to the guardianship of children's property, the bill clears up an uncertainty in the law. It provides that where a child becomes entitled to an amount of money less than $2,000 and no other provision has been made for receiving and administering the money—lottery winnings are an obvious example—the parents may act as trustees of the money.

The final point I wish to mention concerns the problem that arises when both parents, or the sole parent with custody, die before the children have reached the age of majority. Everyone will recall the sad case of the children who were orphaned a few months ago when their parents were killed in a traffic accident. This bill will recognize the right of parents to make provision in their wills for the custody of their children in the event of such tragic circumstances.

This bill brings up to date and consolidates existing law and practice. It is also the most modern and comprehensive provincial custody statute in Canada. It is fitting then that it be introduced now in the International Year of the Child.

As with other family law reform legislation, we realize that where law touches fundamental rights and responsibilities within the family there ought to be full opportunity for study and discussion. By introducing the bill at this time, we will be able to benefit from informed public comment and make any amendments or elaboration necessary before reintroducing the bill next session.

ORAL QUESTIONS

FEDERAL ELECTION

Mr. S. Smith: Just before asking my question, I want to tell the Premier, with regard to our small wager, that I think it's only fair that I give him some opportunity to recoup, perhaps on the next Tiger Cat-Argonaut game, provided he promises me he'll bet on the Argonauts. If I have that promise we'll let it ride until the football season, but only the regular season game.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Oral questions. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, you've been in caucus. You know what these things are like.

I would ask the Premier a question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the Premier's intention to do as he did last time and, in the coming election while he is Premier of Ontario, support Mr. Clark in the federal election campaign?

Secondly, in his capacity as leader of the Ontario Conservative Party, is it his intention again to place the facilities of the Ontario Conservative Party at the disposal of the federal party during this election?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to answer that question takes a few moments. One has to trace the chronology and my own political outlook on life. I know it's different from that of the Leader of the Opposition.

Replying to the second part of the question, the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario has never endeavoured to dissociate itself from the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. It is fair to state that since I have been in political life, I have always felt if one is a Progressive Conservative, one has a certain loyalty to one's national leader. One doesn't quietly say to one's friends, "I would like to get rid of the national leader"; one doesn't go to a public meeting at OISE and say, "It would be a great service . . ."

I make no bones about it. I supported John Diefenbaker and I make no apologies for it, that happens to be our system. I don't go up to OISE and say Pierre Elliott Trudeau would do a great service to Canada if he were to resign. I even suspect the Leader of the Opposition himself voted for Joe Clark. That is the information I get. I suspect he did.

I say this very kindly to the Leader of the Opposition. His noninvolvement, his calculated noninvolvement, in the last federal election by its nature was an implicit support of the Prime Minister of Canada. No question that is the way it happened.

I made it quite clear the Leader of the Opposition was supporting Joe Clark in his own way. Don't let him try to kid anybody about that. He was trying to dissociate himself from Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

If the federal Liberal caucus determines within the next hour or so that Pierre Elliott Trudeau is going to lead the honourable member's party nationally into this election, I am interested in knowing is the Leader of the Opposition going to by implication once again support Joe Clark? That would be a very fair question to ask.

Mr. S. Smith: What nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. The member opposite has lost more credibility in his own party by his manoeuvrings in the past eight to 10 months than he would like to believe. He really has, I happen to know.

The other thing I was asked by the press, and very properly so, concerned Mr. Clark and I. The government of Canada and the government of this province have disagreed on energy policy. No question about it. I campaigned for Mr. Stanfield when the main plank in his platform was wage and price control. I wasn't personally committed to that policy. He was our national leader. I campaigned for him and in spite of some of the reports in the press, I actually spent more time campaigning for Robert Stanfield than I did for Joe Clark. No one asked me when Bob Stanfield lost what my point of view was—did I feel that my participation had some impact?

What is intriguing is some very few months after the same party opposing Mr. Stanfield said, "No way will we have wage and price control," they introduced it.

People's memories aren't as short as the Leader of the Opposition would like to think. What had happened last evening, and I make this abundantly clear, was total irresponsibility on the part of the Liberal Party of Canada and the New Democrats.

My view on energy policy has not changed. We disagree, but I am a Conservative and I remain a Conservative and my support will be for the national leader of our Progressive Conservative Party, yes.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier has finally, at the end of that somewhat rambling speech, admitted he will once again put his Conservatism and his affiliation with the party ahead of what I consider to be his responsibility as Premier of the people of Ontario. He has, at the very least, done me the favour of answering the question, an unusual event in itself in this House. I will, therefore, answer his question and let him know that, given the fact his federal leader—

[10.30]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is question period.

Mr. S. Smith: Yes. Is the Premier aware that, given the fact the Premier's federal leader has already made known his policies to Ontario which would result in billions of dollars being shifted from this economy into that of Alberta and into the coffers of the oil companies; given that we know we will have interest rates which in themselves and along with energy prices will lead to a two per cent increase in inflation; and given that tens of thousands of Ontario jobs will be lost as a consequence of his federal leader's party policies, I can assure him I will be there to support the federal leader of the Liberal Party and to defeat Joe Clark.

I want the Premier to answer the question, how can he justify supporting those policies when he has stood and postured in front of the television cameras saying it will be harmful to Ontario's economy? As soon as the bell rings, the old war horse is out there again because the political party is more important than the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The answer to that is quite obvious. Firstly, there are very few things I would say I acknowledge. The Leader of the Opposition has far more talent than I, but when it comes to posturing he gets the medal. No one deserves it more. I think yesterday was the great example.

May I just trace a little history for the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker. He is concerned about the shift of resources. I would ask him to please go back to 1973-74 when the Liberal Party in Canada started us down this road; calculate the billions of dollars that have flowed from 1974 until 1979; take a look at the person who heads the leadership, whatever it is—heritage fund, the former Minister of Energy who may even yet be leader of Canada. Remember his commitment to world price.

The truth of the matter is, the Liberal Party of Canada has endorsed our policy on energy since it became the official opposition. Its policy on energy was world price, like that of the party opposite. It did nothing about distribution and when those federal members talk about energy in the next two months their position will be less than credible because people will not forget they started us down this road. The provincial Liberals will have trouble supporting it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: Given all the problems my leader has already talked about, does the Premier recall those prophetic words of his in Ottawa about nation building being more important than province building? Really, if there is one thing for which Clark should be done away with, it is the balkanization of the country.

How can the Premier in reality support Mr. Clark and the federal Conservative Party which has done more to destroy Canada than anybody ever thought possible in six months?

Does he recall his words about building the nation rather than the provinces?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, not only do I recall them, but the members opposite won't believe them; they happen to be my own words.

I am concerned, but I have to tell the member, if he looks into history once again, the people of this country defeated his former friend just because they were permitting that position to take place. Don't let him tell me that the Liberal Party of Canada hadn't created some of these problems. Don't let him tell me the Liberal Party of Canada—

Mr. T. P. Reid: They didn't sell out to Alberta and Newfoundland.
